It's A Free Country...

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13 (AP)—An unidentified woman walked onto the floor of the House today and asked Speaker Rayburn for permission to make a speech.

Turned down by the flabbergasted speaker, she was escorted from the chamber and departed without anyone apparently learning her name.

The woman, clad in a red coat and black beret, entered the House through the members cloakroom and walked briskly down a side aisle to the speaker's rostrum.

None of the attendants tried to intercept her, although she violated a number of House rules including a prohibition against wearing a hat in the chamber.

House clerk Ralph Roberts said she came to the rostrum and asked Rayburn to let her make a speech, and that the speaker refused in forceful language.

Word of the invasion brought uniformed and plainclothes police officers to the scene quickly. But the woman had already departed when they arrived.

"The sergeant at arms didn't get her name," Lt. Carl Champs of the Metropolitan Police said.

Detectives began a search to find and question the woman.

WUNC-TV To Receive $10,000 Gift Today

Benjamin Abrams, president of Emerson Radio and Phonograph Corp., will arrive in Raleigh today to present a $10,000 check to UNC's educational television station WUNC-TV on a special program to be telecast over the station today.

WUNC-TV is the tenth TV station to qualify for an award under the terms of the Emerson $100,000 Educational Television Grant, which provides that the first 10 non-commercial education television stations in the country will receive $10,000 each..

The first nine stations to receive the Emerson awards were KUHT, Houston, Texas; KTHE Los Angeles, Calif.; WQED, Pittsburgh, Penna.; KQED, San Francisco, Calif.; WHA-TV, Madison, Wis.; WCET, Cincinnati, Ohio; KETC, St. Louis, Mo.; KCTS, Seattle, Wash.; and WEDM, Birmingham, Ala.

Station's Reception Good

After WUNC-TV began its telecasts last Saturday night, cards came from such far distant points as Longview, Tex., Independence, Kan., and Joplin, Mo.

The station has received comments from such towns as Bath, Edenton, Wilmington, Jacksonville, Camp Lejeune and Morehead City in the east and southeastern part of the state.

In the south, cards have come from Gibson, Fayetteville, and Bennettsville and Conway, S. C. Going on up the western part of the state, notes have come from Charlotte, Statesville, Gastonia and on from Flat Rock in Henderson County.

The reception to the north has been just as strong.. A letter from Roanoke, Va., was received earlier in the week as well as notes from Stuart, Danville, and Martinsville, Va.

Director of television for the University, Robert F. Schenkkan, expressed great appreciation for the response and asked that viewers continue to write the station here.

Bond Issue For UNC Buildings?

The University's hopes for sorely needed new buildings dropped to the bottom of the well last week when the advisory Budget Commission recommended no permanent improvements. But all, apparently, is not lost.

A member of the Budget Commission, Rep. William B. Rodman, Jr., has told the House that many of the requests which were rejected for economy reasons had much merit. And he suggested a bond issue might be the answer.

The idea has run into no thick opposition so far. If the proposal could now find an energetic pusher in the General Assembly, the people of the state may have a chance to vote on Carolina's Pharmacy School building and men's dormitory.

In a tight year, these buildings won't likely be forthcoming from the Assembly. But they might be forthcoming from the people, if the Assembly will call a bond election. The Daily Tar Heel urges them to do just that.

Hi-Diddle-Diddle, Ike & The Fiddle

After the President's State of the Union message, putting flesh on the structural bones of "progressive moderation," far-seeking opinion in Washington has begun to circulate a question:

Must the Democrats go left for issues to stoke their 1956 campaign?

The Eisenhower wing of the Republican Party has a paradoxical program. Its planners have accepted the program of the New and Fair Deals while rejecting their basic philosophy. How so? The philosophy of the New and Fair Deals was distinctly levitational, while the philosophy of Eisenhower Republicanism is distinctly gravitational. (It does not say of the smaller interests, "Let them eat cake." It says, "Let them not eat cake; but let them watch the skies, for thence cometh their help.")

What's in the sky? The shadow of the biggest bull in Wall Street history, loose and cavorting in the canyons. If the bull can gravitate enough manna from the skies, farmers and laborers will eat their cake and remain happy. If the big bull should slip and fall, we guess that it would not do the Democrats any harm at all to turn to the "left—accepting "left" as a generalized source for benefit to the cake-eaters.

Will the Democrats go left? It depends on how much manna comes down from that bull in the sky; all eyes are on him.

Jose Vs. Anastasio In Cinemascope

With Indo-China outwardly calm, M. Mendes-France off the front page and Congress settling down to business, it appeared that headline writers were in for a spell of relaxation. They forgot about the Latins; first thing anybody knew, there it was—a B movie, right on page one.

Costa Rican President Jose Figueres says Nicaragua has invaded his country. Nicaraguan President Anastasio Somoza takes offense and challenges Figueres to a pistol duel at the border.

An old fighter plane strafes Zacero and San Jose. But a lumbering DC3 with machine guns sticking out of its doors—virtually the entire Costa Rican Air Force—chases the fighter off. The invading army of 60 men is held in check at Villa Quesada. The General Staff out of shape from long hours of gin rummy playing and the smoking of Cuban cigars, rallies to proclaim the situation well in hand.

If this sort of thing goes on much longer, Hollywood won't be able to stay away. Another invasion will take place—a colorful army of directors and technicians with loaded sound cameras will descend on Zacero and Cartago and Canas, dolly in on Alapuela from the air, dissolve to a panorama shot of a border outpost, pan left to a two-shot of Figueres and Somoza back to back at twenty paces, cut to a closeup of the scene while kettle drums begin a rapid roll, add cymbals, which clash louder and louder up to a peak . . .

Well, our money's on Somoza, an expert marksman. But you can see it in Cinemascope next month at the Carolina.

Want Security? Sign On The Dotted Line

——— Louis Kraar

Under the terms of a House rider on the Department of Defense appropriations bill last June, all first and second-year ROTC students are required to sign loyalty oaths. If students refused, they would not be enrolled in ROTC courses.

Previously, only students enrolled in the advanced ROTC program were required to sign an oath.

Naturally, no one argues with the right of our government to check the security of men in its employ. But why must a man sign a paper that swears he is not disloyal?

I have always thought that this country assumes loyalty (like innocence) until a person acts in a disloyal manner.

This country is built of bigger things than papers signed by citizens avowing their loyalty. I don't recall any patriots dashing around with loyalty oaths during the turmoil of the American Revolution, although they were certainly many citizens not "loyal" to the cause of breaking away from England.

Recently other colleges, like Maryland, have had students who refused to sign the ROTC loyalty oath because they considered it an infringement of personal rights.

Somehow I am a little disappointed that some ROTC students didn't read down the list of organizations listed as subversive, study the loyalty oath, and laugh in the insecure faces of those who required the oath.

Perhaps then at least one security-conscious official might realize that a nation's security is not built on having citizens swear that they have not been disloyal.

WHILE POKING fun at the Carolina Quarterly's awkward sentence about Oxford and Cambridge representatives in Parliament yesterday, I made an error myself.

Thanks to English history Prof. James Godfrey, this reporter can now unravel the question of English university students sitting in Parliament.

According to the Quarterly, Oxford and Cambridge reached such importance that two representatives from each were granted a place in Pariament, "a privilege these four men still enjoy today."

And this reporter pointed out that since the seats were provided for over a century ago (the beginning of the 17th century, to be exact,) the four men would have to be mightly old still to enjoy the privilege.

What I should have said is that the English universities lost their representatives in Parliament almost seven years ago when the Labor Government took away the seats.

WORD COMES from Georgetown University that conformity —already a disease even on this campus—has even touched the wearing of khaki pants.

The Georgetown student council has set up a code for the wearing of khakis. If worn, they must be clean, pressed, and belted. They cannot, according to the rule, be worn to evening functions on campus. Neither can they be worn on Sundays, except when the wearer is going to or from campus or is engaged in sport or study.

Aside from the general ridiculousness of this rule, I can see now that it won't have any effect on Sunday attire. For what else does a college student do on his only day off other than go to or from campus, study, and engage in sport?

YOU Said It:

What About Rise's Singing?

Editor:

It was quite disconcerting to find that The Daily Tar Heel lacked discrimination by printing Jim Wallace's "so-called" review of Rise Stevens. If I am not mistaken, a concert review is primarily concerned with criticisms pertaining to selections, talent, etc. Evidently Mr. Wallace never acquainted himself with such, and therefore took it upon himself to start a new fad in the field of reviews.

It is interesting to note that Mr. Wallace was so concerned with Rise Stevens' appearance compared that of a burlesque queen that he completely neglected to make constructive criticisms regarding Miss Stevens as a talented singer. Perhaps I am wrong in assuming that Miss Stevens performed in Memorial Hall as an artist not as a Hollywood glamour girl!

It is deplorable that Mr. Wallace has never acquired enough judgment to cover up his extreme poor taste and obvious lack of interest in the finer arts.

Susan Fuchs

(Mr. Wallace did not intend the piece which we requested him to write on Rise Stevens' appearance as a review and the editor takes responsibility for labeling it. However, since a review is demanded, Mr. Wallace presents it, in the following words.—Editor

Rise Steavens, beautiful Metropilitan Opera mezzo-soprano, played to a full house on Tuesday evening, bringing back memories, to the concert-goers, of her former visit to Chapel Hill and her successes on the opera stages of Europe and America.

It was the same Miss Stevens who recently played La Scala, who has appeared in Prague and in Vienna at the Mozarteum, and who has had many successful seasons at the Met. At 41, she is still beautiful, she dresses well, her figure is graceful, and her voice production is still competent. But, with two or three exceptions, Miss Stevens did not demonstrate her admitted mastery of the singing art in her appearance here.

First of all, one could have expected more in the way of program. For an accomplished artist of the caliber of Miss Stevens, the program was a walk-through. Hardly a note in it required her full attention. Miss Stevens' attitude seemed clear from the beginning: she was singing a rather simple program in a rather condescending manner to an audience rather far removed from New York. But Miss Stevens, who commands a fee of $2500, would not sing such a program in New York, say, in Carnegie Hall.

On the program, on finds Where'er You Walk from "Semele," (Handel); Voi Che Sapete from "Le Nozze di Figaro," (Mozart); four selections from Grieg, four German selections, from Erich Wolff, Hugo, Wolf, Brahms and Richard Strauss; Mon Coeur S-ouvre A Ta Voix, from "Samson and Delilah," (Saint-Saens); five extremely short songs from Cecil Cowles, Charles Nagnski, John Duke and Reginald Boardman; and three selections from "Carmen" (Bizet).

For an artist who has taken leading roles in a host of operas during the past fifteen years, the program is a barren one. With the exception of one number from Mozart, one from Saint-Saens, and three from Bizet, where are the great roles to be found? The Voi Che Sapete was rendered in as dull a fashion as could be imagined, and suggested that the artist was saving herself for the rest of the program, or for her next "prestige" appearance. The Mon Coeur S'ouvre A Ta Voix represented the first time in the program that Miss Stevens actually tried to sing, rather than gesticulate. In one of the songlets, Arcady, she showed herself to advantage again, and, at last, in the hackneyed and trite "Carmen" numbers, she was competent, effective and charming.

But one looks at the program in vain for traces of Mignon. Der Rosenkavalier, La Gioconda, Orfeo ed Euridice, Cose Fan Tutte, Hansel Und Gretel and Die Valkure, in all of which Miss Stevens has played leading roles. One finds warm-up exercises in the pleasant but monotonously repetitive Handel number. One finds a certain pleasant but innocuous type of quaintness in the Grieg exercises. One finds a few sparks of effort and a few well-delivered notes in the German selections, and one is left a bit suspended in mid-air by the shortness of the Cowles-Naginski-Duke selections.

By the end of the "program", Miss Stevens had finished her "Do-Re-Mi." The singing should have then begun. But, rather, the show was over.

It is a pity that one should sing with one's hands and ear-rings and costuming, when one still has a voice. Surely the fee was adequate to bring out the best in the artist and the best in program.

'Who's Your Friend?'

Scott & Other Senate Freshmen Benefit By New Committee 'Rules'

Doris Fleeson

Johnson has again quietly worked a revolution in the ancient system by which seniority absolutely determines who shall serve on the committees where legislation is shaped. As in 1953, every Democratic Senator got one good committee before anybody got two good ones.

This was made possible by the unselfishness — or enlightened self-interest — of such senior Democrats as George, Hayden, Russell, Byrd and Murray. It is politics practised as an art and is a major ingredient of those unanimous Democratic votes on important issues. The freshmen are grateful; the elders like the freshmen better because they have done them a kindness.

The Johnson system has other merits besides the general improvement in personal relations.

For example, Democrats are organizing the Senate by grace of Independent Wayne Morse. Morse, given the two least valued committees in 1953 by the then Republican majority, got the Foreign Relations place he has long and vainly coveted, plus the important Banking and Currency Committee.

Democrats hope Morse will run as a Democrat in 1956 and his campaign, in which Sen. Neuberger will assist, is now off to a flying start.

A second prized Foreign Relations post for which a dozen applied, was adroitly awarded on sentimental grounds to the former Veep, Senator Barkley, who also went back on Banking and Currency. Under the old rules, the now junior Senator from Kentucky, could have demanded nothng. His lore and loyalty are now at Johnson's disposal.

The difficult Judiciary Committee was shored up with the respected veteran, Senator O'Mahoney of Wyoming. A belligerent Southern liberal who is an expert on matters agriculturral, Kerr Scott of North Carolina, went on Agriculture.

And so on down the line.

Not everybody, of course, is satisfied and could not be but the slate affords little room for valid complaint. It is a distinct challenge to the Republicans who are about to uncover their own committee selections.

Reaction Piece

More Stevens; 'Solution' To DTH Worries

——— David Mundy

"The radiator went bang, The garbage can went clang, That's my love song to you." Archaic old Memorial Hall is one of the few buildings in the world which not only shelters famous artists, but provides accompaniment also.

The first part of the Rise Stevens concert passed without mishap: but after the intermission a radiator began to accompany Miss Stevens with metronome-like regularity. (Every 5½ pluse counts, by me.) I dare say she will remember this as part of her welcome.

Certainly no criticism can be leveled against Miss Stevens' abilities as an operatic performer, but whoever arranged the program is quite susceptible to question. Selections were so short as to be minute. Taken from so many varied settings and presented to one audience in the space of less than two hours, they could only produce a feeling of unreality. Only her artistry saved the performance from collapse and turned it instead into a success. Sixteen different composers in less than two hours? Carolina may have the reputation for harboring a herd of uncultured asses, yes, but some arranger still managed to underestimate their tastes.

There is a solution to the five day DTH week. The solution: Omit partisan national politics from the editorial page. I figure that by doing so, there could be an extra paper on alternate weeks.

Alsop Brothers	81 inches
Doris Fleeson	76 inches
Editorials	51 inches
David Mundy	20 inches
The Reporter	32 inches
Sat. Review	30 inches
C. H. Weekly	16 inches
Ed Yoder on Junius Scales	32 inches

The total comes to some 338 inches of political matter. I venture that it is all quite unecessary, inasmuch as relatively the same material can be found in commercial newspapers for those so interested. Why should it be included in a campus paper? It is even more objectionable when, at least quantitatively, it is slanted to favor one side.

You will notice that all but about 100 inches of the material originated off campus: either with professional columnists or publications. In the portion that did originate on campus, the ratio was 4:1 for one side. All the 200-odd off campus inches either reflect a liberal bias or come right out and plug for the left wing of the Democrat party. Admittedly, I had to make some fine distinctions between political and non-political matter in making the measurements. For example, the Reporter article was not exclusvely political, although it did a thorough job of slanting its story. Some of the DTH editorials not counted contained not-so-sly digs. The Yoder column, "Needed: A New Darrow to Stand for Judicial Integrity," is also debatable.

Since it so closely paralleled an article in the January 2 issue of the weekly edition of the "Daily Worker," I felt that it should be included in my count. (Yoder's version is longer and somewhat better written; but they both present the same case. Yoder manages to get the Scopes "Monkey Trial" into his presentation.)

My proposed solution, which is even generous enough to not include the actual cost of the Fleeson-Alsop columns, is this in short: Omit all material of a national or state political nature. In two weeks like last week, this would amount to some 650-675 column inches. Each page of the DTH has eight column widths with lengths of some 20 inches. 8x20x4 is 640. Thus: room for an extra paper every two weeks.

Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

THE HORSE was hoofing along near the library, when I saw him. I was curious about his reaction to Educational Television?

"It is singularly appropriate you should ask me this, Roger, you old codger," he rebutted with an alacrity which smacked of many rehearsals of saying it. "Some cynic said ::The primary function of a literary critic is to destroy any enjoyment of reading.' I detect a somewhat parallel technique in a few critics of our WUNC-TV programs. Howsoever, a literary critic at least waits until the volumes he brain-picks are in the bookstalls. Some of the expressions anent Educational TV were expressed ere so much as one live word and one dead pan were audible or visible on a screen."

I'd seen that, also. Howsoever, didn't The Horse posture as an advocate of tolerance? Wasn't it Poor Richard who said, To err is human?

"If he hasn't already said it," The Horse shrugged, "he perhaps will any day now. Me, I would not be surprised what Poor Richard said, up to and including 'You may fire when ready, Gridley,' and, 'Don't give up the hour-glass.' Forsooth, I would not be surprised if sometime he said nothing."

Oh? Well, that was something to look forward to. But, what did The Horse think of Educational TV's direction, its orientation from a standpoint of the desideratum? Could one ask WUNC-TV: Quo vadis?

"Leave us off the academic double-talk." The Horse chittered. (I hate him when he chitters.) "Leave us rather level with one another without any of the pedantic mouth-dressing you may have picked up in your alleged studies at this, our seat of Cultoor and Erudition, off the Southland."

"We are not in quite the same position that FDR was when he started up the NRA—National Recovery Administration," The Horse stated. "That is, we do not have quite the same number of adverse-minded critics hereabouts. Al Smith, he of the Brown Derby Hat, once said that, '. . . like Columbus, Roosevelt doesn't know where he is has been going; he won't know when he gets there; and when he gets back, he won't be able to tell anybody where he has been.' Educational TV knows where it is: at the beginning. It knows where it is going: ahead; and alertly . . . prepared to alter, add, change, revise—and keep going. And we the people know where it has been and what it has done, in hard facts and cold results."

The Horse hoped this?

"Take the sheerly Sophist view," The Horse invited me, "alone—a guaranteed result for a stated outlay of obols and drachmas. Tarheelia is still the leading state in number of farms proportionate to population. Picture to yourself the return to farmers of all crops, in pest-control, yield, high-quality . . . . with every farmer within audio-visual range practically sitting in the lap of our experts in Agriculture! Picture like improvement in home management, for the same reason! Picture the returns in terms of money saved in timely repairs of home, farm buildings, auto—of care of livestock—of Highway Safety and lessened accidents in the homes—of increased income and drought-protection gained from the Forestry Service's possibilities."

Okay, okay.

"Picture the desire of education, for knowledge, awakened in the children of the area, by a competent Educational-TV Program . . . and of the desire for higher education, for attending colleges and universities, that will make off fifty-percent-dropouts in Freshman and Sophomore classes a zooming angle of incidence that will be no coincidence—for it is desire to know that is the basis of continued and continuing education!"

Well . . . yes.

"Picture also," The Horse raced on with it, "the strength of a state in which everybody . . . for that must be the eventual foal, the entire state! . . . has access to the teachings of Arts and Sciences of The Humanities, the Applied Skills. Just as a chain is no stronger than its weaker link—"

Had Poor Richard said that, too?

"Shaddup!" The Horse snapped. "—so is a state or a people no more educated than its most ignorant citizen. Knowledge makes for Industry. Industry makes for Income. Income makes for Higher Standards of Living. Higher Standards of Living makes for Happier, Healthier People . . . and they make for a Strong Democracy. Or, for a Stronger Representative Republic, to be specific."

Could The Horse sum it up in a few words? His own words, please, and not Poor Richards?

"You're going to get it one of these days, Roger!" The Horse breathed, this time using Jackie Gleason's words. "But, for the nonce, yes."

I waited a reasonable moment and I waited an unreasonable moment. Horse. Hey, Horsie!

"Oh, pardon me, I thought I was on camera, and I was freezing up," The Horse apologized. "I think it can be summed up, of course, of course."

Well?

"An enlightened TV-screen is America's best insurance against an Iron Curtain," The Horse fought for quotability—and lost. "As Poor Richard said—"

"Wump!" said Mr. Wump, the low-visioned Frog, instead.

Over The Hill

By

FRED BABSON

The latest addition to UNC basketball games is a privately formed card section, composed of about ten members. Two stunts comprise their repertoire, which was sprung by surprise at the UNC-Virginia game last Tuesday night. The first stunt is, POOR DUKE, followed closely by, NO T.V.

The 32 points against Virginia garnered by Limber Lennie Rosenbluth, Carolina's sophomore scoring machine, raised his per game average to an even 27 points. However, Rosenbluth has to take a back seat to teammate Tony Radovich, the Hoboken hotshot, in the shooting accuracy department. Radovich is popping them in the basket at an amazing .480 clip, while Limber Lennie is batting a very respective .425.

As it stands now, Carolina has an excellent chance of getting into the NCAA play-offs, which come at the end of the regular season of play. State has been ruled ineligible to compete, a mild spanking from the collegiate moguls for over-emphasis of the sport at the Raleigh school.

When asked if he intends to play possession ball when the Tar Heels meet State next Tuesday night in the Coliseum, McGuire replied, "that depends on what Case does. If Case parks those two big men, Shavlik and Dwyer, under the basket, then we can't afford to shoot until we get a very good shot. Otherwise, if we miss, State gets the ball every time, with those two giants controlling both sides of the backboard."

McGuire let it be known that it's up to Case, as to what brand of ball Carolina will play. He also stated that it is quite alright with him if Case wants to force UNC into playing a slow-down game, because every second that ticks off on the clock is in favor of the underdog.

An interesting feature to observe when Carolina plays State is that the Wolfpack plays their tight little box zone under the basket with only four men. The fifth man will always stay with Rosenbluth. No matter where Rosenbluth is, on the court, there will always be a man with him. In the State-UNC contest in the Classic, Phil DiNardo was the bloodhound assigned to Rosenbluth. The most interesting thing about this bit of strategy is that it is motivated purely by personal reasons. It is a well-known fact that Case refused to accept Rosenbluth, who wanted very much to go to State. Now, since Rosenbluth is on his way to stardom, Case seems to have decided that Rosenbluth's stardom will not be acquired at State's expense. Hence, the bloodhound.

Today's "Over The Hill" will be the last. The press of academic work dictates my resignation. One Win Over Either Clemson Or USC Would Satisfy McGuire

By BERNIE WEISS

Basketball coach Frank McGuire, who takes his charges into South Carolina territory this weekend to do battle with the Gamecocks and Clemson's Tigers, said yesterday he would be happy if he returned with one victory.

"Of course we'll be out to take both games,' he stated, "but I would be satisfied with one win. Both of those teams are tough on their home courts."

He indicated that Carolina's early-season victories over both fives here at Chapel Hill were not won handily and the Tar Heel's fortune could easily be reversed. UNC downed South Carolina, 86-55, and Clemson, 99-66.

Both the Gamecocks and the Tigers sport a high scorer. South Carolina has Bill Yarborough, one of the top men in the country, and Clemson has Lee Collins. Yarborough tallied 25 points against Carolna in the first meeting, Collins 24.

The Tar Heels, however, not only have the No. 1 man in Lennie Rosenbluth, but a pair of new stars in Tony Radovich and Bob Young. Both boys have suddenly blossomed into point-makers in the Tar Heels' last two games against Wake Forest and Virginia.

Young just recently gained a starting position on the team after alternating with Paul Likins, and has taken advantage of the opportunity by scoring 33 points in the past two games.

Radovich, suddenly red-hot on the court, ran up 30 points in Carolina's victory over Virginia Tuesday night, shooting with 66.6 accuracy.

Probable line ups for the games tonight and tomorrow night will have Rosenbluth and Jerry Vayda at forwards, Young at center, and Radovich and Al Lifson at guards.

Gymnasts Test Navy Sat.

North Carolina's gymnastic team heads north today to meet the Navy at Annapolis tomorrow. It will be their second test of the season. Recently Coach Bill Meade's tumblers turned back the New Jersey Recreation department by 51 to 43.

Last year Navy was one of three teams to beat the Tar Heels, the others being Army and Syracuse. The Middies are always strong in gymnastics and will be favored again.

Gordon (Gooby) Hudson, Otis Hartsell and Pete Brumley are three of the veterans Coach Meade will count on for points.

Matmen Tackle Citadel There

By AL KORSCHUN

The Tar Heel wrestling team will leave by car today at 1:00 for Charleston S.C. where they will wrestle the Citadel Saturday afternoon at 3:30. The matmen will have the best opportunity so far of winning their first match of the season against practically the same Citadel team which the Tar Heels defeated last year. Coach Sam Barnes was especially pleased with the improvement the grapplers showed in both the Washington & Lee match and in this week's practices and expressed satisfaction with the way the team as a whole is beginning to work together. Ed Hudgins, winner against Duke in his first intercollegiate match, will replace Co-Captain Miles Gregory at the 177 lb. class in the starting lineup which will be composed of all sophomores except for senior Pete McGhee and Med Student Arthur Gregory.

Indoor Games Here Sat.

The second annual Atlantic Coast Conference Indoor Games will be held in Woollen Gymnasium tomorrow and director Dale Ranson, University of North Carolina track coach, says a fine field is expected.

Invitations have already gone out to conference members and schools which usually enter the non-conference and scholastic divisions.

A freshman division is also on the program, a colorful day long event with most of the championships decided at night.

Maryland took conference honors last year, followed by North Carolina and Duke. V. M. I., Navy, and Florida were one-two-three in the non-conference division. North Carolina won the freshman division and Washington and Lee High of Arlington, Va., nosed out George Washington high of Alexandria, for scholastic team honors.

Saddler Finally Agrees To Defend Feather Title

NEW YORK, Jan. 12 (AP)—After over three years, including a two-year hitch in the Army, Sandy Saddler finally has agreed to defend his world featherweight title, Friday, Feb. 25 at Madison Square Garden against Teddy Red Top Davis, the No. 1 contender from Hartford, Conn.

Stripped of recognition in National Boxing Assn. states because he refused to heed the NBA's Dec. 14 deadline, the 28-year-old champion will be engaging someone other than Willie Pep in a title fight for the first time.

The rangy New York Negro won the title from Wily Willie, Oct. 29, 1948, lost it back to Pep the next year and won it again, Sept. 8, 1950 when Pep "retired" because of a shoulder injury. He stopped Pep again, Sept. 26, 1951, his last defense.

Next Frosh Game Slated For Tuesday Against State Frosh In Reynolds Coliseum

WILSON, Jan. 13 — (Special(— Carolina's freshmen Tar Heel cagers, coming back strong after Tuesday's loss to the Duke frosh, pulled away in the second half last night to down the Atlantic Christian College jayvees, 80-66.

Pete Brennan, with 25 points, and Tommy Kearns, with 20, led the Tar Babies' scoring. Lefty Bo Hester paced the ACC junior varsity with 22 markers.

Atlantic Christian battled the Tar Babies on even terms for the first eight minutes or so, tieing the score at 13-13, but the visitors from Chapel Hill moved out front to take the half-time lead, 29-22.

During the second half ACC came within two points of tieing the score again, 38-36, but Brennan, Kearns and Roy Searcy found the rnage in plenty of time to stretch the margin.

Joe Quigg, starting center for Carolina missed tonight's game. Quigg is confined to the University Infirmary, but it is expected he will be ready for action next Tuesday night when the frosh take on the N. C. State frosh in Raleigh, preliminary to the Tar Heel-Wolfpack scrap.

What young people are doing at General Electric

In 1964, our greatest shortage may be working people. This country's demand for electrical goods will be 100% greater than it is today. But there will be only 11% more workmen. How can production per man be boosted enough to close the gap?

Automation: Continuous Automatic Production

Automation is a way of manufacturing based on the continuous-flow concept. Products will be made, inspected, assembled, tested, and packaged by a series of integrated machines in one uninterrupted flow. As industry evolves toward greater automation, more workmen will become skilled machine specialists or maintenance experts able to control complete systems.

Phil Alspach and the men under him now draft layouts for automatic systems, tackle the engineering problems involved, design automation equipment, and even build some.

23,000 College Graduates at G.E.

This is a big and important job. Alspach was readied for it in a careful, step-by-step program of development. Like Alspach, each of G.E.'s 23,000 college-graduate employees is given his chance to grow, to find the work he does best, and to realize his full potential. For General Electric has long believed this: When fresh young minds are given freedom to make progress, everybody benefits—the individual, the company, and the country.

PHIL ALSPACH joined G.E. shortly after graduation from Tulane (B.S. in M.E., '44), has completed G.E.'s Engineering Program, Class of 1945, and its Creative Engineering Course, 1949.

Insurance Man Speaks To Health Meet Here

"The basic idea in the concept of industrial health is to preserve health and prevent sickness rather than alleviate the results of sickness," a vice president of Liberty Mutual Insurance Company, Boston, told physicians and industrialists at an opening session of the annual seminar on industrial health here today.

W. H. Seymour, who is in charge of the loss prevention department for Liberty Mutual, pointed out that the presence of good or poor health in employees "correlates closely with the relationship of the individual to his environment.'

The two day seminar is being sponsored by the UNC School of Medicine, the Occupational Health Committee of the North Carolina Medical Society and the Liberty Mutual Insurance Company.

Dr. W. P. Richardson, professor of preventive medicine and assistant dean for continuation education, University School of Medicine, in discussing the university's contributions to industry in the field of health, said that "the medical school feels a keen responsibility to provide leadership and services in meeting the broad health needs of the state in accordance with the charge of the Poe Commission and National Study Committee which led to the establishment of the expanded program here.

Four Year Draft?

"While the high turnover in military personnel is costly in dollars, even more costly is the loss of experience and operational efficiency which results from it.

The President also called for these additional benefits for servicemen:

1. A "dislocation" allowance for military personnel with dependents who are ordered to a new permanent duty station.
2. An increase in the daily allowance for temporary duty travel from $9 to $12.
3. More housing for service families in areas where present facilities are insufficient, and authority for reduced rentals where men and their families must live temporarily in substandard housing.
4. Removal of "existing inequities" and provision for better medical care for military families.
5. Equalization of survivor benefits according to rank for active and retired personnel.

In addition to requesting a four-year extension of the general draft law, Eisenhower asked Congress for atwo-year extension of special provisions authorizing the drafting of physicians and dentists. Those provisions now are scheduled to expire July 1.

"At present, the reserves are composed of older men who have completed their terms of active service. For example, less than 17 per cent of the men now in the Army reserves are under 24 years of age."

Eisenhower added that during the six months of training under the proposed program those engaging in it would be paid $30 a month, as compared with $78 plus basic allowances now received by beginning privates in the regular services.

He said the number of men who would be accepted in this basic type of training should be subject to quotas fixed by the President "to avoid bringing the manpower pool down to an undesirably low level."

Specifically as to legislation, the President recommended:

1. That the present law be changed "so as to provide one group of reservists who can be organized into a force maintained in a high degree of readiness to meet immediate mobilization requirements, and a second nonorganized group with prior service who would be called into military service by a selective process if the need for their services should develop in a general mobilization."
2. Enactment of legislation under which physically fit young men betwen the ages of 17 and 19 could volunteer for six months basic training, to be followed by active participation in the reserves for 9½ years.
3. That legislation be passed under which men enlisting in the National Guard would receive basic training in the active services. The administration plan would provide, for the first time, for direct assignment to the National Guard of men completing active service.
4. A new law designed to induce participation in reserve training by providing that men who have served less than two years in the regular forces may be recalled to active duty in order to maintain or restore their qualifications.
5. Enactment of legislation to permit the states to raise and maintain organized militia forces which in time of emergency could take over the National Guard's domestic mission and support civil defense activities. The President noted that existing law does not permit troops in addition to the National Guard.

is the personification of the one art that we, as Americans, can claim for our own: that of the folk music known as "jazz."

Of all the host of words spilled in praise of this world-renowned spreader of good will perhaps those of disc jockey Fred Robbins in introducing Louis to jam-packed Town Hall, New York City, on April 24, 1947, are most significant:

"All over the world, America is known for baseball, movie stars, cocktail bars, disc jockeys and a few other strictly American phenomena. But I suppose more than anything else, we Americans are known for our jazz musicians. Our hot music is America's great cultural contribution to the creative art of the world—and its foremost contributor is nothing less than a living legend.

"Jazz is a term that is much abused, but if it has any meaning at all, it means exactly what happens whenever he lifts his trumpet—whenever he throws his head back and curls his voice around a song.

Seattle & Munford:

Two Other Educational TV Stations Began In January

Transmitting their first programs within a few days of each other were KCTS, Seattle, Wash.; WEDM, Munford, Ala., and WUNC-TV here. All three stations operate in the Very High Frequency broadcasting band.

There are now 11 educational TV stations telecasting throughout the nation. The three new stations can reach a potential audience of some 5 million viewers, bringing the total Population living within range of educational TV stations to nearly 20 million.

Weekly schedules of the three new stations will soon total some 80 hours, raising the total weekly program output of educational TV to well over 250 hours.

The nation's first state-wide network will enter its initial stage of active programming when Munford, main link in Alabama's ETV network, begins regular telecasting today.

Of the three stations, WUNC-TV begins with the most ambitious program schedule. After an initial telecast of the Governor's budget message to the State Legislature on Jan. 7 and a formal opening on the evening of Jan. 9, WUNC-TV went into a full production Schedule on Jan. 10 with 40 and a half hours of telecasting per week. Production is divided equally between the three studios which feed into the transmitter operated by the Consolidated University: the University here State College at Raleigh and Women's College in Greensboro

The WUNC-TV signal covers a radius of 100 miles and reaches a potential audience of 2.25 million people, some 60 per cent of the state population. Certain programs originating from the Uuniversity's station also will be carried by commercial stations either live or on kinescope recordings, thus making part of the programming available to the entire state.

In Alabama the whole state will be served by an ETV network in the near future. First step will be the inauguration today of regular telecasting from the transmitter situated atop Mount Cheaha, near Munford. This transmitter is connected by micro-wave relays to Birmingham, which later will have its own transmitter; to the University, where the University, where the University of Alabama has a studio, and to Auburn, where Alabama Polytechnic Institute soon will start construction of a third studio. An additional transmitter at Andalusia will complete the state network.

After experimental programming during December, the new Seattle station began a limited weekly schedule of seven and a half hours per week on Jan. 5. Half-hour programs are telecast daily for in-school, after-school and adult viewing. By early February station officials expect to move into a weekly schedule of 20 hours a week.

The Alabama network stems from state sponsorship and state financial assistance. WUNC-TV is largely the result of the initiative of a single educational institution supported by private contributions. And the Seattle station is essentially a community-wide venture relying heavily upon support from the general public.

'Not The Same Twice'

Douglas Enjoys Tour

By RUTH DALTON

"I'd rather play to college audiences than any other, because the ones who come are interested," said Paul Douglas, star of The Caine Mutiny Court Martial, in an interview backstage last night.

Douglas, wearing a bright sport shirt, was autographing a picture of himself in the star's dressing room of Memorial Hall between scenes of the first act of the Paul Gregory production. He said he liked playing the small towns; "one of the forms of show busniess about which I knew nothing. You play in a palace one night and a privy the next."

Douglas said he enjoyed the stage more than the movies because when you're on stage "the curtain goes up and it's your responsibility while in the movies, the director can cut wherever he likes."

In speaking of the role of Captain Queeg which has been played by Lloyd Nolan and Humphrey Bogart, he said he had not seen either one of them. "Laughton asked me not to, my interpretation is a development between Laughton and myself." Chewing gum all the while, Douglas explained that the key to Queeg was supplied by testimony of everyone who precedes him up to the second act. "The emotional breakdown in the second act is not quite the same any two times. I've heard that I am much more violent and broad than Nolan. In spite of being sick, I try to leave the impression of still being an officer and a gentleman."

As the show has been running since July 5, Douglas feels that to keep it fresh "takes more energy each time." The production will stay on the road until April 3 when it closes in New Orleans.

After lighting an off-brand cigarette, he said that he and his wife, Jan Sterling whose picture sat on the dressing table, had no hobbies. "We're unhappy when not working. We have a nice home in Hollywood and stay in it a lot. We used to go to the big parties, but now we're not invited because we never give any."

The ruddy -complected star said he sometimes enjoyed seeng his own movies. "I'm going this Sunday afternoon to see Green Fire."

The Caine Mutiny Court Martial will play in Memorial Hall again tonight at 8:30 under the sponsorship of The Carolina Playmakers.

Free Puerto Rico, Too . . .

"Adventurers, Costa Rica Needs You." These are the bold words on a poster found by Joel Fleishman, Carolina Forum head, on the main bulletin board in Graham Memorial's front hall.

The poster further states that a "contingent will embark for San Jose", Feb. 1, 1955, at 0800 from "Raleigh-Durham Airdrome."

"Aid in the fight aganist garession," with the aggression spelled just that way. "High pay commensurate with previous military training. If interested write: P. O. Box 1041, Chapel Hill, N. C. Immediately!!!"

About 24 awards also are made to weekly and semi-weekly newspapers for local news coverage, editorial pages, features and photography.

Dr. Charles E. Jordan, Duke vice president, will preside at the dinner. Duke President Hollis Edens will welcome the guests and Holt McPherson of the High Point Enterprise, president of the Press Assn., will respond.

Duke and the University of North Carolina are joint host to the annual meeting, which will include sessions Thursday and Friday at Chapel Hill.

Two From Cast Of The Marriage Of Figaro

GENE STRASSLER, left, UNC student from Apollo, Penn., playing Doctor Bartolo, gives stoic approval of May Marshbanks, of the Chapel Hill High School faculty, in the roll of Marcellina, as she tells him of her marriage plans in Mozart's comic opera, The Marriage of Figaro, to be presented in Hill Hall by the UNC Music Department next Monday and Tuesday. Performances begin at 8:30 p. m.

By WILLIAM EATON

Hill Hall is the scene every night of final dress rehearsals of Mozart's The Marriage of Figaro. Set for production Monday and Tuesday at 8:30 p.m., reserved seats for $1 are available for either performance.

The restoration costumes are being fitted and trimmings applied. The court setting is being completed by Walter Creech and the spotlights are being hung, adjusted and colored gelatins added. Dr. Wilton Mason is blending the orchestra and achieving harmony with the singers on stage.

"Marty" Boyle has just completed the leading role of a Japanese girl Kimiko in The Carolina Playmakers' experimental production Gomennesai. She is tansforming her characterization to that of a court dancer in th 18th century comic opera.

Since Marty has been at UNC, she has danced in Kiss Me, Kate and choreographed the dance sequences for last years' Trial by Jury for the Glee Clubs. She has previously danced at Cherokee in Unto These Hills and with the St. Louis Municipal Opera Company.

Upon graduation this term, Marty hopes to stay and audition for Showboat this spring. She will then continue her dance studies in New York.

The 10 principals and five dancers are constantly working to achieve their best efforts in singing, acting and dancing for the performances. In the cast are Jan Saxon, Joel Carter, Violet Galvin, Edgar vom Lehn, Gene Strassler, may Marshbanks, Martha Fouse, Patricia House, Jim Pruett and Harvey Whetstone.

Will George Stay? Today's His Last Day In Lockup

Collie Needs Home, Owner —Mrs. Jordan

George, the collie that has become an institution of this University and town according to many people, is still without a home in Chapel Hill, and today is the last of his 14-day legal stay in the Humane Society's pens.

Mrs. A. M. Jordan, George's benefactor, said yesterday that no resident of Chapel Hill has offered to become the technical owner of the dog for whose freedom she has been crusading for the past two weeks. She added that she intends to keep George in the pens for another week in hopes that someone will turn up here in town who will become his legal owner.

In becoming George's legal owner, Mrs. Jordan said the person would only have to pay the dog's city and county taxes, see that he is vaccinated and stand responsible for him if he gets into trouble. These duties, according to Mrs. Jordan, are those of any dog owner. She added that George has found food and shelter for himself and would probably continue to do so if allowed back in Chapel Hill.

In case that no Chapel Hillian offers to be the legal owner of the campus collie, Mrs. Jordan said that she would contact the persons who earlier told her that they would take the dog into their homes which are located outside of town to see if any of them will still give him a home.

Formosans Slate Movies

Students from Taiwan, (Formosa) China and the Chinese mainland will present two movies during their program for the Cosmopolitan Club tomorrow at 4 p. m. in assembly room of the Library.

Weiming Lu, chairman of the program, said that "Guarded Island," the first film, is a colored movie showing the agriculture, industry and other aspects of the life of natives of Taiwan. The second film, "Oriental City," gives a true picture of life in a Chinese city of Canton, showing how ancient and modern customs exist side by side, according to the program chairman.

Chinese tea will be served by the group at 4 p. m. and the program will include folk songs sung by the group of students. Assisting Weiming Lu will be Chi-Kun Yang, John Chu, Alice Yen, Yi Ts'ien, Frances Chen, Kwang-Mu Yao, Marvin Chow and Yas-teh Hong.

Dillard Moves Up:

Weiss Sports Editor

Weiss replaces Fred Babson, who resigned because of "pressing academic requirements." Weiss' appointment is subject to the approval of the Publications Board, which passes judgement on all major newspaper appointments.

Weiss, a Tau Epsilon Phi pledge, held various positions on the Top Hat, student newspaper of William and Mary-VPI, Norfolk Division, The Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch and since September has been assistant sports editor of The Daily Tar Heel.

Said Weiss yesterday: "I'll do my best to carry out the fine job that Babson has accomplished." He also issued a call for "more sports writers." Weiss said he invited "any student who is interested, no experience required," to come to the sports office, second floor Graham Memorial.

Bob Dillard, formerly a reporter, has moved up to the assistant sports editor's job.

Trigg May Quit As Head Of Raleigh Negro School

Never Read The Rules...

Miss Gilson Doesn't Crochet Doilies

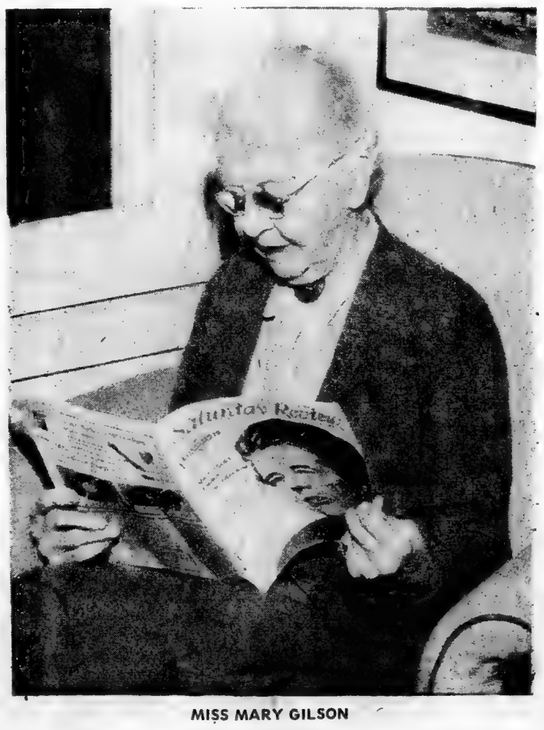
If you ran into Miss Mary Gilson in the procery store, or passed by No. 1 Cobb Terrace and saw her out working in her yard, you'd probably think she was just another sweet little old lady, who spends her time crocheting doilies and making cookies.

But Miss Gilson has apparently never read the rules for the conduct of sweet little old ladies. She attends meetings of the League of Women Voters, The Carolina Political Union and the Community Club, and is a member of the community church. And she seems to be happiest when she can get into a good rousing argument with someone over a cause she's championing.

As one student observor put it, "She can get in a meeting and bat it out with anybody." And Miss Gilson herself admits, "I have never found that meekness inherits the earth." She has a very low opinion of women who are afraid to speak up in mixed gatherings. Consequently, when she has something to say, she says it. In one meeting, she low-rated a candidate for local office because he was filling up a ravine. Miss Gibson told him that he was "destroying the natural beauty" of the town.

At another meeting Miss Gilson mentioned that one of her pet peeves is the society column. The wife of a Carolina professor declared that she enjoyed them, and Miss Gilson pointed out to her that they and deb parties reveal the "immaturity" of American women. "Then," stated the professor's wife, "I hope I never grow up."

Observers may also recall the night when Herman Talmadge, speaking to a group on the campus, spoke of Georgia as an "experiment ground for racial equality." Miss Gilson, a firm believer in fair treatment of the Negro, booed him openly.



Incidents like these, Miss Gilson fears, have earned her the reputation of a troublemaker around town. She has always loved to have students visit her, especially campus political leaders, and she has always been interested in their problems. When the first Negro students were admitted to the University, and various groups on campus were working to keep the Administration from giving them segregated football tickets, Miss Gilson was right in the thick of things, urging the student leaders on.

All of this is a little easier to understand if one knows something of Miss Gilson's background, for she is another one of those successful people who came to Chapel Hill once to write a book, and liked it so well that they decided to return when retirement time rolled around.

In Miss Gilson's case, this time came five years ago, when, at the age of 72, she decided that she had fulfilled her Wellesley motto, "Not to be ministered unto, but to minister." She was tired, she had no desire to "die in her boots," as she put it, and she was ready to slow down and let some of the younger people take over.

Her rest has been well earned. For years she was outstanding in industrial personnel, work, where she rose to be the highest paid woman in her field. (She explains her present limited income in two words—"Hoover's Crash.") In connection with her work, she has visited England, Finland and Hawaii, and during World War II she served as Manpower Utilization Consultant for the government. Also, she has studied under a Guggenheim Fellowship, and has taught economics and industrial relations at several colleges and universities, including the University of Chicago, Cornell and the University of Hawaii.

Now that she has retired, this remarkable woman still can't find time to do everything she would like to, and she can't understand why people get bored after they retire. Her only regret seems to be that she is losing contact with the young people—the students. They should regret it too. An hour's conversation with Miss Gilson, opines one student, would probably do them far more good in the long run than an hour's studying for some of their courses.

A Large & Important Principle

Elsewhere on this page today, we have printed a letter from Clark Olsen of Oberlin College, one of the American students who last year toured the Soviet Union. Now, a group of Russian students has applied to the U. S. State Department for permission to return the visit. The Russians have been denied visas.

"One of the reasons," Olsen says in his letter, "is that few arrangements have been made to guarantee hospitality to the Russians during their stay here." His appeal is to the State Department, to grant entry to the Soviet students, and to colleges and universities, to agree to act as hosts.

The Russian application was made before the recent State Department ruling which sharply curtailed free travel by Russians in the United States. That ruling, which Secretary of State Dulles has called "retaliation" against similar restrictions in Russia, has seemed to us particularly silly. We seem to be falling head over heels to imitate Soviet strong-arm tactics wherever we can. And the State Department position against granting visas to Russian students on a guided tour makes us villains in the eyes of the world.

In any case, North Carolina is one of the few states the Russians (if they were granted visas) could travel freely.

Here, too, they could find a student self-government completely unknown in their corner of the world. If any American school could impress Russians, we'd say it would be this one.

Seven American colleges—Bryn Mawr, Haverford, Lincoln, Oberlin, Reed, Swarthmore and Wayne—and four student newspapers, The Haverford News, The Chicago Maroon, the Oberlin Review and the Swarthmore Phoenix, have already extended the Soviet students an invitation to visit their campuses. The Daily Tar Heel joins them and urges the student Legislature to adopt a resolution of invitation to the Russians (including provisions for a hospitable reception if they should come) and a request to the State Department to grant them permission to visit the University.

A very large and important principle is involved here—whether the United States has anything to teach students, even the most reticent students, from a totalitarian country; and whether we have the good sense to take advantage of a chance to exhibit America's freedom to the world when the chance falls in our lap.

Campus Parties Switch Roles One More Time

Louis Kraar

GIVE A campus political party a semester and a student body with a short memory, and it will reverse its field every time.

The University Party, the same one that last spring made so much fuss over the Student Party's "give away program," pushed through this week a student Legislature bill to give the band $1,100.

And the Student Party, the same one that gave Victory Village money last spring and put television in the dorms, called the UP band bill an "open door measure."

In this reversal of roles, the Student Party argued that giving the band money would encourage other groups to seek money from the Legislature. The Legislature has no overabundance of money either.

Without fear of siding with either party (since they swap sides with ease and speed), this reporter forsees the day when the student Legislature will look like the television program "Strike It Rich."

I can see the financially weak organizations climbing up the three flights of New East steps to sob out their sad stories to student legislators—in return for money, of course.

Perhaps, the Speaker of this future day could develop a TV emcee smile, and the whole farce could be broadcast over WUNC-TV.

IN THE Rathskeller the other night I caught my first enlightening glimpse of education on a video screen from the University's station.

Bill O'Sullivan, leaning back in his rocking chair, came on the screen and uttered some wise words by Benjamin Franklin.

Then, in rapid succession viewers got a sports discussion, a musical weather report, and more O'Sullivan rocking and talking about Franklin.

Later, Chancellor House appeared before an Old (or New) Well backdrop and talked about "those Latin writers" with Dr. B. L. Ullman of the Classics Department. The House show struck me as being a kind of academic "What's My Line?"

As the last lines of educational video faded from the screen, I sipped my cider and thought about some far off (I hope) day when, instead of going to classes, we'll all sit before the big screens.

That guy in Cobb or Stacy who hates to get out of bed on winter mornings could just have his roommate flip on the set. Instead of cutting classes, he could just turn to another channel and watch Arthur Godfrey.

But, as I said, those days are far away.

Oberlin Man Proposes:

Russian Students As Visitors

Editor:

This past year a number of American students visited the Soviet Union. I was fortunate enough to be one of those. This last summer I spent three weeks in the Soviet Union, Poland, Chechoslovakia, and Hungary. The Oberlin College student body had sent me as their "representative" to make the trip.

A three-week trip hardly makes one an expert on Russian affairs, but the small acquaintance that I did have with Soviet life makes me strongly convinced of the wisdom in having Russian students come to this country. For one of my strongest, impressions from the three-weeks trip was that Communist students have a greatly distorted picture of American life.

In the conversations we had with Russians—especially young people — we occasionally mentioned something about Russia's "Iron Curtain." Each time we did, our Russian friends would smile knowingly, and say simply, "You are here and Russian students cannot get into the United States."

The reason: just at the time the U. S. State Department had turned down a request of Russian stdents to visit America. There was little we could say in answer to the charge. It did little good to reply that their own government had long refused visas to Americans.

Why did our State Department turn down the visa request? I do not know the whole story, but one of the reasons given was that few arrangements had been made to guarantee hospitability to the Russians dring their stay here. Such guarantees a number of schools across the country are trying to provide.

I think the importance of Russian students coming here is great. Some or all of the "Student Editors" who have applied to come may not be, young college students. (Though I have strong doubts that the Soviet government would send all older people on a "student tour" which would inevitably receive great publicity from the American press.)

No matter who the "students" are, I think they cannot help but have their eyes "opened" on a tour of this country. Perhaps it is inevitable that they will return to Russia and tell only of the things they were "supposed" to see. If this happens, then the Russian people will only be told the same thing they have heard all along.

We can hope, however that those few Russians who did come will have had at least a few questions raised in their own minds concerning the validity of Communist propaganda claims.

There is, also, a slight chance that more can be gained from having the students come here. A real attempt at reducing the possibility of world war seems to be the dominant theme in present international relations. Since the death of Stalin, the Soviet leaders have been making numerous changes—small though they may be—which have resulted in greater harmony in the world. One of these changes is, of course, the permission granted to Americans students for travel in the Soviet Union. And the Soviet government has also attempted to send people here.

If there is the slightest chance that the Soviet government, as part of their "New Look," will allow returning Russian students to give a somewhat accurate report of what they saw in America, then I think that it behooves American students to do what they can to make these "reports" possible.

I do hope that colleges and universities will go on record as willing to be hosts to Russian students. There seems little to be lost, and much that is possible to be gained from such a move. Even if the Russian students gained nothing from their trip, American students can do little but gain from contact with Russians. This much, at least I learned from my stay in the Soviet Union.

Nehru's Role Looms Large In Future Of South Asia

Joseph Alsop

BANGKOK, Thailand. — The biggest single 'if' in the future of South Asia is the future development of Indian policy, which of course largely means the future development of the personal views of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru.

India's moral authority in Asia may seem to many westerners—it has often seemed to this particular westerner — to be largely based on pretentious talk and a capacity for rousing false hopes. But here in South Asia, this Indian moral authority is none the less a very real thing. Whether you like it or not, it is a hard, practical political fact that cannot be ignored.

It could have been ignored, to be sure, if the American, British and French governments had not chosen to make a Munich in Indo-China. But the Munich was made, and the results are now so serious that the decay quite probably cannot be halted without Indian moral authority to reinforce western militray power and American economic power.

If Nehru can be induced to join the party by a side door, American and free world interests will still demand the very greatest efforts to block world communism's relentless march into South Asia. But those efforts will have a far greater chance of eventual success if Nehru helps instead of hinders.

In this connection, moreover, there have been some pretty important straws in the wind in the last couple of months. First Nehru visited the two crucial border states, Cambodia and Laos, on whose fate the fate of Thailand also depends. Then, at his meeting with Ho Chi Minh, the Indian leader gave his celebrated warning, that it was all very well for the Viet Minh to take the Chinese-oriented Vietnamese regions of Indo-China, but that India would take it very ill indeed if a grab were also made for Laos and Cambodia, with their basically Indian culture.

Thereafter, as though to underline his warning to Ho Chi Minh that the cultural divide of South Asia must also be the political divide, Nehru consented to appoint an Indian Minister to Cambodia, the firmest and easiest way to salvage the two states immediately threatened by the Viet Minh. And finally, on his way to the Bogor conference in Indonesia, he paused here in Bangkok for a social visit which had special significance because of his past tendency to draw aside the hem of his robe from Thailand's somewhat gamey government.

What Nehru has done so far, to be sure, rather recalls the story of the English nineteenth century Lady Jersey, who drove twelve miles to church one Sunday and found there was no service. She ordered the footman to shove her calling card under the church door; told the coachman to take the road home, and turned away with the remark to her young, "Well children at least we've done the civil thing."

In view of his past pronouncements about SEATO for instance, it will be hard for Nehru to do more than he has done to save South Asia. But it will also be hard for him not to do more, in view of the pressure of events. His representatives in Cambodia are warning him that the peril there is very great. His ambassador in Thailand has frankly told him that the fall of Cambodia will bring on the fall of Thailand. And perhaps most important of all, his old friend and neighbor, Burmese Premier U Nu has bluntly warned Nehru that the fall of Thailand will directly imperil Burma's independence.

Nehru may of course choose not to believe all these warnings. But the danger to India of a vast Communist upheavel in South Asia is certainly more immediate than the danger to the United States. Thus there is also a chance that Nehru may be persuaded to do something more realistic to forestall this danger before it is too late.

YOU Said It: A Bomb For The Columnists

Editor:

Can't we please have a change? The quality of the columns in The Daily Tar Heel has gotten progressively worse.

It's a sad plight when the sole column worth reading appears once a week. I refer to the one by Max Shulman for Philip Morris.

I am really impressed that Fred Babson is such a wheel that he goes in and talks to Frank McQuire about nothing worthy of print. I am also impressed by David Mundy's knowledge of what's going on in political circles. But I have had enough of it and I don't think I'm the only one.

I get a big kick at seeing Louis Kraar's smiling face five or so mornings a week and I just can't wait to find out what he did yesterday or over the holidays. Maybe the five thousand students who don't know him don't feel that way though.

Then we have the Horse and his friends. Until I gave up wading through that one I figured it was all hidden meanings. Since then I've decided it is actually meaningless.

What happened to the interesting columnists like Harry Snook and Chuck Hauser? Is there no one to take their place? I'd even like to see Ron Levin back . . . at least he was different.

Is campus life so dull that we must hear about nothing but what goes on at Graham Memorial? Let's have a few arguments and controversies about life in general. If this is too difficult try to put in two crosss-word puzzles. I'm being forced into subscribing to the Raleigh News and Observer.

We would like to thank The Daily Tar Heel, all the organizations, and the individuals on the campus who had a part in making the Empty Stocking Fund a real instrument of service for the people of this community and of Orange County at Christmastime.

As reports are being prepared for next year's Empty Stocking Committee, it is noted that 1,340 persons were remembered this Christmas through your helpfulness and generosity.

Expressions of appreciation from those whose stockings were filled are most heartwarming and we want to pass on to you their sincere "thank you".

A New Era Of Good Feeling?

The Charlotte News

We're a mite surprised at the politicians. Remember Democratic Sen. William Fulbright's suggestion, back in '46, after the election? He wanted Democratic President Harry to appoint a Republican Secretary of State and then resign, so control of the executive would go to the Republican Party which had won Congress. Marshall Field endorsed the idea in the Chicago Sun-Times. Many Republicans, for some reason, thought the idea excellent. (Truman's comment, directed at Fulbright: "that over-educated Oxford blank-blank.")

But no one to our knowledge has put on his poker face and suggested that in the interests of unity, harmony, efficiency and economy the President and vice president should step down to permit Speaker of the House Rayburn (He's next in line now as the law has been changed) to enter the White House.

Must be the country has entered another of those eras of good feeling.

It may last another month.

Meet Don Elliott

Tom Spain

RCA Victor has brought out some of the better talent in the modern jazz field, and though the records of these musicians are beautifully encased in the finest of albums, complete with hibh priced artwork and full color printing, they remain on the music shop shelves.

Hardly is talent achieving its goal when it goes no farther than the display window, and it seems an injustice to record good music only to have it remain unheard.

Some sources report that the problem behind the Victor jazz artists is with the promotion and distribution systems which are still as they were when John McCormack was a big seller. The most effective salesman for any record company is naturally a radio station, and whereas Columbia, Mercury, Capitol, MGM, and most any other record manufacturer will load down a disc jockey with recordings of all kinds, Victor will hold out. The popularity of modern jazz is lower nowhere than here in the South, but with the cooperation of radio and record manufacturers, the better jazz might be heard and known here.

Don Elliott is one of Victor's better jazzmen, and the multitalented leader of a progressive quintette is something of a sensation. Though the one-man band routine left us many years ago, a stylist such as Mr. Elliot makes it, possibilities seem feasible.

The difference between Elliott and the one-man band is that though Elliott can play them all, he takes on one at a time. His background is as impressive as his music is imaginative. Breaking into the entertainment business as a part of the vocal group, Hi Lo Jack and a Dame, he has played vibraphone with Shearing, Goodman, and Buddy Rich, taking a fairly high place on the Metronome poll.

As a trumpet player he also did well with Goodman, Terry Gibbs and Rich, attempting a style somewhere between Harry James and Bobby Hackett. It was no surprise to see him take first in the miscellaneous instruments part of both Down Beat and Metronome polls.

Most outstanding in Elliott's work however, is the performance of his own compositions on mellophone. The mellophone being a variation of the French Horn built on a similar playing style with the trumpet, its place in modern jazz seems natural. The mellophone as played by Elliott combines the maneuverability of a cornet, the mournfully rich tone of a trombone. and the round softness of a French horn. All this worked in with an Elliott ballad like ANGELA, creates a distinctive blues mood to be likened to the work of Sarah Vaughan.

In the vocal line, Don Elliott has a style which should lead him to great popularity, whether it be in the jazz field or with popular ballards. His voice is youthful, clear and appealing, resembling Chet Baker in range, Frank Sinatra in style and tone.

I DON'T CARE ANYMORE is the only real ballad on the 12-inch LP, but it is indicative of Elliott's capabilities. EVERYTHING I LOVE, a show tune of Cole Porter's, is something of a novelty when treated by the Elliott group.

Pushing his versatility a notch further, he attempts, fairly successfully, to imitate a theramin. employing an echo chamber and a continuous yodel, Elliott works his way through the love song without the utterance of one word, and with hardly a break in his voice, let alone a noticeable breath.

The Elliott group can move through a jump number in fine fashion, with no limitations on the leader's choice of instrument. His progressive trumpet work is light, on the beat, and slightly catchy in a hopped up version of LONG AGO AND FAR AWAY. It is also easy—perhaps a little too much so at times, as he slurs too much to suit some listeners.

But all in all, his swinging trumpet style compares rather fairly with Baker's or Pete Candoli's When applied to mood tunes such as IMAGINATION, his trumpet is suprisingly not too progressive, but rather more of the old school in the style of Spivak or James.

Though Don Elliott is a one man show, his cohorts are not to be overlooked. Ralph Martin, an ideal supporting pianist of great talent, joins Elliott sharing most of the solo work, and the two create some very pleasant duets.

Jo Puma, and Mort Herbert, guitar and bass respectfully, display their talents with an exceptional accompaniment of Elliott's vocal novelty of EVERYTHING I LOVE. It's not easy to accompany one who's imitating a theramin. Jimmy Campbell performs quietly, in fact subtly, on drums throughout, no matter what the beat.

Don Elliott, blessed with several talents, is twice blessed in that his talents are outstanding. There are few like him. Nat Cole and Chet Baker are known for having more than one great talent, and though they have risen to the top on one or the other, one can believe that their talents, although one might overshadow another in popularity, are all in the same realm of greatness.

Don Elliott has similar possibilities, and time will prove his greatness and select his most popular talent. But be it the trumpet, mellophone, vibraphone or his voice, it will be a source of good jazz.

Close Guarding By South Carolina Fails To Contain Rosie; Fanin's 19 USC's Top

The 6-5 sophomore forward provided scoring punch time after time when close South Carolina guarding seemed to have the North Carolinians stymied.

Guard Al Lifson gave fillip to the North Carolina offense by snaring 17 points mostly on long shots, to come in second to Rosenbluth's 22.

The Tar Heels tonight travel to Clemson, S. C. where they meet the Clemson Tigers in another ACC contest.

The lead changed three times and was tied twice in the first 10 minutes, at which point North Carolina took charge and never let go.

It took only six minutes of the second half for the winner to spread a 10-point halftime advantage with 20 points.

With eight minutes left, North Carolina put on a partial freeze as South Carolina had closed the gap down to nine, mostly on some slick floor shots by guard Bennie Fannin.

Carolina Gym Team Tackles Navy Tonight

The gymnastic team, which defeated Jersey City Department of Recreation 51-43 in its first outing, travels to Annapolis to take on Navy this afternoon.

High scorers for the team in its Jersey City meet were Gordon Hudson and Co-captain Pete Brumley. Co—captain Biff Howard trails by only five points and is third.

Coach Bill Meade, quoted as saying this is the best team Carolina ever had, expects this to be a close meet. Navy beat Jersey City by a score of 52-43 earlier in the season.

Meade expects to have a little trouble since two of his tumblers, Qualls and Williams, will be unable to make the trip because of dental admissions exam. Another drawback is the three-event limitation followed by the Midshipmen. This will pull Hudson of the high bar.

The Tar Heels will probably use Brumley and Gilleland on the mats; Howard, Brumley and Hudson on the side horse; Wilson and Howard on the high bar; Rivera and Collins on the rope climb; LeGrand, Hudson and Howard on the parralel bars; and Grantham, Brumley and Hudson on the flying rings.

Frosh Tankmen Meet Richmond Team Today

The frosh swimmers take on Richmond YMCA this afternoon at 2:15 in Bowman-Gray indoor pool.

Victorious in their first three meets, the team is striving for an undefeated season, havng beaten High Point High School twice and last Saturday downing Greensboro High. The Richmond YMCA team defeated the Virginia Frosh last Saturday in Charlottesville.

Coach Dick Jamerson has been experimenting with his boys and as yet has made no final decision as to the probable lineup.

CUFF NOTES

By BERNIE WEISS

I wasn't around during the developing stages of the Atlantic Coast Conference, but it was not necessary to be on hand to read between the lines and do a bit of interpreting.

The under-lying motive for the birth of the ACC, though it was not obvious and there were no salient facts to support it, was to create an athletic league which would in turn develop football in this area to the point where it would become "big time."

Another reason was that there were too many teams in the Southern Conference (something like 16) and two leagues could operate much more effectively, competition-wise, than one.

But if football power was a cause in the making of the ACC, its purpose was accomplished. The conference tied up with the mid-western Big Seven in an Orange Bowl contract. The teams of Maryland and Duke have certainly made their mark on the national picture, not only through their bowl appearances but also during the regular season.

Recently, however, the ACC has gained a name in basketball. The N. C. State Wolfpack, though a top team in the nation is being rivalled by a number of clubs for the ACC title. It won't be long ere King Case will be booted off the throne he has held so long.

The Pack was rated second in the nation this week, according to an assiciated Press poll of writers. Maryland's Terrapins, who have begun to command the respect of the country under Bud Millikan's direction, are rated 11th. Duke isn't far behind, and other ACC teams would be up there high too if they didn't have to beat their brains out against each other.

The conference is producing more than its share of individual stars. Wake Forest claims the nation's leading scorer over a four-year perod in Dick Hemric. Virginia in Buzz Wilkinson has the country's No. 5 point man for the season. Clemson's Bill Yarborough is No. 3 across the nation. Carolina's Rosenbluth is No. 10.

For the Southern Conference, the situation is bouncing merrily along also. Furman, the top offensive team, Richmond and George Washington, along with West Virginia, have gained national recognition.

So, what should have been a football circuit is instead a fertile forest for the growth of basketball giants.

Maryland's 68-64 victory over State Thursday night at College Park is a sign of events to come. Facing State for the first time since 1951, the Terps proved that Case is not invincible in the ACC. Duke almost pulled the trick last week, and Carolina scared the wits out of some 12,500 fans at the Reynolds Coliseum during the Dixie Classic. The Tar Heels led by five points, but slipped under the strain and lost by three.

State is host to Wake Forest tonight, and it wouldn't come as a surprise to me if Hemric and his cohorts walked away with the win, though it won't be easy and it is unlikely.

The Pack is due for a tumble. Carolina may jerk the rug, and if the Tar Heels don't certainly Maryland, Duke, Wake, or even South Carolina (with Yarborough) or Virginia (with Wilkinson) will. It is only a matter of time.

Blue Devils Host To Virginia In Durham Tonight, 8 o'Clock

After two conference wins earlier in the week to bring their ACC record to 5-2, Duke's Blue Devils seek their third league win of the week tonight at 8:15 in Duke Indoor Stadium when they meet the University of Virginia's Cavaliers and their potent one-two scoring punch of Buzz Wilkinson and Bob McCarty. The contest will close out the pre-examination schedule for the Blue Devils.

In a preliminary to the Duke-Virginia varsity clash Coach Tony Drago's Duke freshmen, co-favorites to capture the Big Four frosh title, entertain the potent Cherry Point Marines. Game time is 6:30.

Cavalier Coach Evan Male has the Atlantic Coast Conference's highest scoring duo in the persons of guard Wilkinson and forward McCarty. According to the latest figures released by the ACC Service Bureau, Wilkinson leads the scoring parade with a 31.2 average. Not far behind him in sixth place s teammate McCarty with a 22.5 mark.

UNC Thinclads Meet State Today

By RAY LINKER

Indoor track season opens for the Tar Heels when they hook up with N. C. State at 2:15 this afternoon in the Tin Can. Both the freshmen and varsity will oppose the Wolfpack harriers.

The long distance men and the hurdlers will probably show up best for the Heels. Boyd Newnam, Jim Beatty, and Bob Barden will seek firsts in the 880, mile, and two-mile, while Claude Rhule and Richard Waters will set the pace in both the high and low hurdles. Roger Morris, performing equally well in the shot and discus, is another Carolina strong man.

Leaders in the others events are Charles Yarborough in the pole vault and broad jump, Jim McGhee in the broad jump, Ken Bryant in the High jump, and Jay Zimmerman and Jim Bynum in the dashes.

Pole vaulter John Upchurch and hurdler Gene Drury are two important men the freshmen will be counting on heavily, along with Bob Allison in the shot and discus and Jim Carraway in the high jump.

YWCA Celebrating Centennial This Week

The largest women's organization in the world, the Young Women's Christian Association, is celebrating the 100th anniversary of its world founding in London this week.

The world-wide YWCA had two separate beginnings nearly 100 years ago. Each took place in England in 1855 and both were efforts by women to improve the situation of their fellow women that had been brought about by the Industrial Revolution and as a result of the Crimean War. One of these beginnings was Miss Emma Robart's Prayer Union, which grew out of her concern for the spiritual welfare of women and girls. The other beginning was the General Female Training Institute, founded by Mrs. Arthur Kinnaird for the purpose of housing nurses returning from the Crimean War. In a few years these two movements, after having spread rapidly, merged under the name of the Young Women's Christian Association.

Beginning in 1871, the YWCAs, following the pattern set by the YMCA, began to organize in colleges and universities. Through summer conferences and visits of national YWCA staff the idea spread and soon there were several hundred student YWCAs.

1881 community associatons began to provide programs for teenagers under the name of "Little Girls' Christian Association." In 1918 all work with teen-age girls in the YWCA was united into one movement, the Girl Reserves, which in 1946 became the Y-Teens. The Y-Teen program now includes more than 300,000 members, and there are appoximately 6,000 Y-Teen clubs.

The YWCA became international in the late 1800's. The first American foreign division has enlarged since then from a missionary enterprise to include also assistance to foreign countries in developing YWCAs of their own, particularly through leadership training.

Today potential YWCA leader come to the United States for periods of practical training in various localities of the country.

Congressional Leaders Say:

Ike's UMT Plea To Be Opposed

By UNITED PRESS

Congressional leaders predicted yesterday that President Eisenhower's plea for a modified form of Universal Military Training will meet stiff opposition.

The President sent the proposal to Congress yesterday as a means of enlarging and improving the nation's military reserves. It calls for putting 100,000 youths annually through six months of basic training and then requiring them to spend 9½ years in the reserves.

Congressional leaders said the President's full and continuing influence will have to be exerted to get this through Congress. They said a tipoff on probable trouble could be noted in the decision of Chairman Carl Vinson (D-Ga) of the House Armed Services Committee to press ahead with hearings on the President's proposal to extend the draft but to delay consideration of the reserve program.

The leaders said Eisenhower's plea for a four-year extension of the draft and military pay increases averaging about 6.7 per cent probably will clear Congress easily.

Psychology Department's Dr. English Bagby Dies In Memorial Hospital

Prominent Faculty Man Succumbs After Illness

Dr. English Bagby of the UNC Psychology Department died in Memorial Hospital late Friday night after an extended illness.

Dr. Bagby died at 8:40 p.m. Friday of heart disease.

Graveside ceremonies were held Sunday at 3 p.m., Charles Hubbard officiating. Dr. Bagby was interred at the Chapel Hill Cemetery.

Survivors include his wife, the former Mrs. Helen Julia Marsh of Boston, Mass.; a daughter, Mrs. Anne Bagby Deeb, and a son, John Bagby, 13.

Dr. Bagby had been a member of the Carolina faculty since 1925 coming here from the Yale faculty.

He was born in Baltimore, Md., in 1891, the son of the late Charles Todd Bagby, prominent Baltimore lawyer, and Anne English Bagby. He received his A.B. and M.A. degrees at Princeton University in 1913 and 1914, and his Ph.D. in 1918 from Johns Hopkins.

In 1917 he was assistant psychologist with the U. S. Bureau of Mines.

COMPOSED VMI SONG

Following his graduation he was employed as adjunct professor at Virginia Military Institute, where he wrote the music for "Our Alma Mater," played at important VMI functions.

As first lieutenant in the Sanitary Corps during World War I he served as "guinea pig" for an expeiment to obtain infomation on the effects of decreasing amounts of oxygen on the individual.

From 1920 to 1925, Dr. Bagby taught at Yale as assistant professor of psychology, and at summer sessions of Columbia University from 1925-35. In 1922 and 1923 he was a professor at summer sessions of John Hopnins.

ACTIVE MAN

He was an active member of the American Psychological Assn., Sigma Xi, Phi Kappa Sigma, Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society and the U. S. Committee on the Hard of Hearing. At UNC, he served on the Administrative Board of the Medical School from 1940-48.

He had always taken an active part in community activities and had served as president of the Rotary Club and of the Chapel Hill Country Club. He was also featured in several productions of the Carolina Playmakers.

His published works include The Psychology of Personality, published by Henry Holt in 1929, which sold thousands of copies and was used as a textbook in leading colleges and universities in the country.

Other books were Emotional Reactions and Human Efficiency, published in 1931, and Elementary Psychology for Students of Commerce, used as a text in a course for commerce students which he taught.

In addition to a report on the effects of high altitudes made to the Surgeon General of the Army as his doctorate thesis, Dr. Bagby had published numerous articles in scientific journals.

He had often said that he came to the University to teach "because it was so generally recognized that under Dr. J. F. Dashiel, the Psychology Department at UNC was superior to any in the East."

DR. ENGLISH BAGBY
. . . psychologist dies

RATED STUDENTS HIGHLY

He also rated student here highly. Although a very small percentage of them is trained in prep schools, he compared them favorably with the upper 20 percent at any college where he had taught.

During the Depression, he personally paid for medicine prescribed for self-help students attending the University who were unable to pay, and in addition underwrote the expense of hospital care for all underprivileged white and Negro children of Chapel Hill. In popularity polls conducted in recent years to determine faculty favorites, he was always rated high.

Among his friends he was always famous for a quick sense of humor and for a rich personality. His clarity and high dramatic character. Once this semester, in his psychology of personality class, he told his students he didn't "see how you can get by in these troubled times." The student of today, said Dr. Bagby, had a "terrible time" keeping a sane mind with numerous "fears" all around him. Dr. Bagby congratulated the student of today for "surviving."

COLORFUL LECTURES

Dr. Bagby's lectures were sprinkled with colorful examples. Some were "A Certain Young Woman's Response to Criticism," "The Bulgy Vase," "A Girl Postponing Marriage," "Cabbage and Sleepiness," "Tall Thin Girls" and "Big Ears."

Dr. Bagby told his classes that he didn't "mess" with the Honor System, and accepted their excuses for missing classes and quizzes just as if South Building had written a formal excuse. A favorite statement of his was "bonus," an added checkmark in his grade book for superior performance in class.

Dr. Bagby had planned to exempt some students this semester from parts of his final exam. He told classes that he had taught Gordon Gray (now president of the Consolidated University) and anyone had given Gray all A's, he jokingly said, could bypass a University rule about no exemptions on exams.

He was amateur billiard champion of Maryland and was active in sports during his undergraduate days at Princeton, where he played football, basketball, tennis and golf.

Until eight years ago, when poor health forced him to lead a more inactive life, he spent many hours hunting and fishing, often in the company of his students.

The Governor has invited groups or organizations to write for the material. Copies of the report made by the special advisory committee which studied school segregation also are available.

Scales To Go Before Courts On April 11

GREENSBORO, Jan. 17 (AP) — Junius Irving Scales, charged with knowingly being a member of the Communist party, an organization advocating the violent overthrow of the government, will go on trial here April 11 in U. S. Middle District Court.

The trial date was set last week during a 30-minute court appearance by Scales and his newly-employed counsel, Reuben Terris.

Scales, now free under $35,000 bond, and his attorney were present when the federal court convened at 9:30 a.m. for a rule day session. Judge Johnson J. Hayes of Wilkesboro presided.

Terris, a resident of Brooklyn with law offices in New York City, first asked for a 60-day extension of the deadline for entering motions, which was originally set for yesterday.

A discussion of available court dates followed, and these were agreed to by the attorneys: Feb. 15, the deadine for Scales to file motions; March 2, for the government to answer the motions; and March 8, for argument on the motions in the courtroom.

Terris was permitted to make the oral motion for extension after he informed Judge Hayes that he had filed a petition in New York to be admitted for practice before federal court in his home district.

After court appearance, both Terris and Scales talked with a reporter for some 15 minutes. Terris answered most of the questions, with Scales seeming content to let the attorney speak for him.

Terris termed the case as "a trial of ideas, rather than a trial of acts by an individual." He predicted that the grand jury indictment will either be dismissed on motion or that Scales, a Greensboro native, will be acquitted.

Asked his view on the indictment, Terris said it charged no overt acts, that it will be up to the government to prove each item in the bill, and that "every historical document of this nation flies into the teeth of this type of indictment."

Hill Hall-Mozart Version Of Marriage Of Figaro Slated For Last Showing Tonight

By WILLIAM EATON

Mozart's The Marriage of Figaro, to be presented for the last time tonight at 8:30 in Hill Hall, has been many months in preparation.

Musical director Dr. Wilton Mason has been working constantly since he conceived the idea last spring. Though 'Figaro' is one of Dr. Mason's favorite operas, he has never been associated with its production before. The possibility of producing this opera was contingent upon the availability of finding suitable singers, musicians and technicians for the production. All last summer, he was reading various translations and locating the necessary orchestra parts.

Stage director Charles Jeffers, costumer Suzanne Kramer and set designer Walter Creech have been working on their individual tasks since given the assignment last October. Mason declared, "The background and development of any major theatrical work is basic it its artistic success. Each aspect of production must be closely allied to achieve inherent unity for the entire production."

FORTUNATE CIRCUMSTANCES

The Mozart production was realized only under the most fortunate circumstances. The desired people for the cast and orchestra were available this year. The physical production could not have been accomplished without the advice and cooperation of the Carolina Playmakers' staff. A full length production of an opera has never been attempted before by the music department due to the lack of personnel and facilities to present a major work.

Dr. Mason and Jeffers spent many hours in historical background of the style, customs, manners and previous productions of the opera.. Only after arranging for the various production aspects, was the go-ahead signal given for auditions. These tryouts brought forth fresh talent which is utilized in the cast of 10 singers and five dancers.

After casting, six weeks of intensive musical rehearsals were spent with the principals. Group rehearsals were first held to coordinate the ensembles. Work was then done individually to achieve a characterization for each of the singers. The stage director attended all the music rehearsals, working closely with the musical director so that there was cohesion in their interpretation of the production as a whole.

Jeffers spent three weeks blocking the singers' movement on paper, spending the past six weeks in concentrated staging of the action. All movements and stage business had to be cued to the music, as there is no flexibility in this medium, and action must be synchronized to Mozart's score.

MUSIC IS EXACTING

It was not possible for Jeffers to complete his staging of the action until the singers knew the manuscript completely. The most activity on the stage is called for when the action is excited. At these times, the music is most exacting, making it necessary for the singers to do less physical action and concentrate on the music.

JOEL CARTER IN 'FIGARO'
. . . opened last night, last show tonight

Caroline Sites, accompanist for the opera, has also attended each rehearsal along with the cast. She and the entire cast devoted tremendous work and effort by giving up all their weekends since the casting was announced in order to rehearse.

The orchestra was carefully chosen to achieve a balance of all the various instruments. Their first rehearsal began just after Christmas, with Dr. Mason "covering the score" with them. The problem arose of integrating them with the singers. This was difficult for most members of the 28 piece orchestra as they are not used to accompanying singers, but playing in symphony groups. It was necessary that they play softer than usual in order that the singers dominate the music.

Walter Creech, who was selected as scene designer last October, recalled the baroque and rococo flavor of the operas given at Salzburg Festivals in Austria. His stage design was projected from this knowledge. He feels there is a definite Viennese flavor of the music and libretto. For the comic opera, he has attempted an exaggerated baroque type of architectur. Since Hill Hall has no front curtain, Creech's major problem was designing one basic set for four locales in the opera.

COSTUMING

Suzanne Kramer, custumer for the production, also began her historical background when assigned the position last Oct. She found the necessary information on the modes of the day, and attempted to transform them into costumes for the stage. She has re-created many costumes to the correct historical style of an 18th century court. Costumes for the nobility, peasants and court dancers all had to be unified into a basic style and still stay with the accepted historical period of the production.

The months of concentrated preparation by the singers, directors and technicians were culminated in the opening performance last night and will be repeated this evening.

Reserved seats for The Marriage of Figaro are still available in the Hill Hall box office for $1 or may be obtained there before the performance.

Yarborough, Creasy & Gwynn Get Moreheads

Tom Creasy, John Gwynn and Charles Yarborough were announced as three University nominees for the Morehead Scholarships for 1955-56 yesterday by Chancellor R. B. House.

Creasy is a member of the Order of the Grail, Order of the Golden Fleece, Amphoterothen and is president of the student body for 1954-55. He is a senior from Gretna, Va., and plans to enter the School of Law next year.

Gwynn, a senior from Chapel Hill, plans to enter the School of Graduate Studies in the department of mathematics. He is a member of Scabbard and Blade, Phi Eta Sigma and has participated in intra-mural athletics.

Yarborough is president of the senior class, chairman of the University Party. He is a senior from Louisburg and is planning to enter the School of Law.

Counties Set In Discussion At Institute

County finance, property taxation and the financing of public schools and welfare programs will be under discussion by county commissioners from all over North Carolina at a school to be conducted by the Institute of Government here today and tomorrow.

Designed primarily for newly elected county commissioners, the school is part of the Institute's training program for county and municipal officials.

On the agenda are such subjects as the taxing power of counties, revenue from non-tax sources including state and federal grants and budget making and administration.. The duties of county commissioners in connection with listing, assessing, collecting and foreclosure of ad valorem taxes will also come under discussion. Particular emphasis will be placed on the valuation and revaluation of property.

Henry Lewis and Alex McMahon, assistant directors at the Institute, will direct the instructional program.

100 Courses Offered Via Mail This Spring

This spring there will be more than 100 correspondence courses available to students who cannot attend the spring semester, but who wish to continue their education while not in residence.

The University offers correspondence courses in 20 departments for which credit is granted toward bachelor's degrees.

English R., which will remove a composition condition, and Plane Geometry are among the courses offered.

Late Permission

The Dean of Women's office yesterday announced that late permission until midnight will be granted to women students wishing to attend the London Festival Ballet in Raleigh tomorrow.

Those planning to attend the ballet must sign out in their residence and return immediately following the performance.

3 More Papers

There will be three editions of The Daily Tar Heel this week — this morning's, Wednesday's and Thursday's.

After Thursday, the newspaper will shut down for a little pre-exam study.

The first issue of the new semester will be delivered on the morning of Thursday, Feb. 3.

Agenda For Improving N. C. Is Offered

An agenda for improving North Carolina's government is offered by Duke University political scientist Robert S. Rankin in the current issue of The Tarheel Social Studies Bulletin published by the N. C. Council for the Social Studies.

Dr. Rankin, chairman of the Duke political science department, writes that North Carolina "has had a progressive spirit that has made it a pioneer of the New South. Recently, however, this position has been jeopardized by the willingness of many to rest upon laurels and by the rapid advances of other southern states."

Pointing out that improvements and changes in government are always in order, he lists some five specific needs in the political life of North Carolina.

The current issue of The Tarheel Social Studies Bulletin in centered around the theme "Teaching State And Local Government in North Carolina."

Senator Ervin To Speak At Press Meeting

A speech by U. S. Senator Samuel J. Ervin Jr., panel talks on such pertinent topics as highway safety and desegregation, and presentation of more than 50 awards for top newspaper work will be among the highlights of the annual meeting of the North Carolina Press Association at Carolina and Duke this Thursday through Saturday.

Final details for the sessions, which will be held here except the Awards Dinner at Duke have been worked out by Association officers and UNC and Duke officials.

Senator Ervin will be the main speaker at the opening session Thursday night with Holt McPherson, High Point, president of the N. C. Press Association, presiding.

In connection with the Press Institute, the North Carolina Associated Press Club will hold its annual meeting, a luncheon session Thursday at the Carolina Inn. Thomas P. Whitney, Russian affairs expert for AP and former Moscow correspondent, will speak at the luncheon.

Educational TV Hailed By Emerson Executive

"No single educational device has come into the hands of educators since the beginning of time that will do more to enliven the educational processes and quicken the interests of students in learning than television," Benjamin Abrams, president of Emerson Radio and Phonograph Corporation, said Saturday.

Abrams was in Raleigh to present a check of $10,000 to WUNC-TV, the new television station of UNC.

Handicapped Getting Aid, Says Warren

Industry's interest in the employment of physically handicapped and the effectiveness of vocational rehabilitation are evidenced by the fact that the need for public-assistance funds have decreased considerably, Col. Charles H. Warren, director, Vocational Rehabilitation, North Carolina Department of Public Instruction, said here last week.

Col. Warren was one of the principal speakers at closing sessions of the two-day seminar on Industrial Health held here. Sponsors of the conference were the University School of Medicine, the Occupational Health Committee of the State Medical Society and Liberty Mutual Insurance Company.

Speakers at Friday's sessions emphasized that "if the well-being of our workers is to be maintained and advanced, industrial health must become a continuing, day-to-day part of the personal, community and national health program."

$1,000 Grants Slated

Five $1,000 scholarship awards for graduate students in state colleges who are preparing for teaching careers have been announced by the Methodist Board of Education.

Named the "Bishop James C. Baker Awards," the annual scholarships will be granted Methodist students who plan to teach or do administrative work in the church's colleges or seminaries.

Candidates are restricted to graduate students at state institutions because recipients will be required to serve as program leaders at their campus Wesley Foundation, the church's student center.

The awards are named for Bishop Baker, retired Methodist leader of the Los Angeles Episcopal area, in recognition of his having organized the first Wesley Foundation center in 1913 at the University of Illinois.

April 1 is the deadline for applications, which are available at Wesley Foundation centers.

Interracial School Body Gets Name, Lists Aims

The Inter-Racial Fellowship for the Schools has been formally adopted as the name for the church-sponsored local organization that has been meeting during recent months to consider how Chapel Hill might meet the Supreme Court's decision banning public school segregation.

About 50 persons attended Friday evening's meeting of the group at the First Baptist Church, at which a set of objectives was adopted. The next meeting of the group, open to all interested persons of both races and sponsored by the Chapel Hill Ministerial Association, will be held Feb. 18. Election of a chairman of the organization will be held at this time and several additional committee reports heard. Mrs. Virginia Nicholson is secretary of the Fellowship and Walter Spearman presided over Friday's meeting, in the absence of a chairman.

Lambert Davis gave a review of the newly-published book Schools In Transition and announced that free copies would soon be distributed representatives of the Fellowship in each church. A report on laws governing race relations in Chapel Hill was presented by W. Robert Mann, head of a committee appointed for this study.

Here is the seven-point program of objectives adopted at the meeting, in addition to four suggested action projects:

N. C. State's Designers Prefer Old North State

RALEIGH, Jan. 17 (AP)— Only 37 of the 112 students who have graduated from the School of Design at North Carolina State College since the school was established July 1, 1948, have left the state to take jobs elsewhere.

This was reported by Henry L. Kamphoefner, dean of the school. He said a number of the students from other states have remained in North Carolina for employment following their graduation.

The total of 112 graduates since 1948, the dean said, includes 65 North Carolinians and 47 non-residents.

"The progressive attitude in North Carolina architectural offices," Kamphoefner said, "has been highly responsible in attracting our graduates."

The Deadening Hand Of Government Atomic Secrecy

Does secrecy spell security?

"No" is the answer given on this page by two careful observers of the American scene. The Washington Post's Herblock and The Christian Science Monitor's Roland Sawyer.

They are not alone. E. B. White, writing last week in The New Yorker, said this:

> We don't think the problem of contamination-by-experimentation, of extinction-through-curiosity, has yet been presented to the world in anything like the vivid, detailed, and compelling way that it merits. . . .
> We suggest that the United States present this nuclear problem fully and dramatically in the near future, with the help of its best scientists and dreamers and prophets, from the forum of the United Nations. . . .

And the American Association for the Advancement of Science has viewed with informed alarm the dangers of peacetime atomic explosions as well as the disadvantage excessive government atomic secrecy works on scientists—those laboring on inventions for defense against atomic war.

The chorus of objections against the government's secrecy obsession fall into two categories: Those who point out, as Mr. White has, that the world is becoming an unhealthy place because of atomic tests and that people, if they were informed, might rebel and find some way to keep from destroying themselves; and those who strain against too much secrecy as a hamperer of the spirit of creativeness.

No secret formulas need be released. No one is asking that. All these people request is formal, official, public appraisal of atomic potentiality and less stringent secrecy where it is uncalled for and blocks the work of scientists.

The truth about atomic power has apparently not been told the people of the world. Enough, however, has sifted down via the more informed reporters and scientists to lead one to suspect that the truth is massive and frightening. In such circumstances, secrecy does not mean security, but insecurity of the sort that can undermine a nation's very life. The truth is needed here; it should be told.

'Now Run Along And Play'

The Movers & Shakers Of The World

We were particularly interested in those whom E. B. White would enlist to cope with the problem of peacetime atomic explosions — "our best scientists and dreamers and prophets."

We agree that there is a place in the scheme for dreamers as well as for scientists and prophets. We fear, though, that in this case, as in so many others, the dreamer would be relegated to an obscure place upstage.

Not so with scientists and prophets, of course. Despite the current loyalty attacks on scientists, the profession is admired, as Anthony Standen has shown in Science Is A Sacred Cow, almost to the point of apotheosis.

As for prophets, the old saying is that they are "without honor in their own countries." But the subdued half of that adage would suggest that prophets are at least honored in all the rest of the world.

Dreamers, however, have historically been assigned to the lunatic fringe. In problems of nuclear physics, as of politics and national policy, we look upon the dreamer as one who is more hypnotized by the pale moon he contemplates than he is interested in finding out something about it. Dreamers, after all, are

> World losers and world foresakers
> On whom the pale moon gleams.

But dreamers have their niche in the overwhelming conflict between conscience and technology laid on us by the arms race. There are shades of human problems where the rationality of the scientists collapses and the prophet's clairvoyance is dimmed, his bursting forth stilled. Here moves in the dreamer, for, to complete the quatrain, dreamers

> . . . Are the movers and shakers
> Of the world forever, it seems.

A Message With An Edge

Ed Yoder

Little time has passed since the whole country drew a sharp breath about an abuse of military authority — in which a vindictive sergeant at Camp Gordon, Ga., hanged a draftee by his heels.

The Caine Mutiny Court Martial — dealing with the same broad issue of military authority, its uses and abuses—came to Chapel Hill Saturday night.

The Court Martial turns on Articles 184, 185, and 186 of Naval Regulations which provide that in "the last extremity" a subordinate officer may relieve his superior. Herman Wouk, curious about these regulations, started to write the story in novel form while he was in the navy. He created a situation in which panic during a World War II Typhoon made it necessary for a naval lieutenant to relieve his captain of a destroyer-minesweeper command.

Captain Queeg, the man he relieved, (played by Paul Douglas) is treated in the play as a sometimes-cowardly and often vindictive paranoid. He distrusts his subordinate officers, exalts his own judgments, feels his officers are plotting against him, and abuses his crew with cruel punishments for minor offenses.

In the equatorial region, Captain Queeg finds a crewman having a drink during water ration hour. So he turns off the water for a whole day. He shakes down the crew and rifles the ship to find a key that never existed—simply because someone has eaten strawberries from the icebox without permission.

Captain Queeg maintains his composure in the court martial until Act II. Then, Lt. Barry Grenwald, the rebellious captain's Jewish defender, needles him into a breakdown that reveals the neurotic side of his personality. The court martial can only acquit the insubordinate Lieutenant Maryck (Steve Brodie) who, after a long chain of weird events, took command of the foundering Caine during the Typhoon.

Lieutenant Maryck, then, has challenged military authority. A court martial is satisfied that the challenger was in the right and that Captain Queeg's personality was unstable. Military authority, rightly used, is valuable. But, like any other authority, it must be subjected to constant re-examination. It is not sacred.

So end the first two acts.

The most penetrating analysis of the issues is saved for a scene after the acquital of Maryck that brings all the principals involved in the Caine mutiny together at a party in San Francisco. This scene surfaces ideas that have been but undercurrents in the first two acts.

Lt. Greenwald, Maryck's lawyer, is spokesman. The audience has known from the beginning of the play that his emotions are mixed. Greenwald knows it is his duty to defend the lieutenant who has taken command of the Caine and who is not at fault. He hesitates, however, because he has a view of the old regulars like Captain Queeg that no one else in the cast seems to have:

"Now I'm coming to Old Yellowstain. Coming to him," Greenwald says, drunkenly and pensively. "See, Mr. Keefer (an officer on the Caine, novelist, and the real protaginist for mutiny) while I was studying law, and you were writing your short stories for national magadines, and little Willie (also a Caine, officer) was on the playing fields of Princeton, why, all that time these birds we call regulars were . . . standing guard on this fat, dumb, and happy country of ours. 'Course they were doing it for dough, same as everybody does what they do. . . ."

And Greenwald is right about Queeg. As a member of a minority group that faced brutal danger at the hands of the Nazis, he sees clearly what the officers of the Caine do not.

Captain Queeg, like so many of the old regulars of the armed services is full of the bad qualities, the hates and traumas and petty complexes that can lead a man to make his career military service. But at the same time he represents the last fortifications of the Republic. Queeg is one of those who,

> . . . . in the day when heaven was falling,
> The hour when earth's foundations fled,
> Followed their mercenary calling
> And took their wages and are dead.
> Their shoulders held the sky suspended;
> They stood on earth's foundations stay;
> What God abandoned, these defended,
> And saved the sum of things for pay.

Lt. Barry Greenwald understands exactly what A. E. Housman meant when he wrote this poem. Housman wrote it in memory of the old regulars—the Captain Queegs—who were the first to go and "save the sum of things for pay" when 1915 brought world war to France.

"Queeg deserved better at my hands," says Lt. Grenwald with real compassion. "I owed him a favor, don't you see? He stopped Herman from washing his fat behind with my mother. . ."

Even mercenaries, realizes Barry Grenwald, are not mercenaries when you talk in ultimate terms. When war breaks out, the blue chips are down, and everyone else has yet to turn from a novel or a college play-field, someone has to step into the breach. The breach filler must be ready to die.

When heaven falls can we condemn even the warped mercenary—even the fat, stupid Queeg? That's what Mr. Wouk is asking. That is the real message of the Caine Mutiny Court Martial. A message with edge.

PEACE OF MIND

The concept that peace of mind in the great desideratum is clearly allied to the principle of non-activity which, as Schweitzer has recently emphasized, flows directly out of a negation of the world.———What do YOU think about peace of mind, Galileo and Darwin? Are you in favor of it, Luther and Cromwell? Is this what we learned from you, Thoreau and Whitman? Is this what you had in mind for our own nation, Governor Bradford, Roger Williams, Ben Franklin and Thomas Jefferson?

Most specifically of all, peace of mind is not what I ask from religion. To pray for peace of mind appeals to me as a rather unpleasant insult to the God of the restless cell, of the blazing novae, of the swirling nebulae. The God, in short, of progress, not of stagnation.

God pity me on the day when I have lost my restlessness! God forgive me when I am satisfied! God forgive me if ever I am so dull, insensitive, lazy, complacent, phlegmatic, and apathetic as to have peace of mind!—Warren Weaver in The Saturday Review.

Carolina Front

The Professor Who Taught About Life

Louis Kraar

"PSYCHOLOGY IS about people, not mice running through mazes," he said that first day in class. And we all sat up straight in our seats to learn about ourselves.

The teacher was Dr. English Bagby, who taught Carolina students about themselves until he died last Friday morning.

Dr. Bagby, who was as active in community affairs as he was in academic matters, knew students as well as knew psychology.

He learned his field at Princeton and Johns Hopkins, and he learned students at Yale, Columbia, Johns Hopkins, and—most of all—Carolina. He belonged to the string of organizations that marked him as emminent in his field, scholarly groups that spoke an academic language.

Dr. Bagby took the principles psychologists learned by watching the mice run through mazes and translated them from the language of scholars to that of college students.

"There is so much insecurity around us today that I often marvel how you students survive," he remarked one day in his psychology of personality class.

"When I finished school, all a young person had to worry about was getting a start—making a living. But today it seems that you can't count on anything.

"With you Boys, it's the draft. And this means you girls have to wait and make your plans accordingly."

★

THE HONOR System wasn't just a system with Dr. Bagby. "A student's word is all I need. Don't bring me any written excuses," he would say.

Last spring, when Dr. Bagby's health made the teaching he loved difficult, he came to class with a book of James Thurber's essays.

"You students have been very kind to me this term. Sometimes it's been difficult to teach, and you've been patient.

"That's why I brought this book. It's something I like very much. And since you've been kind to me, I'd like to share it with you," he said.

Then Dr. Bagby gave some of the most delightful readings of Thurber's keen humor that we'd ever heard. The life that this professor worked so hard to learn, then teach, filled the room in a way I'll never forget.

SOMEHOW ONE paragraph of the stories about Dr. Bagby's death seemed to epitomize the way he looked at the students who sat under him.

"He also rated students here highly. Although a very small percentage of them is trained in prep schools, he compared them favorably with the upper 20 percent of any college where he had taught," the story said.

Actually, the students this professor thought so much of were just as high in their estimation of him. There was an unspoken agreement in his class that both you, the student, and he, the teacher, were interested in the same thing—life.

Dr. Bagby thought enough of life to learn why people acted as they did. He thought enough of it during the Depression to personally pay for medicine for self-help students attending Carolina.

Life filled the classroom of this kindly professor who admired and understood, instead of envying, youth.

That's why these students are going to miss the man who taught them so much about themselves—Dr. English Bagby.

YOU Said It: Memorial Was Insult To Rise

Editor:

Granted that Rise Stevens was sad; she had every right to be. The view of that unpolished, decrepit stage was enough to depress even the audience.

I wince to think of the impression we have made on the singers, speakers, and musicians who have performed on that stage, in that oppressive atmosphere, and to the rhythms of those steam pipes. Memorial Hall is (and I think you will agree) the sore spot of our campus. How can a University consider itself a cultural center when it has not even a hall fit for visitors who to such a large extent exemplify portions of that culture? Ah, friend, we are in a sad state and don't know it.

I hope Miss Stevens hurried away from Chapel Hill. Because, to the insult of Memorial was added the injury of being satirized in our campus newspeper the next day. And not a sentence was printed in that paper of the merits of her performance.

While we continue to invite guests to sing, speak, and play for us, Memorial Hall remains in its uncomfortable condition. Perhaps Miss Stevens was not merely depressed; perhaps she was worried that under a sudden burst of Bizet, the stage might give way beneath her.

One For Egghead Ed

Editor:

We have composed a pome in honor of the Tarnation:

Alas for the Tarnation—
Her jokes have grown poorer—
She never was given to literatoor.

Ain't the Tarnation a silly? They done gone in there high-ly literatte way (of which this sentence is an example) and censored Our Boy Ed, "The Egghead Rebellionist" Yoder. "We're to be more Pitied than Censored." For this unique beginning we kiddies were surprised because here on the fifth page, in the right-hand column, the Tarnation admits what we've thought all along. But this time they've overdone it.

Bad enough to have waste paper on our hands; but the condemnation of "Our Boy Ed" is too much. This letter is not meant in any to be malicious, but only to serve as a warning to those who connive to publish aTrnation. Don't they realize that, come the Revolution (the Egghead Revolution we mean) these swinish anti-Eggheads will be the first to go. Ain't that a silly?

Speaking seriously for a moment (to the staff of the Tarnation) have you all ever thought about humor? And why not?

Lay off Our Boy Ed.

Grand is the history of the Fifth Royal Inniskilling Dragoon Guards. In case you are not up on these things, a dragoon is a calvaryman; and in the last three centuries the Fifth Inniskillings in scarlet, green and silver have charged across many a battlefield as though it were no more than a parade ground.

The regiment however has not had a horse for almost 20 years. These days its 700 men are stationed on the Forkshire moors with 45 Centurion tanks. But time should not be allowed to change things that way believes its commander Col. Richard DeC. Vigors. So he is urging his men to devote their spare time to fox hunting. Horse troops, you know, must not forget horses.

But here's a bit of difficulty. No matter how well it thinks of them, the War Office does not issue horses with tanks. A neglected polo fund, however, has ben used to buy eight handsome steeds and a few more have been borrowed. The 700 will have to take their turn, but that's just a bit of austerity which an Englishman takes in his stride. Also most of the men have never worn a scarlet packet, let alone a pink coat. But for the time being they will make do with a tank man's overalls, even if a bit grease-stained. The big thing is that regimental tradition is being honored again. The Fifth Inniskillings are mounted once more.

Ah, there will always be an England.

ACC Leading Tar Heels Scrap With No. 2' Pack Tonight

McGuire Looks For State To Use Press

Strategy Tilt at 8:15; Frosh Battle in Prelim

Carolina's Tar Heels will take a four-game winning streak and the lead in the Atlantic Coast Conference to the Reynolds Coliseum in Raleigh tonight where they do battle with the N. C. State Wolfpack, the nation's No. 2 team.

Gametime will be 8:15 o' clock, following a preliminary between the Tar Babies and the Wolfpack frosh. The prelim is to begin at 6:15.

With successive wins over Wake Forest, Virginia, South Carolina and Clemson, Carolina gained the top position in the ACC over the past week-end after building up a 6-1 conference record. State, having a 5-1 mark, ranks second .

The 'Pack is heavily favored tonight. Rumors yesterday said the team is better by anywhere from 15-30 points, but the margin will not be that large. UNC coach Frank McGuire said he expects the Wolfpack to employ a full-court press from the very start, in which case he will play a possession game, similar to the type used by Carolina in last season's ACC tournament and the recent Dixie Classic. McGuire said, "The possession game is our only chance against State. To run with them is sure defeat, because they are much better, man for man. I expect him (State mentor Everett Case) to press all the way."

Last year in the ACC tournament this just missed paying off for the Tar Heels when the highly regarded State five captured a 52-51 thriller. The same thing was repeated in the Dixie Classic when the 'Pack struggled for a 47-44 win.

The game is liable to be as much of a strategy battle as an actual physical contest. Case and McGuire, though not always in accord with each other, carry reciprocal respect. Tonight they may be handling their ballplayers as pawns on a chessboard, each trying to figure his opponent's move and block it before it can do any damage.

Carolina has won only one game of 22 from State since 1947, and has dropped the last six. The Tar Heel's only victory was a 70-69 decision early in 1953.

The Carolina scoring burden will be shouldered by Lennie Rosenbluth, key man in the attack and prime target for Case. Rosenbluth has a scoring average of better than 26 points, which places him among the country's top 10. Starting with 'Bluth at forward will be Jerry Vayda. Bob Young will handle the center post, while Co-captain Al Lifson and Tony Radovich will be at guards.

State, much taller than Carolina, will use 6'-8" Ronnie Shavlik and 6'-10" Cliff Dwyer under the bucket, as it has all year. The double-pivot will be supplemented by 6'-4" Phil DiNardo at forward, and Capt. Dave Gotkin and Vic Molodet at guards.

Terps In Hot Water?

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 17 (AP)—An evaluating team in its study of the University of Maryland said the school "has violated the rules of the Atlantic Coast Conference and the National Collegiate Athletic Assn., with respect to recruitment of athletes."

The report of the Middle States Assn. of Colleges and Secondary Schools said it also found evidences of flexible academic regulations, soft part time job opportunities for athletes and an unbalance of financial aid. The report said the study was based primarily on the Maryland football team of 1953, voted No. 1 in the nation.

Kentucky Still Tops In AP Poll; State Clings To Second Place, Maryland Moves Up To Sixth

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kentucky maintained a long lead in the sixth weekly Associated Press poll of the nation's top college basketball teams yesterday which saw a few jugglings of position and the invasion of a newcomer-Maryland.

Coach Adolph Rupp's Wildcats, who defeated Tulane Saturday to make the Kentucky record 9-1, romped far ahead of the field in the balloting. With 115 votes cast by the nation's sports writers and sportscasters, Kentucky received 55 for first place. On the basis of 10 points for first, ine for second, etc., Kentucky rolled up 926 points. The poll is based on records of teams through games of Saturday, Jan. 15.

North Carolina State held on to second place despite its defeat last week at the hands of Coach H. A. Milliman's surprising Maryland club, N. C. State, which had to go into overtime to beat Wake Forest Saturday night, had 590 points and is threatened by San Francisco, in third place with 520 points. The Dons moved up from fifth place after winning three games during the week.

Maryland, in the thick of the fight for the Atlantic Coast Conference lead with North Carolina, N. C. State and Duke, was 11th in last week's poll. The Terrapins jumped all the way to the No. 6 spot.

LaSalle held on to the No. 4 spot, while Duquesne—upset by St. Francis of Pennsylvania—dropped from third to fifth.

Duquesne got back on the victory road Saturday, however, by beating Fordham.

Illinois ,tied for first place in the Big 10 race, held on to No. 7 ranking. Missouri, unbeaten along with Colorado in the Big Seven Conference race, is No. 8, dropping from last week's sixth place.

George Washington slipped a notch to No. 9, while there was a tie for 10th place between Utah and UCLA, ninth and 10th, respectively, last week.

Illinois defeated Ohio State Saturday, while Missiouri downed Kansas State. Utah defeated Utah State and Montana Friday and Saturday, while UCLA took a pair of week-end engagements with Southern California, defending champions of the Pacific Coast Conference.

The second 10 is led by Alabama, which is tied for first place in the Southeastern Conference. Alabama handed Auburn its first defeat of the season Saturday. Auburn had won seven straight, and was the last major college team in the unbeaten ranks until Alabama's convincing 99-78 victory.

Matmen Tackle State; Seek First Victory

By AL KORSCHUN

A winless Carolina wrestling team will be seeking its first victory in five starts when it tackles a fairly strong North Carolina State team over in Raleigh on Wednesday. The State match will be the last one the Tar Heels will wrestle until after final exams when they will take the mat against Virginia here in Chapel Hill on February 5.

In last Saturday's match at Charleston, a relatively inexperienced but nevertheless aggressive Citadel team surprised the visiting Tar Heels and defeated them 28-8. Citadel capitalized on five pins and one decision which gave them more than enough points for the victory. The home team got 13 points through wins in the first three matches and then rolled up 15 more to offset the 147 and 157 lb. classes.

Carolina did have one moment of hope midway through the match when Pete McGhee racked up his fourth consecutive victory in as many starts by pinning Jim Shea of the Citadel, and then Arthur Gregory followed this up by decisioning Bill Adams to bring the score to 13-8. But consecutive pins in the last three weight classes by Ernie Janssen, Ed Dzanis, and Bill Shiffert gave the Citadel the meet going away.

The Summary:

123 lb. - Schenkel (C) decisioned Gray (UNC) 8-2
130 lb. - Corley (C) pinned Cowan (UNC) 5:35
137 lb. - Abeyounis (C) pinned Thornton (UNC) 8:40
147 lb. - McGhee (UNC) pinned Shea (C) 6:40
157 lb. - Gregory (UNC) decisioned Adams (C) 7-4
177 lb. - Dzanis (C) pinned Hutchins (UNC) 6:30

Tar Heel Tracksters Dominate State In Practice Indoor Meet

By RAY LINKER

Carolina's freshman and varsity indoor tracksters dominated every event in a practice meet with N. C. State here Saturday. No official score was kept, with the frosh and varsity often running together, but both Tar Heel teams came out ahead of their respective counterparts in all but two events each.

Both teams got a small indication as to how they will do against each other and the rest of the conference teams in the league championships in the Indoor Games in February.

The outstanding varsity performers for the day were the UNC co-captains, Bob Barden and Roger Morris. Morris put the shot an even 50 feet, a feat surpassed by only two of the 25 winners of the conference indoor shot crown. Barden's 9:43.5 time in the two-mile run is better than all but four of the Indoor Games' winning times in that event.

The State varsity got one of its two firsts in the 880-yard run when Bob Jones with a 1:58.9 edged Tar Heel Boyd Newman, who was clocked at 1:59.4. Ben Williams of Carolina led the freshmen in this event, turning in a 1:59.5.

In the varsity hurdles, both the high and lows saw Tar Heels Claude Rhule and Richard Waters across in one-two fashion before State's Sam Green finished. Duke's star trackman, five-eventer Joel Shankle, was in the Tin Can for the practice meet, and performed in the high hurdles, his specialty, in which his time of 8.7 was the best recorded during the afternoon.

Waters' pole vault of 12 feet tied him for first place with team mate Charlie Yarborough, who also copped top honors in the broad jump with a leap of 21 feet.

Tar Heel Bob Wilson was second to Yarborough in the broad jump with a 19'9" performance, but he tied with Carolina's Ken Bryant in the high jump when both cleared 5' 10".

In the dashes, two Tar Heels, Richard MacFaddin and Don Wright, led the varsity 440-yard dash, finishing in 53.4 and 53.5, respectively, while State's Bob Bethune garnered the best time in th 60-yard dash ahead of Tar Heels Don Mitchell and Jay Zimmerman.

The best varsity performancer in the mile run was Carolina's Jim Beatty, who notched a 4:25.7.

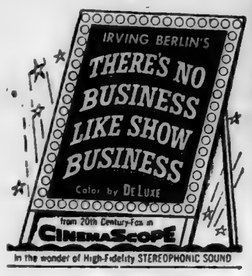
Carolina track mentors had praise for several of their fine freshmen, especially doubler winners Gene Drury and Ronnie Austell. Drury captured both the high and low hurdles for the frosh, while Austell was out front in the 60-yard dash and his 52.5 was best in the 440 run.

John Upchurch high jumped 5'2" to give the Tar Babies a tie for first with Wolflet John Allen, but Upchurch fell six inches shy of another tie when he failed to come up to State's Marion Christy's 11'6" pole vault.

Though Gymnastc Team Bowed To Navy, 59½-36½, Coach Meade Pleased

The Tar Heel gymnastic team bowed to a highly talented Navy squad, 59½-36½, at Annapolis, Md., on Saturday. It was the best showing the Carolinians have made against the Middies in the five years that the two teams have been meeting, and Carolina Coach Bill Meade was well pleased with what he termed the best performance since he has been coaching the sport here.

Tar Heel co-captains Biff Howard and Pete Brumley were the individual high scorers of the day, garnering 264 out of a possible 300 points together. They accounted for both of Carolina's two first places, Brumley doing his best tumbling in his three years here to cop that event, and Howard performing exceptionally well for the first in the righ bars. Howard also captured second place in the parallel bars to contribute 10 points to the team score, while Brumley turned in two fifths—one in the side horse and the other in the flying rings, for eight points for the team.



Gooby Hudson added nine points to the team score with three third places, in the side horse, the parallel bars, and the flying rings.

Carolina's two firsts in six events and their losing by some 20 points is a vast improvement over their performances against Navy in previous years. Last year the Midshipmen won by 40 points.

SEVERAL DOZEN AUTOGRAPH HUNTERS were waiting for actor Paul Douglas when he emerged from backstage at Memorial Hall Friday evening following his performance in The Caine Mutiny Court Martial. Douglas, who starred as Captain Queeg, obligingly signed playbills for all seekers.

'Mutiny' Reunited Friends

The occasion gave Paul Douglas, star of the show, an opportunity to renew acquaintances with his former boss, W. D. Carmichael Sr., and with Norman Cordon whom he knew when they were starting out in radio over 20 years ago in New York City. In a sense Carmichael gave Douglas his start in public entertainment. When Carmichael was vice-president of Liggett and Myers in charge of the company's radio programs, he took on Douglas as announcer for their programs, a job he held for 12 years through the Fred Waring and Andre Kostelanetz shows.

Carmichael went to both the Friday and Saturday evening performances and enjoyed both tremendously. On Saturday evening he had supper with Douglas and later they visited with Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Carmichael Jr. also close acquaintances of Mr. Douglas' in their New York days.

Cordon and Douglas had a public reunion Friday afternoon in a 10-minute mutual interview State College studios.

Last night the touring company was at Memorial Auditorium in Raleigh and today in Charleston, S. C. Then this Friday and Saturday night show will be given under sponsorship of the Jaycees' at Aycock Auditorium in Greensboro, and later on during the current tour, in Winston-Salem and Charlotte.

Although the company of 24 stayed at the Sir Walter Hotel in Raleigh, a number of others among them met friends in Chapel Hill before and after the shows. Mrs. Lois Garren went backstage at the end of Friday night's presentation to see Jerry Crews, who made a big hit in playing the part of the foggy signalman Junius Urban on the "Caine." She had played with him in a Broadway production before coming to Chapel Hill last fall. The Kal Jurgensens also visited with Stage Manager Robert Hulter who was with the "John Brown's Body" company last year, and Philip Thayer seized the opportunity to check up on a mutual friend with Wendell Corey.

'Bond Letter' Making Rounds Of Community

Want to make a quick $38,400 —or $51,200 if you are to wait 9 years?

A new variation of a chain letter broke into the community last week and is sweeping around town in a government savings bond purchase plan. The whole deal blew into Chapel Hill a few days ago from Virginia, and if it's working as expected, a number of persons in the Cavalier State are receiving a flood of $18.75 savings bonds today. If the chain were to remain unbroken each person on it would get 2,050 savings bonds, to be exact. They'd bring $51.200 if held to the normal 10-year maturity.

Modeled after the plan of the famed "Pyramid Clubs" of eight years ago, the buy-a-bond promotion has had the tellers at both local banks kept busier than ever in selling the "baby" savings bonds.

A $5.00 chain letter that worked on a similar plan hit the campus early last November and netted a few hundred dollars each to several fraternity students. The easy money scheme was titled "Sell Your Way To Wealth Campaign."

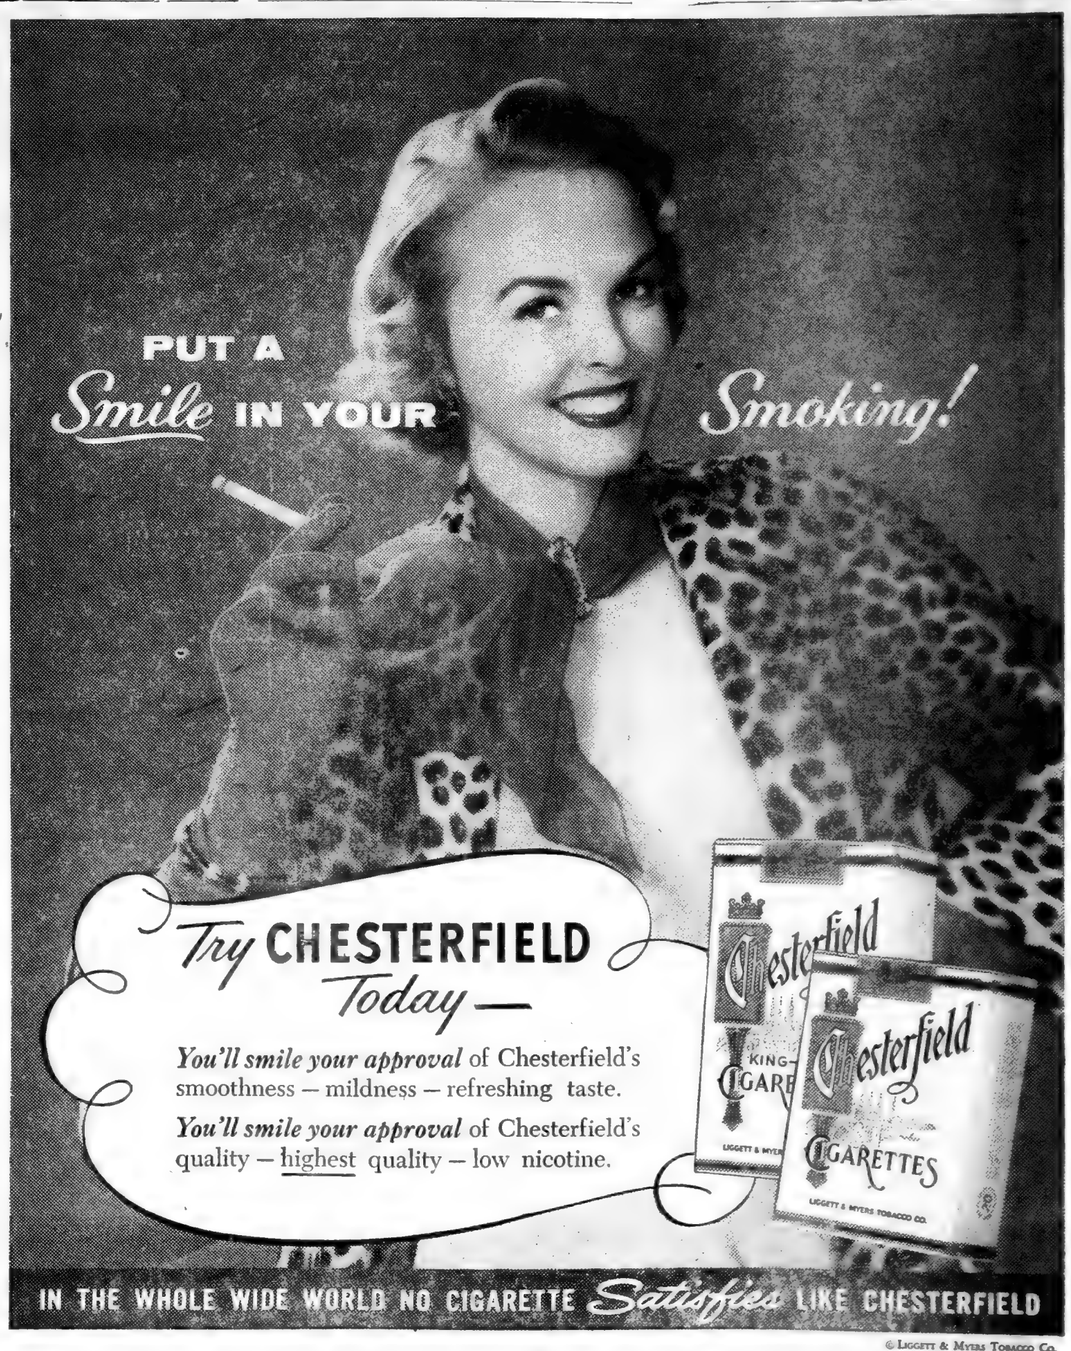
(2) That we will carry on our work in areas where we can by concrete proposals and actions, reduce tensions in our community, and create situations in which white and Negro citizens, both children and adults, may share responsibilities on an equal footing.

(3) That we will work through the churches and other organizations insofar as possible, making our group a clearing house for ideas and proposals.



(4) That in our approach we will stress education and factual information, persuasion and consideration; rather than pressure and condemnation.

(5) That we try to secure and make available information on the problem of desegration of our schools as it will affect our community.

(6) That we try to build up a reservoir of good will and understanding between the races by the contacts made in our organization, and by providing concrete evidence that segregation is neither necessary or desirable.

(7) That we will seek and welcome all other people who would like to participate in one or more of the activities we undertake.

The suggested specific action projects approved were: Provide study shelves in school and church libraries on the desegregation question; encourage study groups for consideration of the problems and how they may be solved; arrange for practical illustrations of voluntary unsegregated community activities, and see that articles and other forms of publicity such as radio forums and panel discussions keep the public informed and prepared for whatever decisions the Supreme Court may make.

Men In Service On January 31 May Receive GI Bill Benefits

By RUTH DALTON

Persons now in the service or who go into the serviec before Jan. 31 may have a possibility of drawing full educational benefits, according to information received from Col. F. C. Shephard, veterans' advisor here.

Bills to permit those now in the Armed Services or going into service through Jan. 31, 1955, to continue to accumulate eligibility for educational benefits under Public Law 550 were introduced on the opening day of Congress by Rep. Teague of Texas and Rogers of Massachusetts.

Teague is chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee and Mrs. Rogers the ranking minority member. In a statement Teague said he felt the legislation was desirable because many young men in service had been, and were still being, told by recruiting officers that they would get full credit for the time spent in service up to two years, for educational entitlement.

The President's proclamation ending accumulation of eligibility for educational benefits as of Jan. 31, 1955, means that the last veteran under Public Law 550, would under present law, have to finish his course under the law by Jan. 31, 1963, or eight years after discharge or release from active service, whichever is earlier.

There is some possibility, according to sources close to the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, that the committee will give consideration during this session to legislation to give educational benefits to "peacetime" veterans (that is, to those who enter service after Jan. 31, 1955), and extending for a period as long as the Selective Service law providing for induction for two years compulsory active duty remains on the books.

If such legislation is introduced it probably would provide that men in service would accumulate eligibility for educational benefits at the rate of only one day for each day of service, rather than one and one-half for each day of service up to 24 months, as at present.

The President's "State of the Union" message to Congress contained a sentence saying that "studies will be undertaken to determine the need for measures to ease the readjustment to civilian life of men required to enter the Armed Services for a period of two or more years."

Exam Correction

A mistake was made in the final exam schedule as printed yesterday. All noon classes on TThS and Nav. Sci, 101, 201, 301, and 401 will have their exams on Friday, Jan. 21, at 2 p.m.

In Women's Dorms:

House Council Hears Cases Of Late Coeds

By JACKIE GOODMAN

The majority of the male population of Carolina's campus does not seem to be able to understand why the coeds here have to be in their dormitories by certain hours at night, and probably more of the boys don't have much of an idea of what happens to their dates when they are not in the dorms by these hours.

The first thing which a late-returning coed must do (after banging on screens and calling under windows to be let in) is sign a House Offense Slip. On the slip she is required to put her name, the date and her offense (the number of minutes she arrived after closing hours of the dorm).

On the first Monday night after she has committed her offense, the guilty coed is brought before the dormitory's House Council for appropriate action.

A dormitory's House Council is comprised of the vice president of the dorm, who acts as presiding officer, two "holdover" members who are elected in spring and serve through the next year and two representatives elected in the fall from each floor in the dormitory.

The Council, which meets at 11 p.m., usually gathers in one of the small sitting rooms off of the living room in the dorms. The offenders for the week must remain outside of the Council's meeting room until they are summoned by a Council member.

Upon entering the room, the coed is instructed to sit in a chair which has been placed in full view of all of the Council members. The vice president of the dorm, who presides over the Council, is seated behind one of the dorm's card tables, while the rest of the Council, clad in anything from bermuda shorts and boys' shirts to 'dressy dresses" and high heeled shoes, are sitting on the sofa and chairs.

The presiding officer first reads the offense with which the coed is charged. Then she asks the coed if she has any statement to tell to the Council. If she does not wish to make any statement, or if the Council finds that her statement does not warrent that she be excused from punishment, the girl is then asked if there is any reason why she can not take probation on a certain night or nights.

Probation consists of the coed returning to her dorm by eight p.m. and signing in with the Council chairman. She must remain in the dorm until 5 a.m. of the following day.

The number of nights which the coed is placed on probation depends on the number of minutes which she remained outside of her dorm after its regular closing hours. The penalty for remaining out from one to 10 minutes late is one night's probation with an additional night added for each addition 10 minutes of lateness.

After five House Council offenses a coed is taken before the Women's Honor Council for any subsequent incidences. If a coed remains outside of her dorm for one hour or more after its closing hours, she is tried by the Women's Honor Council.

Kidnapper Sentenced

An ex-convict faced a 23 to 24-year prison sentence today for kidnaping an 18 year old North Carolina State College student and firing nine bullets into his body after robbing a motel near Pittsboro .

Paul M. Fulton, 30, of Sanford, on probation from a 5 to 7 year sentence for larceny, was convicted Monday of kidnaping and assaulting Donald E. Johnson with a deadly weapon with intent to kill. He pleaded guilty.

Judge Chester R. Morris sentenced Fulton in Chatham Superior Court and offered the sentence to run concurrent with Fulton's previous one.

Johnson, employed at the Fairfield Motor Court at the time of the robbery, is still partially cripple from the bullet wounds. He testified that Fulton robbed him of $64 taken from the motel cash drawer and then forced him at gun point to drive to Lee County and to Chatham.

Johnson said that Fulton got out of the car and fired at him. After Fulton left him for dead, Johnson was able to drive his car nearly a mile to a farm house, where he received help.

Alpha Phi Omega To Run Non-Profit Book Shop

A student book exchange will be run at the beginning of next semester by Alpha Phi Omega, national service fraternity, in New East Annex.

The book exchange will be run on a strictly non-profit basis with only a small fee of 10 per cent of the book price charged by APO.

The system will be set up so that students will bring their used books to the exchange, set their own prices and fill out the claim forms. One of these forms the student will keep, one APO will have, and one will be placed in the book.

When the book has been sold, APO will notify the student and he will collect his price.

Probable hours for the book exchange will be from 9 a.m. to 12 noon and from 2 to 4 p.m. The exchange will open on Tuesday, Feb. 1, and will run through the drop-add period.

The book exchange has been run by APO for several years, but they hope to be able to enlarge their service this year. Anything except class notes will be sold.

The Costa Rican issue came back into the forefront of campus news yesterday when a group of Carolina males walked into a quiet 10 o'clock (a.m.) Y-Court with a portable recorder on which they had taped a program "recorded in Costa Rica at the headquarters of Carlos Lara Hien the rebel leader."

The some 30 odd students who were sipping their coffee quietly when the boys arrived soon realized that it was all in fun.

Wyatt Dixon and Hartwell Conklin of the Phi Kappa Sigma House were the two who brought the recording in with accompanying posters urging in both English and Spanish for men to "sign up and go to Costa Rica," and "Que Vamos, Escribe Aqui."

The recording included an appeal to Carolina males by a narrator who identified himself as "Rodney Yendor, ABBS, Carolina, Archeology '46."

The appeal asked all interested men to airmail their requests for action to Hien in Costa Rica.

The recording was ended by the playing and singing of the "Costa Rican national anthem" which sounded strangely like a currently popular jump song, "Shake, Rattle and Roll."

Wesley Foundation Passes Anti-Segregation Measure

By NEIL BASS

The Wesley Foundation, student Methodist organization, here has passed a resolution declaring racial segregation a denial "of true Christian brotherhood." The group also extended an invitation to any student of any race to "join their fellowship."

In a letter submitted to The Daily Tar Heel by Richard Whitaker, chairman of the Wesley Foundation Christian Outreach Commission, the group explained that "the attached resolution was presented to the Wesley Foundation of the University of North Carolina on Jan. 9, 1955. The following Sunday, Jan. 16, the resolution was adopted by a 48-3 ballot, with two people registering abstentions. The ballot was secret so that no person would feel pressured, and so that a true representative expression might be obtained, according to Whitaker.

The resolution in full reads, "As Christians we confess ourselves to be the children of God, brothers of Jesus Christ. We believe racial discrimination is a denial of this brotherhood. Furthermore we believe compulsory racial segregation is a manifestation of this discrimination and therefore a denial of this brotherhood."

This Wesley Foundation statement, first known of its kind by a Chapel Hill religious group, went on to say, "Therefore, while realizing the practical difficulties of applying the decision of the Supreme Court concerning segregation of whites and negroes in public schools, we believe the decision to be a true interpretation of the Christian faith and our American democracy; and we of the Wesley Foundation hereby make it known that we will continue to welcome into our fellowship any student regardless of his race."

When told of the resolution, John Riebel, associate secretary of the YMCA said, "All campus religious groups welcome, as far as I know, students of all races, which is as it should be. It is good to remind ourselves of this from time to time by public statement."

Rev. John A. Weidinger, of the Catholic Church here said that "he had no statement concerning the matter," and Rector David W. Yates of the Episcopal Chapel of the Cross announced that he "had no comment."

Claude Shotts, General Secretary of the YMCA, said concerning the Wesley Foundation resolution. "We of the YMCA for the last two years have had a standing policy to admit Negroes to our cabinet meetings."

Rare Johnson Books In Display At Library

By UNIVERSITY NEWS BUREAU

Two centuries ago, when North Carolina was still an English colony, a book was published in England that was to become one of the most famous volumes in the English language.

This was a dictionary compiled by Dr. Samuel Johnson. At that time, 1755, Johnson's Dictionary of the English Language was the most complete publication of its kind in existence and remained the final authority on words for more than a century.

In observance of the 200th anniversary of Dr. Johnson's famous two volume work, this rare and valuable set of books is now being displayed in the main lobby of the University Library. These books are part of the permanent collection located in the Library Rare Book Room and will be on display for several weeks.

FOUND FINANCIAL BACKERS

Johnson decided to write the dictionary in 1747 and began to search for financial backers for the project. However, the project was too great a venture for any one bookseller, and a combination of booksellers undertook to finance it. Johnson also sought and received the backing of Lord Chesterfield, then Secretary of State, who was one of England's leading patrons of the letters in his day.

The combination of booksellers and Johnson agreed that the sum of 1,575 pounds should be received by Johnson for the work. Out of this amount, Johnson agreed to pay for whatever assistants he hired.

The writer estimated that with one or two assistants he could complete the work in three years. Johnson actually had to hire six assistants and spent eight years on the task.

The method of procedure was very simple. Johnson first made out a list of words, partly from preceding dictionaries and partly from his own knowledge.

Johnson was a good Latin scholar, but his ignorance of other foreign languages prevented him from producing what today would be considered a good dictionary.

However, two centuries ago the conception of a dictionary was very limited. It was expected to contain only the words that were used by authors of that day.

In 1755 Johnson's publication was considered "epoch making" since it devoted for the first time a really skilled intellect to the study of language and substituted for the previous rough and ready method a fine power of discrimination.

From another point of view the dictionary is often found interesting because of its idiosyncrasies. Johnson was often exceedingly pompous in his writings, and though most of his definitions are terse and clear, he occasionally slips into his usual fault.

SHOWED HIS PREJUDICES

While writing his dictionary Johnson thought little of any persons who would accept a pension from the government. He defined a pension as, "pay given to a state hireling for treason against his country." It is interesting in view of this to note that Johnson accepted a yearly pension of 300 pounds before his death.

His hatred of the Whigs is shown in his terming the excise tax, a favorite resource of the Whigs, a "hateful tax."

Johnson held the Scotch people in great contempt and showed this in his definition of oats when he wrote, "Oats—a grain which in England is generally given to horses, but in Scotland supports the people."

To this definition it is said that a Scotchman replied, "England is known for its horses and for its people."

Film Series

GMAB'S Film Series Committe announced yesterday that tickets for the Spring Series are on sale now in Graham Memorial and Ledbetter Pickard's. Price of the tickets, good for the complete series of eight films, is $2. The first film will be shown Feb. 3.

Life Magazine, Planetarium To Give Show

Planetarium director A. F. Jenzano said yesterday permission had been granted by the pictorial magazine for extensive use of materials now appearing in its current series of articles The World We Live In.

"We are grateful for the cooperation and permission by Life," said Jenzano, "because it will enable us to present to the public another astounding spectacular show in full, natural and rich color and in three dimensional perception."

Billions of Years Ago will draw largely upon the Life art work and photographs contained in its The Earth is Born and Canopy of Air parts of the series. All of the parts will be included in Life's book, The World We Live In, which will be published soon.

Planetarium technicians will use all of its facilities and know-how in producing Billions of Years Ago. Planetarium officials hope it will be the fourth so-called big production in its yearly schedule of shows, rating in public appeal alongside the Christmas and Easter stories and the annual summertime space trip show.

Narcotics Bill

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18 (AP) — Sen. Scott D-NC, one of 37 senators sponsoring a bill to strengthen control of illegal narcotics, said the measure would be of great benefit to North Carolina "which has become a trading center for narcotics in the South."

"The narcotics problem in North Carolina," Scott said, "is one of the most acute problems in the South."

N. C. League For Nurses Sponsor Institute Here

MISS FRANCES GINSBERG
. . . spoke Monday

The Operating Room Nursing Institute, sponsored by the North Carolina League for Nurses, opened at the School of Nursing here last Monday and will hold its closing session today.

Miss Frances Ginsberg, operating room consultant for Bingham Associates, New England Center Hospital, Boston, Mass., delivered the keynote address at the opening session.

Speaking on the role and relationship of operating room personnel, Miss Ginsberg addressed some 80 nurses.

The course is one of the several programs sponsored by the North Carolina League for Nurses to foster the development of nursing services and education through coordinated action of nurses and allied professional groups.

Yesterday's program was opened by a panel discussion of operating room emergencies.

Moderated by Dr. David A. Davis, professor of anesthesiology here, the panel was composed of Dr. Newton Fisher, head of the department of otolaryngology in the School of Medicine here; Mrs. Elizabeth Aid, chief anesthesist, Watts Hospital, Durham, and Miss Anne Casstevens, operating room clinical instructor, N. C. Baptist Hospital, Winston-Salem.

A problem clinic on sterilization with representatives from three companies will be held today to close the course.

Sale of blazers on campus, to start sometime near the middle of spring semester, will include an assortment of women's blazers. The project will be sponsored by the Interdormitory Council.

Cost of the women's coat, which has a UNC seal on the pocket, will range from $18.95 to $26.95. Women's coats will be available in a variety of colors.

Men's coats, originally announced to sell for $26.95, will be sold at an introductory price of $25.95. Colors will be charcoal gray and navy blue.

Robert Rawling's Blazer Co. will begin custom fitting both men's and women's blazers in early February.

A Place In The Sun For WUNC

Our Barbara Willard, using a large hunk of this page today, tells the story of the student-operated FM radio station, WUNC. We can add little to her reporting, except to wish WUNC all the good fortune that can come to educational stations — continued high quality programming, a higher tower, more power, and a place, someday, in the financial sun. It is unthinkable that a University enterprise as meaningful and beneficial to the area as WUNC should continue to operate without a formal budget.

Thousands of dollars are being spent on WUNC's educational big brother, WUNC-TV (with which WUNC has no connection) and it is reasonable to hope that some money may soon drift down to the radio station. WUNC, as anyone who has ever listened to its informative, engaging programs will testify, will put it to good use.

The Drop Toward The Nadir

Some 100 interested students went down to the Library Assembly Room one night last week to hear men from the State and Navy Departments talk on "Careers in Public Service."

Largely, the program was uneventful. But we sat up in our seats when someone asked about what he called "the muddled state" of foreign service. Our interest subsided rapidly when we heard a canned, obscure line. The man from the State Department admitted that perhaps things are "muddled." Elaborate, he would not.

One student asked, with oblique references to the recent humiliating experience of Wolf Ladejinsky, whether being of foreign extraction (a perculiar phrase in the U-S.) would hinder one in public service. The answer he got was at best equivocal, lacking form and meaning. The usual "brochures" were mentioned, but little else.

Even the outgoing Republican chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee (a good friend of Secretary of State Dulles) admitted in a recent report that morale in the foreign service is dropping toward nadir. He warned that the factors lying beneath the "demoralization" of foreign offices must be combed out and eliminated.

But we assume that as long as the public —particularly students with interest in foreign service—get unsignificant answers to their questions, morale will continue at or near zero.

Familiar Misquotations

We reached for Bartlett's Familiar Quotations yesterday to settle an argument. Shakespeare never wrote. "Alas, poor Yorick! I knew him well." It's "I knew him, Horatio." And, thumbing through the dog-eared old book, we have ascertained some other familiar misquotations. Thomas Jefferson, for example, never said a word in the Declaration of Independence about "inalienable rights." It's a Twentieth Century corruption of the "unalienable rights" with which each man is endowed by his Creator. What's more, Ogden Nash did not write, "Men seldom make passes at girls who wear glasses." (It was Dorothy Parker, who, incidentally, did not write, "Candy is dandy but liquor is quicker." It was Ogden Nash.) And bless our soul, Admiral Farragut never hollered "Damn the torpedoes! Full speed ahead!" What he really exclaimed at Mobile Bay, says Bartlett, was a good deal less euphonious. Just "Damn the torpedoes! Go ahead!" Further, (and here our trusty old volume shook us to the core) it is suggested that Nathan Bedford Forrest, an educated Confederate, did not say, "I git thar fustest with the mostest" or anything so rustic. More likely, the General delivered a cool, calculated summation: "I simply arrive at the front first, and with a larger group of men."

Let's Have A Reasonable Exam Schedule

Louis Kraar

WHY CAN'T the University have a more reasonable approach to exams?

As the semesterly purge draws near and students begin to notice the exam schedules, one thing becomes ominously clear. Classes end on Thursday, and exams start Friday morning. There simply isn't enough time for students who have a Friday morning exam to prepare.

Last spring I mentioned this shortcoming to an administration member. His answer was that since the exam schedule is released so early, students can plan their study for those early exams.

What that administrator did not realize was that during this last week professors have to fly in order to finish their course material. The press of daily assignments is heavier, and there is little time for exam study.

WHAT THE University really needs is a week for reading and studying between the last day of classes and the first day of exams.

The stock administration answer for that is that students wouldn't use the week for study. But this overlooks the fact that as many would study as do under the present system.

Assuming that exams are a necessary part of academic life and that they give students a good look at what they've learned in a course, it only seems logical that they should be given time to prepare for them.

This reporter would like to plead "consolidation." That's what the administration used when they argued for Saturday classes. State and WC have Saturday classes, and Chapel Hill doesn't—that was their argument.

Well, over at our sister institution in Greensboro, the gals don't start exams until the Monday after their last classes on Saturday. This gives them a day between the end of classes and exams—a day more than Chapel Hill gets, a good day for studying.

But soon exams will be over, and students will quit complaining—until spring. Must be a heartening thought for the sloppy-thinking men who draw up the exam schedule.

SIX WC girls got bored one day last week, so they threw a cocktail party in the gameroom of Elliott Hall, WC's student union.

The girls hurried to town in the early afternoon to purchase cocktail glasses at 19 cents each. Then they scurried back to their dorms to dress in slick cocktail dresses and fur capes.

After the usual gab of a cocktail party and a round or two of drinks, the group called it quits for the day. Everyone agreed that it was the best cocktail party they'd ever been to at WC.

Incidentally, the drinks were cheaper than the 19-cent glasses. The girls had cokes.

AFTER YEARS of advertisements with movie stars proclaiming the quality of products and services, the ad hucksters have finally turned back to the old masters of words.

Take the current issue of "The New Yorker," for example. Rand-McNally, a company that maps the world, has a writer called Thomas Wolfe doing the copy. Actually, it's a quote from a book called "Of Time And The River," and the passage is most appropriate.

Who knows, you might even make the ad pages these days if you write a great work.

And Without A Budget

Students Run Campus FM Station, WUNC

By Barbara Willard

"FM is to radio like stereophonic sound is to movies," according to Carl Venters, radio major and assistant manager of WUNC. This radio station, whose studio is situated in the basement of Swain Hall, started operations in November, 1952, with little fanfare, but it has, nevertheless, gained an enthusiastic audience.

John Young, station manager, summarized the aim of the station as "an attempt to provide a broadcast service not usually available."

WUNC is a non-commercial, educational FM station, licensed to the University of North Carolina. For those many students who inquire as to why it is not an AM station, there's a simple explanation. The Federal Commerce Commission has set aside certain FM channels for non-commercial, educational use. FCC regulations for these stations are lax in that they can operate any hours during the day or night on these channels. AM stations, on the other hand have minimum day time and night time hours.

WUNC is entirely student-staffed and operated. One half to two thirds of its staff is in the Department of Radio and the rest in other fields. Mr. Young says the students "are not just figureheads; they run the station."

No Budget

This station has many different and outstanding features, but perhaps the most unusual thing about it is that it has no budget.

The idea for a University-owned radio station was first conceived in 1949, and the chance to put the idea to work came in 1950. In that year, WMIT, the powerful FM station on top of Mt. Mitchell, offered to sell to the University its stand-by transmitter for $1,000.

The administration had no objection to the purchase, nor did it have any money for it. The Communication Center, a non-academic production organization on campus, bought the transmitter and has since taken care of some pressing needs. Other than that, there's no budget.

Mr. Young says, "We went on the air quietly, through the maze of early problems ... We kept it a modest effort; so that what we did, we would do well."

Under FCC regulations, "anything that educates" is an educational station; so a student-staffed FM station can produce almost any kind of program. Since the students themselves have all the administrative and operational duties, their work and experience is an educational function of the station.

An alumnus donated 200 12-inch standard 78 RPM record albums of classical music. These were the record library for the first year. The first operational period gained a small audience and little response for the station.

Local Programs

Two improvements were made in 1953, in the form of local programs and additions to the record library.

In that year, such programs as Chancellor House's "Tar Heel Voices," YMCA programs, broadcasts from departments and sports broadcasts, became a part of the broadcast time, "at 91.5 on your FM dial."

RCA Victor agreed to let them have its record service, usually offered only to commercial stations. This included every RCA release in 1953, 100 12-inch record programs for only $50. It was more than $1,000 worth of records. Of course, $50 might as well be $1,000 when there was no money at all.

Finally, Jinx Robertson, a student in the School of Journalism at that time, provided the money for the service.

Increased Power

This year, still without a budget, the station has made forward steps.

They have brought to their audience outstanding special events programs, including Rise Stevens, Alec Templeton, North Carolina Symphony Orchestra, Aldous Huxley, Estes Kefauver and many other events. The broadcast of the First Piano Quartet was the first radio broadcast of this group. In years past, Bennett Cerf, Robert Frost and other have given programs over WUNC.

An increase in power from a 1600 watt transmitter to a 16,000-watt transmitter is an important advancement for the station. This new ransmitter is a gift from WBT, WBTV in Charlotte, owned by Jefferson Standard Broadcasting Company.

Mr. Young says application has been made to FCC for permission to use the new transmitter, and there should be no difficulty in getting permission.

During broadcast time, which is seven days a week, 7 p.m. to 11:30 p.m., the station can be received on any FM radio within a 20-mile radius. With certain antennas, listeners within a 35-mile area receive WUNC, and it has been received as far away as Mt. Mitchell. The new transmitter will provide a stronger signal for the area.

Need Height

The present antenna is only 78 feet off the ground, and it should be at least 500 feet. Mr. Young explained that FM travels in a straight line and will not bend over the horizon. A higher antenna would give a clear signal at a 60 to 70 mile distance.

This year Columbia offered WUNC their record service, including all classical and popular LP releases, for $60.

To secure this valuable service, the staff contributed the $60 themselves. This staff receives no compensation but experience for their services. They are part of a tight organization that carries out all work involved in operating a radio station.

Mr. Young explained that each fall it is just like starting a new station. A new staff has to be selected and trained as it works.

The student manager is appointed by Mr. Young and the former student manager. The student manager then appoints the department heads. Auditions for staff members are held, and students are interviewed and screened for the jobs.

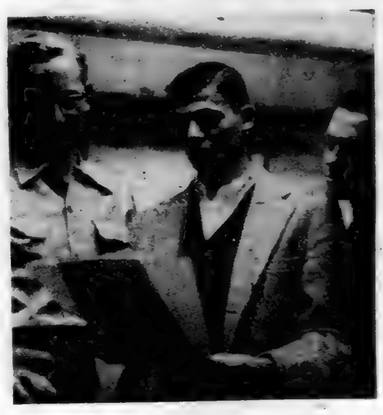
Venters says, as student manager, he has learned "good taste and good judgment, plus the administrative duties of operating a radio station."

Campus Coverage

The big step, this year or next, Mr. Young says, will be to "add to the present WUNC organization a carrier current or 'wired wireless' transmitter, similar to the set up at Duke, Wake Forest or State. This would give campus coverage that could be picked up on any receiver."

With this transmitter, the station could carry on double-programing, continuing their usual high quality programs and carrying also a lighter program. The present staff of about 35, however, is not large enough for double-programming. It may still be possible to install this type of transmitter so that the present programming could be picked up on any receiver on campus.

WUNC produces a wide variety of shows, from Phillips Russell's news commentary to Evening Masterwork, a program of classical music from 10:05 to 11:30 p. m., "not only played by but bought by the students." FM, which is static-free, lends itself to high quality, especially in music.



Aside from locally-produced shows and special events broadcasts, programs are provided through the British Broadcasting Corporation, the French Broadcasting System, the Canadian Broadcasting System and other foreign companies, including ones in Belgium and the Netherlands.

The National Association of Educational Broadcasters, the NAEB, provides programs through a tape network.

'Glowing Reactions'

Although WUNC receives relatively few letters, Mr. Young says in over 300 letters there has been no protest, but only "glowing reactions." These letters, though few in number, come from an enthusiastic audience of people who enjoy quality in radio listening.

WUNC, Mr. Yohng and the students who carry on the work have succeeded in their aim, "an attempt to provide a broadcast service not usually available."

Can't Do That To George

The Greensboro Daily News

Somebody in Chapel Hill got bit by a collie, as we understand it, and so the police picked up a gentle old collie named George with the idea that George's execution would serve as an example to other dogs.

Immediately, of sourse, George had his defenders. Among them was Paul Smith, owner of the Intimate Bookshop where George used to browse. He (Mr. Smith that is) wrote the Chapel Hill Weekly:

"It seems to me that something rather fine about the kindly, humane tradition of Chapel Hill is about to get kicked around in the matter of George, the Campus Collie.

"For four years the bookshop has been one of the stops on George's rounds. I've seen him pushed and accidentally stepped on, but I've never seen him bite anyone. He is not a biting dog.

"But he's in clink. Somebody was bitten by a collie, and George was picked up because, being the friendly sort of dog he is, he was the easiest collie to pick up. Now, as I understand it, even the person who was bit says it wasn't George who bit him. But, says the chief of police, George must go."

Well, all we can say to the Chapel Hill police force (and that goes for the mayor and board of aldermen too) is that they better look out. They can't do that to George.

Old George's way of life may have fallen into the sere, the yellow leaf, but that which should accompany old age, as honor, love, obedience, troops of friends, he still may look to have. Old George has got it all over Macbeth. They'd better let him out so that he can pursue his accustomed rounds including a look-in on the literary life at the Intimate Bookshop. Otherwise their name is mud.

I wish to take exception to the letter from Bill Sisk in your YOU Said It column this week.

As a freshman at Carolina, I am impressed by the editorials, articles and columns in The Daily Tar Heel and I expect to be equally impressed by their worth when I graduate. I do not know of any other college paper which gives its campus as good coverage or as intelligent writing as your newspaper does. I certainly did not expect to find a paper with features like Herblock and Pogo when I came to the University, either. And the sports page, despite its little size because of too many ads on some days, is interesting and readable.

Just keep up the good work and don't let sarcastic letters like Bill Sisk's deter you.

UNC Builds Big Lead, Holds State To Win, 84-80

M'G'hee To Go For Fifth Win Today

By AL KORSCHUN

Senior Pete McGehee, seeking his fifth straight victory in as many starts, will lead a sophomore-dominated Tar Heel wrestling team into action against North Carolina State in Raleigh today at 4:30.

McGehee will be put to his stiffest test of the season when he wrestles State's captain Don Tomlin in what will probably be the hardest fought match of the day. The Wolfpack will be favored to beat the winless Tar Heels by virtue of having beaten both Davidson and Wake Forest while losing only to a strong Virginia team.

However, UNC coach Sam Barnes expressed some optimism and hope of an upset. As he pointed out, "For the past three years we were favored and they beat us; this year they're favored so maybe we can turn the tables on them."

Hugh Barwick, who missed the Citadel meet because of a shoulder injury, will return to the lineup at the 167 lb. class, and Charlie Boyette will drop down to the 157 lb. class replacing Arthur Gregory. Other than these changes, the Carolina lineup will be the same as it was for last week's Citadel match.

Starting Quint In Whole Game; Team Still First In Conference

Wolfpack's Shavlik Tallies 32 Points; Rosie Scores 22; 'Pack Tumbles To Fourth In ACC

By BERNIE WEISS

DTH Sports Editor

North Carolina's Tar Heels retained their Atlantic Coast Conference lead, stretched their winning streak to five games, and snapped a six-loss skein to N. C. State last night as they defeated the Wolfpack in the Reynolds Coliseum in Raleigh, 84-80.

Carolina's starting five played the whole game without substitution.

Immediately after the upset the team lifted Coach Frank McGuire to its collective shoulders and the beaming mentor cut down both meshes from the hoops. It was only McGuire's second victory over State, and it was only Carolina's second win over their Raleigh cousins since Everett Case took over the coaching reins there in 1947.

It was the first time State had lost at the Coliseum in 13 games.

Len Rosenbluth led the Carolina scoring with a total of 22 points. Al Lifson and Jerry Vayda tallied 19 each. Tony Radovich poured in 16 and Bob Young scored eight.

State's Ronnie Shavlik, however, took high-point honors for the night when he hung up 32. Vic Molodet, who sparked a second-half State rally which almost proved the Tar Heels' undoing, scored 20.

State had the lead in the game only 35 seconds. After the opening minutes, when the game was tied up two times, State went ahead 6-4. But 35 seconds later Len Rosenbluth tied it up again. Two more shots from outside by Rosenbluth and the Tar Heels went out front once more, never to be headed.

Rosenbluth tallied 10 of UNc's first 16 points.

After this Carolina slowly kept edging out front. With eight minutes left in the half the Tar Heels led, 24-16. Vayda and Lifson found the range often enough to stretch the lead still further and at intermission it was 46-30. Just prior to half-time the winners led by 20 points.

State, which had started the game playing a collapsing zone, had switched to a full-court press toward the end of the half but it was to no avail.

The Wolfpack continued to press in the second half, and it began to pay off, though not fast enough. State Coach Everett Case saw his men whittle down the lead but he also saw the clock running out, and the clock won.

The game was a rough-and-tumble affair all the way. Climbing on backs, elbowing and pushing was not uncommon. Referee Arnold Heft claimed it was one of the toughest games he has ever worked.

The loss dropped State, second-ranked team in the nation, to fourth position in the conference. Carolina now is asured of the league lead for at least a short period, having a 7-1 record.

The Wolfpack, which had to rally late last Saturday to beat Wake Forest, showed none of the polish it possesses during the first half. The team shot for only 23.4 percent from the floor, while Carolina was shooting 54.6.

Purdue-Notre Dame Grid Series To Run Until 1958

Guy Mackey, Purdue athletic director, announced today the two universities have signed another two-year contract to extend the series.

Games are already scheduled between the two teams in 1955 and 1956.

Al Lifson's Consistency Propelled Carolina Five To Conference Lead

Al Lifson, the backcourt ace of the Carolina basketball team, has been selected as "Athlete of the Week" by The Daily Tar-Heel sports staff.

Last week Lifson spread 46 points over three Atlantic Coast Conference games, two of which were on the road, and provided the leadership and steadiness required for Carolina to sweep all three games and grab the conference lead.

While the entire team deserves the highest praise, Lifson drew the sportswriters' nod because of his ability to take charge at just the right moment with a timely pass or score.

Al, in his fourth season in the squad, is co-captain and the floor general of Coach Frank McGuire's "free lance offensive." In his four years, Al has scored close to 1300 points which makes him the highest scorer in Carolina's history.

"Zip," as he is called by his teammates, always draws the opponent's highest scoring backcourt man in the defensive assignments, handling such men as Bud Wilkinson and Bill Yarborought last week.

Lifson, a 6'-1" guard, was closely followed in the voting by Lennie Ronsenbluth, Jerry Vadya, Tony Radovich and Bob Young.

Quigg, In Last Game, Racks Up 18 Tallies; Win Is 12th In 13 Confests For Tar Babies

By RAY LINKER

Carolina's freshmen basketballers jumped into a quick lead and went on to defeat the N. C. State Wolflets, 80-70, in the preliminary to the exciting Tar Heel victory in the varsity scrap in Reynolds Coliseum last night.

The Tar Babies opened fast and built up a 12-point lead by the middle of the first half on the point-production performances of Tom Kearns, Pete Brennan, and Joe Quigg. Kearns ended the half with 17 tallies, and went on to amass a total of 26 markers on 12 field goals and two free throws to become high scorer for the game.

Center Joe Quigg made 10 of 11 free throws and tossed in four field goals to garner 18 points in his last freshman performance. He is in his second semester in the University, and will retire for a semester from the basketball scene before joining the varsity squad in order to play three full seasons with them.

The Wolflets were trailing by twelve with eight minutes remaining in the first half, but managed to cut the lead to 42-34, a six point spread, by intermission. They came back after the rest period and with a goal by George Stephanovich and two free throws by Bucky Walker brought the lead down to two. Walker pumped in a jump shot to tie the game at 46-all. The Wolflets went ahead a few minutes later by one point.

Davis Serves As WC-TV Director

By BIFF ROBERTS

When WUNC-TV, channel 4, brought David M. Davis to Grensboro from Washington, D. C. to serve as program director of the Woman's College studio, it found a man who possessed a rare combination of youth and experience.

Those two factors were extremely important in the successful introduction of the University of North Carolina's educational television station during this past week.

Although Dave has had experience in almost every phase of television and radio work, he won't turn 29 until March 23.

A native of St. Charles, Ill., Dave received an AB in Music Education from Northwestern Univeri s yt anad ETAOI SHET MM iversity and a M. S. degree from the University of Pennsylvania. Since his graduation from Northwestern in 1947, he has had vast experience in both radio and television—as a teacher, producer, director, and musician.

His first job after college came with WFIL in Philadelphia where he directed several radio productions. He affiliated with WFIL-TV when that came on the air, becoming an associate director of he "Paul Whiteman Show" for ABC.

He got a taste of educational television while at WFIL-TV as director of the station's "University of the Air" program in 1951. This experience helped him greatly in his job of production supervisor of Michigan State College television the following year.

Moving to Washington he joined WMAL-TV as producer-director. After six short months he was promoted to senior producer of both WMAL and WMAL-TV, a job he held immediately before coming to WUNC-TV.

But producing and directing have not been his only loves. While in Philadelphia he taught several radio, television, and music courses at Temple University. At Michigan State he conducted a graduate seminar in television production, and even in Washington he directed a "television workshop" at the WMAL studios.

While at Northwestern he had played the trumpet and trombone in the University band and symphony orchestra.

Since then he has arranged music and directed and produced musical presentations for the theatre as well as radio and television.

This great versatility has been apparent in the short time since he joined the Woman's College studio staff. It was significant that his studio presented the first "live" program when WUNC-TV came on the air last Saturday. The Grensboro presentation, "Prelude", a half-hour song and dance program, was well received throughout the State.

Costa Rica Rebel Leader Not A Revolutionary Says Couple

CHARLOTTE, Jan. 18 (AP) — Teodoro Picado Jr., leader of the rebel forces in Costa Rica's vest-pocket war, is known to a Charlotte couple as anything but a hot-headed revolutionary.

They recall him instead as a handsome young businessman, perhaps dressed in a red plaid shirt and white trousers, leaning on the hood of a flashy Mercedes automobile he's trying to sell to a Managua customer.

They describe him as no radical, but a calm, sensible person.

Mr. and Mrs. R. V. Blackwood know the young rebel leader well. Blackwood worked for him in Central America from May, 1952, to August, 1953, and they have entertained him in their home here. The relationship began when Blackwood, a textile machinery dealer, sold an order to a Nicaraguan firm managed by Picado and went to Managua to put the machinery into operation. Picado had gone to Managua for political asylum after completing his education at West Point. In 1948 his father was ousted as Costa Rica's president and the family fled the country.

Young Picado has a Mercedes dealership and an interest in a paint store in Managua in addition to working for the textile firm.

"You wouldn't get a picture of a revolutionist if you knew Ted," says Mrs. Blackwood, "for he is a sane, very good businessman. I think you would have thought his father would have tried to regain control, but I am frankly a little surprised to learn Ted's role."

She pictures Picado as "colorful and gay, youthful, a lot of fun on a party, a wonderful dancer." She also remembers him as a family man with two young daughters and another child expected soon. His wife is from Los Angeles.

Mrs. Blackwood says he plays chess well, drinks gallons of orange juice, likes native beer and imported liquors, and has told them he misses American football games since leaving this country.

Louis "Satchmo" Armstrong, who will return to the UNC campus on Feb. 10, is shown with his famous trumpet. Armstrong is being sponsored by Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity. All proceeds from the concert will go to the March of Dimes.

Tickets for the event, which will be held from 8 to 10 p.m. in Memorial Hall, are now on sale for $1.50. They are being sold in Y Court, Town & Campus, Carolina Theater, and the ATO House.

Armstrong made his last appearance on this campus for the German Club dances last spring. His well-known variations on the jazz and blues themes were exceptionally well received at that time.

Frank Roddey, president of the German Club, has announced the signing of Earl Bostic and his orchestra to play for the Winter Germans concert on the afternoon of Feb. 12.

After being at first associated with Hot Lips Page and then with Lionel Hamption, Bostic formed his own band in 1938. Following World War II, during which he played for Uncle Sam, Bostic returned to the music world.

In the most recent Down Beat poll, he was found to be the leading band personality in the rhythm and blues section.

State Senator C. S. Weeks Polls Teachers

RALEIGH, Jan. 18 (AP) — Edgecombe's Sen. Cameron S. Weeks said today he is polling urban and rural school teachers, both white and Negro, in his county on whether they prefer "adequate but separate public schools."

At Sen. Weeks' behest, Edgecombe school Supt. E. D. Johnson sent out letters to the county teachers of both races sometime ago. The letter asked teachers to signify how they felt about the issue.

Sen. Weeks said his poll was "incomplete" and returns are not yet available. He added he has extended it to cover white and Negro teachers in city units as well as those in the county. Originally, only Negroes were polled.

The letter from Johnson's office said names did not have to be signed to the qustionnaires, and it was not "intended to embarrass anyone or put you on the spot." It also gave the purpose of the poll:

"In order that as a representative of the people.. I, ..may better be able to carry out my duties as such with special reference to the question of the recent U S. Last One

Today's issue of The Daily Tar Heel will be the last until next semester.

Sorry!

If you didn't get your Daily Tar Heel yesterday it was because the paper's truck got marooned in a snow bank near Cobb Dorm while making its early morning rounds.

The paper circulation staff, when they couldn't get the truck out, took several large piles of Wednesday's issue to Lenoir Hall and other central points on campus where they hoped you would find them.

And if the paper seems to be lacking its customary zing, it's because Managing Editor Fred Powledge, who handles page one layout, has cracked under the strain and is bedded down at the University Infirmary with flu. City Editor Jerry Reece and News Editor Jackie Goodman have filled in on yesterdays and today's newspaper.

Winter Wonderland Arrives On Campus During The Night

The steps of South Building (top) were covered with snow early yesterday morning, but a path was soon cleared for South Building traffic.

The University's tractor (bottom) was kept pretty busy yesterday clearing the campus walks of snow which had covered them completely.

Classes Continue But Absences Excused; Woolens Donned And Snowballs Thrown

Carolina students awoke yesterday morning to a real winter wonderland.

The campus was already covered heavily with snow at 7 a.m., and a continuing fall promised even more reason to bring out boots and heavy clothes to keep warm.

University classes were held yesterday in spite of the snowfall, however, Chancellor Robert B. House said that excuses would be granted for all absences. According to a spokesman from Chapel Hill High School, classes in all Orange County public schools were called off yesterday due to the storm.

Consequently, students from grammer school to college age were seen dressed in their warmest clothes having snowball fights all the way from the streets of Chapel Hill to Y-Court.

According to the Weather Bureau at the Raleigh Durham Airport, the cause of the snow started way down south near the coast of Louisiana. An employee of the Bureau said yesterday that it was caused by a low pressure storm which moved northeast from the Louisiana coast through Georgia and South Carolina, reaching this area late Tuesday night.

While the storm was passing over Georgia and South Carolina, according to the Weather Bureau spokesman, it was causing only rain. However, it met with cold air coming from the north, and when it reached North Carolina the precipitation changed first to sleet and then to snow about half an hour after it hit the area.

The Bureau employee said that yesterday the storm was off of the North Carolina coast and was moving northeast. According to him, the snowfall here was due to diminish yesterday afternoon, with perhaps a few flurries continuing until last night.

The total snowfall expected yesterday by the Weather Bureau was eight to 10 inches with 7 inches having already fallen by noon yesterday.

The temperature durng the snowfall yesterday rose from 28 degrees in the early morning to 30 around noon and was not expected to go above 32 degrees all day by the Bureau. The Bureau spokesman forecast colder temperatures for last night and today.

Most of the rest of North Carolina received snow from the storm also, according to the Bureau. The spokesman said that the fall was light in the western part of the state and heaviest in the area from Chapel Hill, Durham and Raleigh northward to Elizabeth City.

South Building Besieged

Snowbound

RALEIGH, Jan. 19 (AP) —Four-foot Billy Arthur, former newspaper publisher who now resides in Chapel Hill, commutes to Raleigh daily to assume his duties as Reading Clerk for the House of Representatives.

But today Arthur couldn't make it.

"Sorry I can't be with you gentlemen," said Uzzell, "I'm up to my hips in snow."

The storm of snow balls bouncing from the wall of South Building yesterday testifies to that fact.

The seige, reminiscent of French bastille days, occurred around 4 o'clock when a swarm of gentlemen from the residences of upper quad streamed down Cameron avenue, armed to the teeth with the white pellets, and hurled their harmless ammunition at the administration's home.

The cause of it all was the capture of an over-enthusiastic snowballer by the police. His comrades followed him to the doors of South and then waited for him to re-appear.

Then apparently tiring of the attack on South, the nearly 300 strong mob charged one of the coed's homes, Carr Dormitory. It was then that the men in blue halted the horseplay.

Med School Candidates Should Take May Test

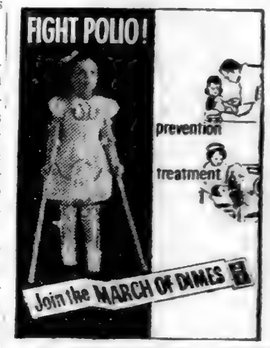
Candidates for admission to medical school in the fall of 1956 are advised to take the Medical College Admission Test in May, it was announced by the Educational Testing Service which prepares and administer the test for the Association of American Medical College..

These tests, required of applicants by almost every medical college throughiut the country, will be given twice during the current calendar year. Candidates aking the May test, however, will be able to furnish scores to institutions in early fall, when many medical colleges begin the selection of their next entering class.

Candidates may take the MCAT on Saturday, May 7, 1955, or on Monday, Oct. 31, 1955, at administrations to be held at more than 300 local centers in all parts of the country. The Association of American Medical Colleges recommends that candidates for admission to classes starting in the fall of 1956 take the May test.

The MCAT consists of tests of general scholastic ability, a test on understanding of modern society and an achievement test in science. According to ETS, no special preparation other than a review of science subjects is necessary. All questions are of the objective type.

March Of Dimes Campaign Will Continue After Exams



The annual March of Dimes drive on the campus will not reach its peak until after examnations, according to E. C. Smith, director of the drive in Orange County. Then the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity will canvas the dormitories and fraternity houses, and the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity will bring Louis Armstrong and his All-Stars to the campus for a concert, with all profits going to the March of Dimes.

The Pikas have postponed their campus drive until early February so that there will be no interference with study for the final exams Plans aren't complete yet, but it is expected that the Pikas will conduct a door-to-door drive in most of the men's dormitories and fraternities.

The Louis Armstrong jazz concert will be in Memorial Hall on Thursday night, February 10, from 8 to 10 o'clock. Tickets are on sale for $1.50 each at the Graham Memorial, the Carolina Theatre, Town and Campus, the Carolina Sport Shop, the Y-Court, and at the A.T.O. house. Noel Sullivan is chairman of the A.T.O. concert committee.

The goal in Orange County this year is $12,000. Mr. Smith says that the goal can be reached if everyone on the campus will join everyone in the county in giving as much as he or she possibly can to aid in the fight against polio.

Four polio cases were reported in Orange County last summer, and one of those was a student. None of the cases were serious.

Three Posts Left By Crohn

The graduation of Max (Sonny) Crohn from the University into the Navy has created three vacancies in student government offices.

Crohn was chairman of Consolidated University Student Council; University Party floorleader, and member of the Student-Faculty Bookstore Committee. At the end of the semester, he will be graduated from the University and will go into the U. S. Navy.

The White Curse

Something there is that doesn't love exams.

It was two days before exams last year that Chapel Hill's last big snow came, and, like this one, by dead of night.

You'd think crammers didn't have enough whiteness. Book pages, full of black strings of math symbols, Latin, English, history or economics, are still white. Notebooks, be they replete with long blue curlicues of Political Science 41 or Psychology 238, are white. You look at whiteness all day inside; and there's no relief through that door, friend. Outside, it's still white.

But if you think your own stacks of white papers and white notebooks and your own white outdoors merit a tear, squeeze out a bigger one for our managing editor.

He's flat on his back with flu amid the stifling, antiseptic whiteness of the sheets, uniforms and ceilings of Medical Hill.

Plaudits

The Wesley Foundation, by a thumping 183 ballot, this week declared racial segregation a denial of "true Christian brotherhood." In so doing, the student Methodists carved another chip from the hard trunk of prejudice on the campus. We commend the Wesley Foundation members for the search to which they have submitted their minds and for the decision they have reached.

Careful With That Studying, Intellectuals

Louis Kraar

NOW THAT the campus has taken to the pursuits of the mind (aided by coffee and No-Doze), the word "intellectual" doesn't have that hard, derogatory sound to it.

But unfortunately, after the exams are over, it will once again become an expression accompanied often by a sneer. The truth of the matter is that — even on this campus — intellectualism has become something at which many grimace.

Recently, the campus YWCA passed out a mimeographed sheet with topics for a discussion group. At the bottom in capital letters it said: "Are you free to discuss your views on segregation? . . . Is the faculty free to express personal beliefs in class? . . . Do YWCA activities interfere with the freedom of other campus and community organizations?"

Several girls, arriving late, took a glimpse at the sheet and immediately assumed it was a communist handout.

There was nothing political about the sheet — it was just controversial. At the top it said: "Your Fredom is in Trouble." And perhaps it is.

WOMANS COLLEGE Professor Randall Jarrell, a writer of some note as well as an intellectual, discusses the plight of "The Intellectual In America" in the current issue of "Mademoiselle" magazine.

"Most of us seem to distrust intellectuals as such, to feel that they must be abnormal or else they wouldn't be intellectual," the WC professor writes.

Professor Jarrell points to other ages in the past when knowledge and intellect were respected.

Today in politics, Dean Acheson is attacked because he has gone to Harvard. And even little children hate nonconformity, according to this professor. A little girl told her parents about a boy in her class that was different. When the parents asked what was wrong with him, the little girl answered: "He wears corduroys instead of blue jeans."

The irony of all this feeling against intellectuals is that we're all intellectuals about something, as Jarrell points out.

"The man who will make us see what we haven't seen, feel what we haven't felt, understand what we haven't understood — he is our best friend. And if he knows more than we know about something, that is an invitation to us, not an indictment of him either: it takes all sorts of people to make a world — to make, even, a United States of America," Professor Jarrell concludes.

This reporter can say little more except nod in firm agreement, and hope that this campus will not deny controversy and the right to differ to its students.

Having gone to bed early with a pre-exam headache, Franklin Street looked so different yesterday morning that I wondered just how long I had slept.

With a bag full of dirty clothes (thrown over my back in Santa Claus fashion), I headed down the main street expecting to hear strains of "White Christmas" from Kemp's Record Shop.

Stopping to duck a snow ball. I heard music coming from a record shop further up the street. Edging over to the shop window, to dodge the snowball and hear the music at the same time, I caught the tune.

The music was probably as appropriate as "White Christmas" or "Winter Wonderland." The song was "Cocktails For Two."

Coffee in the Y was good.

A Basis For Hope In Indonesia

JAKARTA, Indonesia. — The news from Indonesia is both negative and unspecific, thus breaking two old newspaper rules; but it is still important news. In brief, the Communist danger here is nothing like so serious as it has often been painted in the last year.

To besure, Indonesian politics have a quality all their own. Everything happens slowly. Everything is indeterminate. A crisis that would tear another country apart in a week can last a couple of months here, and produce no very clear result when it is over. And all this makes analysis pretty difficult.

Yet the fact remains that there is little in the picture here to justify the pessimism about the Indonesian future that is so often voiced in Washington. On the contrary, if world communism is not flabbily permitted to take over the rest of Asia, there is every reason to feel hopeful about this remarkable new nation of 80,000,000 people, with its beautiful land, its vast untapped resources and its immense future possibilities.

Among the Indonesian people, 90 per cent of them devout Moslems, the Communists have gained no mass base except in the labor unions in the biggest towns. They are tolerated and Communist political support is accepted by the government of Prime Minister Ali Sastroamidjojo; but they have not yet got their hands on the police, the Army, or any other vital lever of power.

When this reporter was in Jakarta a little more than a year ago, the Army seemed to be in danger. The only seriously suspect character in the present government, Defense Minister Iwa Kusumasumantri was seeking to get the Army under his personal control. And this attempt was causing a major crisis that filled all Jakarta with rumors of violence to come.

The crisis ended with the semi-retirement of one of Indonesia's most impressive leaders, the former Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces, Gen. Simatupang. But the way was still not opened to Communist penetration of the armed forces. The factions in the Army have drawn together, if anything, because of the political attempts to play one faction against another. The Army remains a powerful anti-Communist force.

Meanwhile Prime Minister Ali's government, whose good faith on this point has been unfairly attacked, is now seriously preparing the first national election. Both Ali and President Sukarno are firmly pledged to holding the election this year, and it will probably come in late July or early August.

That means that the present artificial situation, in which all politics center in a Parliament of arbitrarily appointed deputies, will shortly come to a welcome end. The people will have their chance to speak. There will be a chance for a more vigorous and confident attack on Indonesia's many difficult problems, among which the economic problem bulks particularly large. And as the national problems begin to be solved, the Communist danger should recede still further.

There are still evry real difficulties ahead, of course. One of the most unpleasing characteristics of Dutch imperialism, which was generally unpleasing, was the extreme restriction of education. When the Indonesian Republic was established, 93 per cent of the people were illiterate, and the group of men with full, modern, Western education numbered no more than a few thousand.

However patriotic they may be, illiterates cannot administer one of the biggest nations of the modern world. The task of Indonesia's small group of adequately trained leaders has been back breaking. The wonder is not that progress in Indonesia has been relatively slow. The wonder is, rather, that the nation has survived and gone forward.

These facts mean, in turn, that any judgment of this country has to be sympathetic in order to be realistic. When the beginning was so inordinately hard, a bad end cannot be predicted just because there are initial falterings. Men like Prime Minister Ali and President Sukarno should not be judged pro-Communist, because their present attitude toward Indonesian communism seems alarmingly amiable to many Americans.

Every brand new nation always has two traits. It is irrationally touchy and suspicious, as any reader of our own early history will surely have observed. And it needs time and more time and still more time to develop its own national political forms, its own characteristic national life and its own ways of doing world business.

If these things are remembered, and Indonesia is given both time and sympathy, this country can one day become one of the great powers of the free world. But whether the time will be allowed, directly depends on what the responsible leaders of the free world do about the Communist advance in the rest of Asia.

Spring In The Snow; Mike Says Goodbye

(Mike Furuhata is a Japanese student in the University who next week begins his return trip to Japan. He has submitted his farewell to Chapel Hill in the form of a Japanese poem. It follows, translated. — Editor.)

Two winters ago aimlessly I drifted here like a puff of white cloud out of the infinite sky,
There was no friend for company, no echo rebounded at the sound of my voice.
Day after day I rested on the crest of high waves of hopes.
Having survived the frosts of winter, I was destined to enjoy the intoxication of flowers of spring.
The hot summer winds chastened and consoled me, preparing me for the love I then found beneath the autumn leaves.
After a year my solitude left me, and even the squirrels were my friends.
Now in a winter scene or loneliness and harsh wind, without a flower to brighten the world,
My heart, oblivious of that around me, fills with hope for the future and gratitude for those whom I will soon see no more.
Spring has returned to my soul, and joy and happiness permeate me.

Some Original Column Ideas For Mr. Sisk

David Mundy

Yes, things are really rough during these last days before 'the days of the last judgement.' It appears that the DTH readers, real or imagined, are having a more unpleasant time than the DTH columnists, real or imagined.

And when letter writer Bill Sisk is forced into subscribing to the Raleigh News and Observer, it is a sure sign that the end of the journalistic rope is being reached.

To prevent such subscriptions becoming more common, I for one would offer to become more interesting. But about what? Mr. Sisk's 'a few arguments and controversies about life in general'?

Now here are some nice, "original" arguments and controversies: "Should Communist China be admitted to the UN?" "Coed Drinking," "Solitude vs. Society," "The Philosophy of Leucippus as opposed to that of Bergson," "Should Chancellor House be censured for appearing on TV?" and "Are Blondes prettier than Brunettes?"

Aren't those exciting? Of course, Mr. Sisk might want another type of column. What about: "What Hamlet Means to Me," "Milton and the New Cosmology," (These are old English 21 themes).

And then there is another type of column. Sample titles: "The New Hyacinths Behind Morehead Planetarium," "The Case of the Physiology Department's Missing Goldfish," and "Sex Orgies at the Home of Dean Z."

Perhaps best of all, there might be articles on: "McCarthyism in Chapel Hill," "George the Campus Collie," and "What I Did Last Monday Night at 8:30."

No laughs, please. It may be either that or just the weather. The DTH can't be printed with but three pages. There have to be four, as the editor so cleverly noticed when I proposed omission of articles reflecting bias toward one of the national political parties. Or perhaps the DTH will just continue to clip and print articles from such 'fair, unbiased, sources as the "Democrat Digest," "The Reporter," and the "Nation."

My real suggestion is that letter-writer Sisk, who proves himself both facile and interesting, join the DTH staff. If nothing else, I'll offer him this space for one or two journalistic shots.

At long last I have been directly, personally accused of "McCarthyism." I've previously been accused of being a radical, a liberal Republican (worst of all), and even a McCarthy defender. But guilty of McCarthyism? Never 'til now.

It all began when I remarked that one of Associate Editor Yoder's articles was better written than a comparative article in the "Worker." (Excepting a few sickening phrases which stand for nothing but shibboleths, I agree with their contentions.) The similarity between them was so great that I felt compelled to count Yoder's article in my tabulation of political matter in the DTH.

Both articles managed to slickly insinuate that comrade Scales was getting a raw deal. In the process of doing so they tried to infuse something of their whole "liberal" philosophy into the reader's mind. It is that which I found personally objectionable.

I find the law outlawing the Communist party just as objectionable a threat to individual freedom as I do the statist philosophies of the liberals. Worst of all, of course, were the cheap, demagogic tactics used by the leftwing Democrats in getting the law passed.

If this be McCarthyism, call me a McCarthyite. I can paste this label alongside columnist Kraar's "Reactionary" tag.

Clark Olsen, last year's editor of the Oberlin College paper, seemed quite impressed by the hospitality and freedoms extended when he visited the Soviet Union last year. His proposition, in a "Letter to the Editor" in Saturday's DTH, is that American colleges extend the same kind of privileges to potential visiting "junior comrades." I would suggest that the same privilege be given to those presently enrolled in our universities.

Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

THE HORSE was prowling the purlieus of Hill Hall and giving (somewhat frighteningly) with high notes and low notes.

"Yiu wouldn't think I had anything to do with Music, would you?" The Horse shrugged, when I queried him. "The truth, Roger me bhoy, if it is in you!"

"The Marriage of Figaro, a notable musical triumph of our Music Department, has me here," The Horse ignored my critique. "It was swell!"

Good, and good. I hoped it was better than The Horse's burpings in his column, if the views of one Bill Sisk were to be accorded credence. Had he read what Bill Sisk said of The Horse's eyeings?

"Yeah, and the guy is at least partially correct," The Horse said. "Hhe said that formerly he suspected my eyeings were full of hidden meanings; and they were. But mining meanings is not, it would seem, a popular occupation hereabouts, so I discontinued burying eadem — as Doc Ullman would say — and I come right out into the open."

That had its disadvantages?

Durn right," The Horse growled. "It's all right to kid certain people and to make certain remarks when the guy or the remark can't be exactly sure you mean him . . . or can't prove you meant what you said to be taken a certain way. Sisk is right."

Sisk also had said The Horse was now meaningless. Did The Horse agree here, as well?

"As Poor Richard would say," The Horse tossed off glibly, "'He that complains has too much.' However, I do grant one Siskian premise beyond the one already granted: what interests or entertains one chappie is just so much hogwash to another. Humor is where and how you find it. The Anatomy of Mirth became a dead body instanter the first nards. If my burpings, as you so rudely label and inquirer unzipped it and tried to classify its inlibel my small funnings in the DTH, do not exercise any Siskian interest or risibilities, this is as incapable of correction on my part as it is on his part. George Horace Lorimer, late great editor of the Saturday Evening Post, once came roaring into his office and raised merry Hob because a man he knew had told him he had enjoyed every story and article in a certain SATEVEPOST issue."

"Not," The Horse countered, "from G. Horace Lormier's viewpoint, which was — if he gave each one of his readers one story or article he or she liked, he was doing a bang-up job. Lormier felt that his readers could be classified into seven utterly different types, with each type liking one definite type of story but disliking all other types. Ergo — as Dock Suskin would say — if one person liked it all, the editors were not salting the mag with variety."

Perhaps; but — couldn't Humor be analyzed?

"No more than, as Doc Walter Allen, Jr., of Greek Drama fame," The Horse cited, "would say that a general statement concerning the 'thinking of a people' can be nailed down to thus and so. People have different brains, different ambitions, different backgrounds, different motivations . . . one person from the other. A hundred different people can have a hundred different thinkings about one certain issue. What they subscribe to despite their thinking is another thing entirely. Just so with humor. I have my own ideas of what is funny and what isn't funny; of what is interesting and what is not. An Irish story illustrates this . . . as well as illustrates the futility of trying to analyze humor."

Okay, okay, I was listening!

"A proposal was made in the Dail Eireann, the Irish Free State legislature, to fight the Depression by borrowing on long-term bonds to finance a huge public-improvement program," The Horse recounted, "but a conservative member arose to cry Eheu! —as Doc Epps would say—over the saddling of posterity with the cost. And up jumped the proponent of the measure to shout, 'And what has posterity done for us that we should consider it?'"

Very funny, but —

"The upshot of it," The Horse interrupted, "was that one of these eager analyzers of humor went to Ireland to inquire into exactly what Irish Humor is. But exactly! 'The best Irish humor is the result of a bull, for sure,' the inquirer was assured. 'It is just that — a bull.' So, the inquirer pressed his search further, asking about the countryside for examples of Irish bulls. And he met with a countryman who willingly explained it all."

Oh. Then it could be classified, this humor?

"After a fashion," The Horse agreed. "This broth of an Irish country lad pointed to a nearby field where three bovine ruminants were lying bellied down in the grass, and he asked, 'Do ye see thim three cows a-lyin' down i' th' grass, sor?' The inquirer into Humor did see the three cows, and so stated. 'Well, then,' said his explainer, 'the one standin' up is the' bull.'"

That was the story?

"Like Harvey, the Rabbit in the play of the same title," The Horse said, "either you see it or you do not. Nobody can make you see it . . . and nobody, if you do see it, can stop you from so doing. But Herr Sisk will get no back-of-me-hand from The Horse because of his recent critique . . . although it is my observation that those who write same are usually little qualified to do so, and usually betray naught but a lack of something. Mr. Sisk is to be congratulated that his lack is so simple to correct: all he has to do it change his reading sources."

Then The Horse wouldn't try to assist Sisk?

"Newspapers published for one man's benefit are, as Poor Richard says, Great Labor for Little Profit," The Horse Poor Richarded me. "Would you like me to sing an aria or three, Roger me lug."

We got out of there fast.

Erickson Says Final Home Cage Tilts May Not Be On TV

CUFF NOTES

BERNIE WEISS

Everett Case, the basketball king at N. C. State who didn't like Carolina's possession tactics in the Dixie Classic, has now been humbled to fourth place in the ACC standings.

Case said, "That's not basketball,' in reference to the control game used by UNC's Frank McGuire, even though State won the contest.

Carolina now claims the latest victory in the bitter rivalry between the two schools, having dumped the Wolfpack 84-80 Tuesday night. McGuire let his boys "run" with State all the way.

I'm beginning to wonder what Case thinks of our running game. Is that basketball, Ev?

McGuire, not surprised but feeling well about the victory, said yesterday he does not expect to find Carolina ranked highly in next week's AP poll. "We may rank among the first 25," he said hopefully, "but I don't expect much more than that."

If Carolina doesn't rank any higher than 25th, this will be one disappointed lad. The Tar Heels have knocked off many ranked teams, among them Southern Cal, Duke, Wake Forest, and State. Since the team now leads the ACC by a safe margin, it is gaining a reputation which was aided considerably by the State win.

The only factor, McGuire pointed out, which will keep Carolina from ranking high is the schedule. Carolina plays few inter-conference games which bring a winning team to the nation's sports pages.

The poll results are evaluated from writers' rankings of the teams. A postal card to the sports departments of such local papers as the Charlotte News, Greensboro Daily News, Durham Morning Herald and Raleigh News and Observer may possibly help Carolina gain a notch or two in the final results. Want to get in your two-cents worth? Here's your chance!

It seems that a scholastic accrediting agency has a committee investigating athletic policies vs. scholastic policies at the school, and this committee has come up with a little info which is nothing short of very interesting.

Maryland is not an accredited university, the principal reason being that athletics are holding down academics. This investigating group has accused Maryland, a member of the ACC, of violating the rules of the conference and the NCAA.

Jim Weaver, commissioner of the conference, has stated that he does not have and never has had any reports of Maryland violations. Jim Tatum, athletic director at College Park, is not too concerned either.

Members of the football team have been charged with holding the easiest jobs on campus, taking the easiest courses available (like "sports skills"), repeating many and cheating on quizzes, among other things.

A new president took over at Maryland recently. The news then was that he was going to make the school accredited, if he had to go so far as to initiate a long-range athletic de-emphasis.

Whether the new prexie is behind the current investigation or not, one thing is sure: Somebody's going to make Turtle soup.

Duke, State Maintain Video Cuts Down Their Gate Receipts

Full Impact Of Situation Unknown At Present; Opinions Received By Erickson Are Varied

"Whether or not the remaining two Carolina home basketball games will be televised is uncertain," Athletic Director C. P. Erickson stated yesterday. Erickson is currently surveying the situation in an attempt to evaluate the effects of the two games that were on live TV over WUNC-TV, the University-operated station.

Ill feeling against showing the game on TV arose when State College and Duke University officials claimed that the televising of the UNC-Wake Forest game here cut down on attendance at their game the same night.

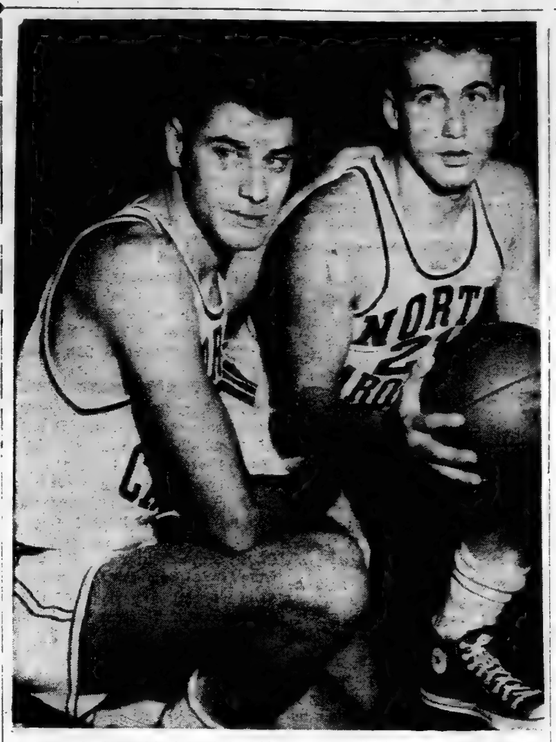
In a decision following meetings with college officials — including W. D. Carmichael Jr., Controller of the Consolidated University—State College Chancellor H. Bostian announced last week that there will be no TV of either freshman of varsity games from Reynolds Coliseum in Raleigh this year. Thus the question arose as to whether the last two games here would be televised since State and Carolina are both parts of the Consolidated University.

Since there is no ruling concerning the televising of basketball games on the books of either the Atlantic Coast Conference or National Collegiate Athletic Association, to whose rules Carolina confirms, the immediate future as well as lon-range plans for future seasons is indefinite. Until he can get together with the heads of the oppising teams, and unless a schedule can be made so that no games conflict with each other, the matter remains one of uncertainty, Erickson said.

Erickson pointed out that he didn't know the full impact of the situation at present, and was still getting opinions and reactions—both favorable and unfavorable—from various people. The only big unfavorable thought has been one of financial objections, he stated.

The two home games left on the schedule are with Duke and State on February 4 and 22, and Erickson expects to reach a decision with other area teams by the start of the next semester on the matter of live TV. Chancellor R. B. House is still, however, the final authority for the University on what is to be televised over WUNC-TV.

Erickson pointed out that State and Carolina were operating under different circumstances. Whereas the Coliseum can seat of 12,500 spectators, there is a limited amount of space in Woollen Gymnasium. If all the students go to a game only a few seats remain for the alumni and friends of the University, to whom Carolina has a responsibility and obligation to fulfill. Those who can't get seats should be permitted to view the game on TV, and Erickson contends that some type of service must be given to these fans who have to be turned away.



Wes Santee Makes New York Debut February 5th

NEW YORK, Jan. 17—(AP)—Wes Santee, holder of the American mile record of 4:00.6, will make his first New York appearance Feb. 5 in the Millrose Games at Madison Square Garden.

The Kansas star's entry in the Wanamaker mile was announced today by Fred Schmertz, director of the meet. Santee will run against Gunnar Nielson of Denmark, who won the mile event in the Boston Knights of Columbus meet last week in 4:07.9.

Clemson Hires Carl Wise

Lennie Rosenbluth and Al Lifson, pictured above, were big guns in the 84-80 Carolina upset win over N. C. State Tuesday night. Rosenbluth garnered 22 points to lead the Tar Heel scorers, and Lifson poured in 19 to tie Jerry Vayda for second place.

Indoor Harriers Slate Light Workouts Through Exam Week

With examinations near at hand, the Carolina indoor track squad is going through less strenuous workouts daily, and is bearing down on the books in order to remain eligible for competition next semester.

Track coaches Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton said yesterday they expect to carry on moderate workouts each day up to and through exams, with the individual practicing whenever his schedule will permit.

Shortly after the beginning of next semester, the thinclads will take part in the VMI Relays (on February 5) and will meet Duke and State here on February 12 and 19, respectively. Only a few freshmen will enter the Relays, if any, but they are expected to be at full force with the varsity in the other two meets.

The indoor season will be concluded with both teams entering the Indoor Games here on Saturday, February 26. Ranson stated yesterday that he had received the first entry for the Games, from Richmond Coach Fred Hardy, who has listed 17 men for the non-conference division.

Five Sports Events Set Before 2nd Semester

Two varsity teams and one freshman squad will participate in five sports evnts before students return to school for the second semester.

The schedule through February 3 is as follows: January 29—varsity gymnastics against the University of Illinois (Navy Pier Branch) at home; 3-varsity swimming at home to Michigan.

SCIENCE MADE SIMPLE: No. 1

In this day and age, as I like to call it, everybody should know something about science. Unfortunately, however, the great majority of us are majoring in elocution, and we do not get a chance to take any science. But we can at least learn the fundamentals.

Though this column is intended to be a source of innocent merriment for all sexes and not to concern itself with weighty matters, I have asked the makers of Philip Morris whether I might not from time to time use this space for a short lesson in science. "Makers," I said to them, "might I not from time to time use this space for a short lesson in science?"

"Bless you, lad!" cried the makers, chuckling. "You may certainly use this space from time to time for a short lesson in science."

They are very benign men, the makers, fond of children, small animals, community singing, and simple country food. Their benevolence is due in no small measure to the cigarettes they smoke, for Philip Morris is a cigarette to soothe the most savage of breasts. I refer not only to the quality of the tobacco — which, as everyone knows, is amiable, humane, and gracious — but also to the quality of the package. Here is no fiendishly contrived container to fray the fingernails and rasp the nerves. Here, instead, is the most simple of devices: you pull a tab, a snap is heard, and there, ready at hand, are your Philip Morris Cigarettes. Strike a match, take a puff, and heave a delicious little rippling sigh of pure content.

So, with the cordial concurrence of the makers, I will from time to time devote this column to a brief lesson in science.

Let us start today with chemistry. It is fitting that chemistry should be the first of our series, for chemistry is the oldest of sciences, having been discovered by Ben Franklin in 123 B.C. when an apple fell on his head while he was shooting the breeze with Pythagoras one day outside the Acropolis. (The reason they were outside the Acropolis and not inside was that Pythagoras had been thrown out for drawing right triangles all over the walls. They had several meetings outside the Acropolis, but finally Franklin said, "Look, Pythagoras, this is nothing against you, see, but I'm no kid any more and if I keep laying around on this wet grass with you, I'm liable to get the break-bone fever. I'm going inside." Pythagoras, friendless now, moped around Athens for a while, then drifted off to Brussels where he married a girl named Harriet Sigafoos and went into the linseed oil game. He would also certainly be forgotten today had not Shakespeare written "Othello.")

But I digress. We were beginning a discussion of chemistry, and the best way to begin is, of course, with fundamentals. Chemicals are divided into elements. There are four: air, earth, fire, and water. Any number of delightful combinations can be made from these elements, such as firewater, dacron, and chef's salad.

Chemicals can be further divided into the classes of explosive and non-explosive. A wise chemist always touches a match to his chemicals before he begins an experiment.

A great variety of containers of different sizes and shapes are used in a chemistry lab. There are tubes, vials, beakers, flasks, pipettes, and retorts. (A retort is also a snappy comeback, such as "Oh, yeah?" or "So's your old man!"

(Perhaps the most famous retort ever made was delivered by none other than Noah Webster himself. It seems that one day Mr. Webster's wife walked unexpectedly into Mr. Webster's office and found Mr. Webster's secretary sitting on Mr. Webster's knee. "Why Mr. Webster!" cried Mr. Webster's wife. "I am surprised!"

("No, my dear," he replied. "I am surprised. You are astonished."

(Well, sir, it must be admitted that old Mr. Webster got off a good one, but still one can not help wishing he had spent less time trifling with his secretary, and more time working on his dictionary. Many of his definitions show an appalling want of scholarship. Take, for instance, what happened to me not long ago. I went to the dictionary to look up "houghband" which is a band that you pass around the leg and neck of an animal. At the time I was planning to pass bands around the legs and necks of some animals, and I wanted to be sure I ordered the right thing.

(Well sir, thumbing through the H's in the dictionary, I happened to come across "horse." And this is how Mr. Webster defines "horse"—"a large, solid hoofed herbivorous mammal, used as a draft animal."

(Now this, I submit, is just plain sloppiness. The most cursory investigation would have shown Mr. Webster that horses are not mammals. Mammals give milk. Horses do not give milk. It has to be taken from them under the most severe duress.

But I digress. We were discussing chemistry. I have told you the most important aspects, but there are many more—far too many to cover in the space remaining here. However, I am sure that there is a fine chemistry lab at your very own college. Why don't you go up some afternoon and poke around? Make a kind of fun day out of it. Bring ukeleles. Wear funny hats. Toast frankfurters on the Bunsen burners. Be gay, be merry, be loose, for chemistry is your friend!

A Campus-to-Career Case History

TWO CITY BLOCKS

James O'Hara, Stevens Institute of Technology (M.E. '51), is an installation foreman for the New York Telephone Company. His present assignment is two city blocks between 45th and 47th Streets in the middle of Manhattan.

"It doesn't measure very big horizontally," Jim says. "But vertically it makes up a lot of telephone business—7500 telephones to be exact. My eight-man crew does everything from installing a single telephone to working on complete dial intercom systems for some of the nation's biggest businesses.

"I've got to know about each of these jobs that my men do. My training with the telephone company took me through the installation, repair and testing of the various types of telephone equipment and service for which I am responsible. I even had a chance to do a little experimenting of my own and developed a new way of preventing oil seepage on automatic switching equipment. I understand it's being written up for use throughout the Bell System.

"That's what I like about telephone work. Even two city blocks are full of opportunity."

You'll find that most other college men with the telephone company are just as enthusiastic about their jobs. If you'd be interested in a similar opportunity with a Bell System Telephone Company—or with Sandia Corporation, Western Electric or Bell Telephone Laboratories, see your Placement Officer for full details.

82 Years Young:

W. D. Carmichael Sr. Was Here In '92

By ROBERT W. MADRY

Many people will tell you, as you travel about the State that they want to come to Chapel Hill to live when they retire.

A few of them do, but, for one reason or another, most of them don't

Among those in the minority group, however, is a kindly, distinguished gentleman who this week — January 10 — celebrated his 82nd birthday.

He is William Carmichael, Sr., who returned to Chapel Hill 12 years ago from New York after retiring as vice president of the Liggitt and Myers Tobacco Company, in charge of advertising, a position he had occupied since 1926.

Carmichael had a natural affinity for Chapel Hill. He is a graduate of the University, class of 1897, and one of his sons, William D. Carmichael, Jr., is vice president and finance officer of the Consilidated University.

He looks exceptionally well for a man his age, and he says he "feels good."

ARDENT SPORTS FAN

He is one of the University's most ardent sports fans and attends just about every game of any sort played here, usually in the company of some of his cronies like Archibald Henderson, Dr. W. P. Jacocks and Louis Graves.

During his undergraduate career he was manager of the football and basketball teams the same year — 1896 — and was president of the Athletic Association one year. "Doggie" Trenchard was football coach at that time. The captain of that '96 football team, Carmichael recalls, was the late Dr. R. H. Wright, a former president of East Carolina College and a brother-in-law of the University's Dr. Louis R. Wilson.

During his student days Mr. Carmichael also worked on the campus newspaper and magazine He was a member of the Kappa Alpha fraternity and of the Gimghouls.

At the time, Carmichael points out, very few students spent weekends off the campus. There was a good reason, too, he explained. There were no buses, and it took two hours to drive a buggy to Durham.

There were few lectures or amusements on the campus. There were two German Club dances each year, in October and February, the big one being in October, he recalls. There were only three sports at the time, football, baseball and tennis but tennis was not an intercollegiate sport then.

MANAGED DURHAM PLANT

Prior to going to New York, Carmichael was manager of the Durham plant of Liggett and Myers for 14 years and before that was associated with the Durham City Schools for 15 years, including six years as superintendent.

Although he severed business connections when he retired here he has maintained a lively interest in University life and village activities.

In recent years he has been a familiar figure on downtown streets and on campus walks, greeting his wide circle of friends.

As a Chapel Hill resident, he has made his home at the Carolina Inn, where scores of alumni call on him while here for Commencement, football games and other occasions.

His first residency in the University town was in the fall of 1892 when he entered the University. A native of Little Rock, S. C., he had studied at Oak Ridge Institute.

SON OF CONFEDERATE VET

Born January 10, 1873, Carmichael came of a lonk line of sturdy Scotch-Irish stock. His forebears first settled in the Cape Fear region and then moved to South Carolina. His father was Captain William Donald Carmichael, a Confederate Veteran, who fought throughout the Civil War, from Bull Run to Appomattox, except during a period when he was recovering from a battle wound, and his mother was Agnes Caroline Harllee, both from Little Rock.

He intended studying law, but he became such an admirer of Dr. Edwin A. Aiderman, the head of the Department of Education and later president of the University, that he decided to become a teacher.

FOUR SONS UNC ALUMNI

While at Chapel Hill he met Miss Margaret McRobert McCaull of Salem, Va., a graduate of State Woman's College in Greensboro. They were married in Raleigh on October 11, 1899. Mrs. Carmichael died in Durham in 1924 and is buried in the Chapel Hill Cemetery.

Their four sons — all University of North Carolina alumni — are W. D. Carmichael Jr., UNC; Cartwright Carmichael of Liggett and Myers Tobacco Company, Durham; ;Robert, in the advertising business in New York; and Martin, of Weston, Conn.

Carmichael maintained contact with his Alma Mater throughout his business career. As one of the most devoted sons of the University, he has contributed generously toward many of its activities.

He served on the University's Board of Trustees during the twenties, while living in Durham. After moving to New York he headed Alumni Association activities in that area in 1932.

In recognition of his business leadership he was named an honorary member of Beta Gamma Sigma, scholastic fraternity in the University's School of Commerce in 1939.

CONTRIBUTED TO UNIVERSITY PROJECTS

Carmichael made contributions to the Emergency Student Loan Fund in 1932 when more than 500 students were on the verge of having to leave the University on account of lack of funds; to the building of Woollen Gymnasium, and to the fund for the conversion of Person Hall into an art museum.

Since his retirement to Chapel Hill he has been active in civic affairs, serving in 1945-56 as chairman of the local chapter of the American Red Cross. He is an honorary member of the Chapel Hill Rotary Club.

Carmichael is a member of the Catholic Church and is the leader in the current campaign to build a Catholic Church in Chapel Hill.

ESTIMATE OF GRAVES

Louis Graves, contributing editor of the Chapel Hill Weekly, who has known Mr. Carmichael probably as well and as long as any other living person, although he is Mr. Carmichael's junior by 10 years, said recently: "I look back upon our friendship as one of the great treasures of my life. In every way he was gentle and kind and altogether lovable. I have never known anybody with a sweeter nature."

Grave's acquaintance with Mr Carmichael began in the September of 1892, just a few days after the latter's arrival at the University.

"I was a boy of nine when Billy Carmichael came here as a freshman," Mr. Graves said." The University had only some 250 students then, and I knew about all of them, for I was always roaming over the campus.

"But I saw much more of him than of most students, because my mother kept a boarding house, and among her boarders was a certain lovely young woman, Miss Margaret McCaull.

"He was 10 years older than I, which is a big difference when one person is 19 and the other is nine. In later life 10 years is a difference that doesn't amount to anything, and it was after he retired and came to Chapel Hill that we became close friends"

CLOSE FRIEND OF KENAN

William R. Kenan Jr., class of 1894, and donor of the Kenan Stadium, was a student here during Mr. Carmichael's first two years. Their friendship formed then was renewed when Mr. Carmichael went to live in New York, and during recent years some of his happiest times were when Mr. Kenan came to Chapel Hill on visits. They would sit and talk in the Inn lobby or on the piazza or under the trees on the lawn, and they would take walks together through the campus and up and down the streets.

One of their favorite walks was up Cameron Avenue to call on Fanny McDade, widow of their old-time beloved janitor, Bill McDade, who died many years ago.

Jaycee Week Designated

RALEIGH, Jan. 18 (AP) — Gov. Hodges today designated this week as Jaycee Week in North Carolina and urged citizens to give "full consideration to the future services of this splendid organization."

The event will be commemorated, Hodges said, "by the selection of an oustanding young man in our various communities as the recipient of the distinguished service award.. North Carolina is fortunate to have a number of Jaycee chapters."

Architectural Board To Meet Here January 28

RALEIGH, Jan. 19 (AP) — The Board of Directors of the North Carolina Architectural Foundation will hold its annual meting at the Carolina Inn in Chapel Hill Friday, Jan.. 28.

Plans for the meeting were announced today by Edward Loewenstein of Greensboro, president of the foundation. The session will be featured by a progress report on the School of Design at North Carolina State College, a financial report on the foundation's work this past year, and the election of new foundation officers.

The architectural foundation is currently supplementing the state salary scale in retaining and attracting top-ranking architects and educators for duties in the School of Design.

Students Return To Books, Newly-Created Cuts System

Only 3 Cuts Per Semester Says Faculty

University of North Carolina students returned to their books yesterday, faced by a new faculty rule — three unexcused absences per class per semester.

The new rule, passed by the General Council of the Faculty at its Nov. 19 meeting, put under University law the matter of cuts, formerly left up to individual instructors.

Now, the undergraduate not on honor rolls is faced with the three major provisions of the law:

(1) After four unexcused absences, he will be dropped from his course with a grade of "F."

(2) An absence during a two-day period before or after University holidays will be counted as two absences — leaving the student with one more out before being dropped and failed.

(3) If the students cuts a laboratory or class on a day for scheduled quiz or examination, he will fail the work missed.

EXCUSE SOURCES

The faculty law narrows down sources of excuses. Only two, the University physician (the Infirmary) and the dean of the school or college in which the student is registered, may write excuses.

Students got their first official notice of the rule when they registered Tuesday and yesterday, in a printed sheet of paper titled "Notice To All Undergraduates."

The notice explained terms of the rule, and warned that ". . . from now on the student must assume greater responsibility than before toward his own class attendance, for under the new rule it is unlikely that anyone save the student and his instructor will be aware of possible difficulties before the student has reached the automatic probation stage."

George Sent Out To Pasture; Home's Near University Lake

George, the famous and highly-controversial campus collie of late, has been literally sent out to pasture.

Mrs. A. M. Jordan, treasurer of the Humane Society, said last week that the Crane family on the Critz George farm out near the University Lake had taken the dog after nobody in town would claim responsibility for him. She had hoped that some local citizen would pay his license and vaccination fee and agree to let George continue to be the campus pet-at-large.

However, with no such claimants being forthcoming, the police refused to allow him to be turned loose in town again as a stray. They authorized the Cranes, who have several children, to take him to the country. George had been kept in the dog pound at the Vine Animal Hospital since allegedly biting several students here four weeks ago.

Music Series To Be Resumed Next Tuesday

Bonnie Jean Wold, Greensboro soprano, will open the Tuesday Evening Series for the second semester with a concert Feb. 8 in Hill Hall.

Sponsored by the UNC Music Department as a service to campus and community life, the series is broadcast over WUNC. Other scheduled performers in the series include Arthur Howes, organ recital; UNC Concert Band, Earl Slocum, conductor; David Bar-Illan, piano recital; UNC Glee Clubs, Joel Carter, conductor, and UNC Symphony Orchestra, Earl Slocum, conductor.

Mrs. Wold, a native of North Dakota, is assistant professor at Woman's College and soprano soloist at Grace Methodist Church in Grensboro. She will be accompanied in her concert by Inga Borgstrom Morgan of the Woman's College faculty.

150 Women, 175 Others Hit Campus

Some 150 new women students and more than 175 returning students — chiefly those who interrupted their college studies for military service — are enrolled for the spring semester, according to Director of Admissions Roy Armstrong.

"A great housing shortage continues," Director Armstrong said earleir this week. "The dormitories are crowded with three men in a room and many veterans have been turned away because of the shortage of housing for themselves and their families."

ORIENTATION

Orientation for new women students and first-year men students took place Monday, and registration for the spring term was held Tuesday.

Women's orientation was chiefly concerned with sessions in which coeds got acquainted with dormitory regulations and campus rules. Entering freshmen spent Monday taking various placement tests and entrance examinations.

A student government meeting for new students was held Tuesday, and later this week they will attend sessions on the organization and function of the Honor Council and visit divisions of the University Library.

5,900 For Segregation . . .

Hodges Gets George's Petition

The Orange County petition for continued segregated schools, instigated by Dr. W. C. George of the University medical faculty, was sent to Governor Hodges last week with over 5,900 names attached.

Dr. George said Jan. 26 that he had not yet received any acknowledgement of receipt of the document from Raleigh, and that so far as he was concerned his end of the project was complete. In a lengthy summary statement enclosed with the petitions sent to the governor, Dr. George noted that the petition was intended for Orange County Circulation only, but on request had been sent to other counties. The signatures from this county alone numbered about 3,800, according to Dr. George—"several hundred more than the maximum number of votes cast in the last election . . ."

He cited a number of instances in which all who were solicited for signatures readily signed up, and noted finally that "There was virtually no circulation of the petition in Chapel Hill where our erperiences undoubtedly would have been different. "Strong propaganda pressures exerted over many years" contributed to the Chapel Hill situation, he said.

The petition itself, a brief document asking the Governor and General Assembly to do all legally within their power to forestall the Supreme Court's race integration decision in schools, was made public about Nov. 15.

THE PETITION

"Our petition supporting a policy of continued separation of white and Negro children in schools had its origin in a desire to strengthen the hands of our legal representatives who would protect us from racial deterioration.

"It was based on the belief that bringing the two races together in intimate social and semi-social relations would further their fusion into a mixed race and that such fusion would greatly harm and perhaps destroy American civilization. These beliefs are supported by scientific and historical evidence.

"Also, the petition was looked upon as a test of the assertion that our people are willing to accept a program of racial integration. Our experience gives little support for that assertion.

FOR ORANGE ONLY

"Our program was planned for Orange County only, which is one of the areas upon which indoctrination pressures for race integration have been focused. We have sent petitions into other areas only when they have been requested. Some of the petitions sent to other North Carolina counties have been returned to us with signatures. These were sent to the Governor along with those from Orange County.

In spite of the fact that our personal and professional duties did not permit us to make an intensive campaign for signatures, we nevertheless submitted more than 5,000 names. Those from this county number about 3,800, several hundred more than the maximum number of votes cast in the last election for any candidate or measure.

"More significant than the total number of signatures is our experience in getting them. For instance as I have driven around the county and shown the petition to people and have asked them if they were enough interested to take a copy and get signatures, only one person has said no. Shortly after the petition was started two of us made a circuit through a part of the county. We showed the petition to 79 people. 76 signed. The other three were from out of the State.

"ALL WHO SAW IT SIGNED"

"Mr. G. T. Cole of the southern part of the county circulated a petition in his neighborhood and returned 35 signatures. He said: 'The petition was signed by everyone I showed it to.' He expressed the belief that 99 per cent of the people of the county outside of Chapel Hill would sign if they had an opportunity.

DR. W. C. GEORGE
. . . out of his hands

"Mr. James Rippy circulated a petition in the central part of the county and returned 60 names. He reported that 'Everyone signed it who saw the petition.'

"Mr. W. D. White of Chatham County asked for a petition. He returned it in a few days with 236 names and reported that 'So far as he could recall no one failed to sign who had the chance.'

"Mr. L. E. Phelps of the western part of the county said, 'I did not miss a man that I showed the petition to, white or colored.'

"Several oher similar experiences from this and other counties were reported, although most people simply returned the signed petitions with comment.

NOT CIRCULATED IN CHAPEL HILL

"There was virtually no circulation of the petition in Chapel Hill where our experiences undoubtedly would have been different. We were aware that strong propaganda pressures exerted over many years had led a considerable number of people of the campus and town to actively or passively support a program of racial integration. Apparently they have come to think of the race problem in concepts of slogans rather than in concepts of people, situations and consequences. The people of this county and State generally, however, seem not to have been misled by the campaign of slogans."

Harry Truman May Deliver Weil Talks Here This Spring

Ex-President Is Considering Several Dates

Former President Harry S. Truman has said he would like to be able to deliver the annual Weil Lectures here this spring, according to Dr. Alex Heard, chairman of the Committee on Established Lectures.

Truman was invited last spring by Gordon Gray, president on behalf of the Committee which selects the Weil and McNair speakers.

Gray, a former Secretary of the Army in the Truman administration, gave the former President a choice of dates on which to speak and until Truman picks a definite date his committment will not be definite.

The annual Weil Lectures are delivered on three successive nights. If Truman accepts, he will probably speak in Memorial Hall in May. The lectures are on the general theme of "American Citizenship." If Truman speaks, he may choose any more limited topic within that range. Last year's 40th anniversary speaker, a former president of Ecuador, spoke on "Democracy in Latin America."

The first lecture on the "American Citizenship" theme was given in 1914 by former President William Howad Taft. The families of Henry Weil and Sol Weil endowed the lecture series a few years later. Other prominent speakers for the lectures have been William Bennett Munro, Edward A. Ross, William Allen White, Charles A. Beard, Harold J. Laski, Felix Frankfurter and Henry Wallace.

In more recent years, such prominent persons as T. V. Smith, Richard B. Tawney, Robert M. MacIver, Eleanor Roosevelt, Edwin G. Nourse, Robert A. Taft, Zechariah Chafee, Jr., and Galo Plaza have spoken.

The Committee on Established Lectures is composed of seven faculty members headed by Dr. Alex Heard of the Political Science Department.

Solons Get Surprised

The man who has been a mainspring in the state's buying a million dollars worth of art and building a museum to house it did not ask the committee for more money. Instead he told how the money already appropriated has been spent.

Dr. Humber said that with the one million dollars the state has acquired some 200 paintings which now have a value estimated at 3½ million dollars.

He reported the Kress Foundation will present the state with an additional million dollars' worth of art objects and the state has received gifts in the past year worth $600,000 for its art museum, including $45,000 since Jan. 1. Most of the gifts were works of art but they included $50,000 in cash, Humber said.

All in all, Humber concluded, North Carolina will have "the greatest art museum south of the Potomac" when the gallery is opened. He said he hopes it can be opened before the Legislature adjourns.

Playmakers' Auditions For Show Boat Today

Auditions will be held today for Show Boat, a perenially popular show with audiences all over the country, and one which never has been done on a university campus. The play has been chosen by the Carolina Playmakers as their musical show of the year.

Performances are slated for March 4, 5 and 6 in Memorial Auditorium.

Choosing the musical production of the year is always one of the more formidable tasks of the Playmakers staff. Consideration was given to other shows, but the Oscar Hammerstein-Jerome Kern classic was the leading contender.

A call to New York by John W. Parker, Playmaker business manager, revealed that Show Boat is carefully guarded property and is only released to groups which Oscar Hammerstein and his colleagues feel could give it a worthy production.

FAMILIAR WITH PLAYMAKERS

A secretary in the office of the lawyer who handles the musical was from Danville, Va., and was familiar with the work of the Playmakers. This led to interest on the part of those handling the rights to the show and after information about previous Playmaker shows had been sent to New York, permission for the production in Chapel Hill was granted.

Director of the Playmakers' version will be Kai Jurgenson and musical director will be Wilton Mason, UNC Music Department, who directed music for Kiss Me, Kate, last season's big musical, and the music department's recent production of The Marriage of Figaro.

Choreography will be done by Harry Coble, Florence, S. C., graduate student in dramatic art, and choreographer last season of Horn in the West at Boone.

Auditions for the show, which requires singing, acting, and dancing talent, will be held in Memorial Hall today. The cast will include over 40 people with approximately five leading women's roles, four leading men, a dancing chorus of eight, and a general chorus of 24. There are also many minor parts, some of which will be cast from the chorus.

Show Boat has had several Broadway revivals and recently was made into a movie starring Kathryn Grayson, Howard Kel, Ava Gardner and Marge and Gower Champion. The story briefly concerns life and romance among the people on an old-fashioned river boat and is interspersed with such songs as "Make Believe," "You Are Love," "Can't Help Lovin' That Man," "Bill," "Ol' Man River" and "Life Upon The Wicked Stage."

Glade Valley's Clothing Drive Will End Saturday

The clothing drive for the Glade Valley School which is sponsored jointly by the Independent Women's Council and the Panhellinic Council will continue through Saturday.

Any women interested in visiting Glade Valley School at the completion of the drive should contact Miss Marilyn Zager in Smith Dormitory or Miss Joan Leonard at the Alpha Gamma Delta house.

Michigan's Williams To Speak

Michigan Governor G. Mennen Williams will be heard in a public address in Memorial Hall at 8 o'clock Tuesday night.

Hiss address will be sponsored by the local Young Democrats Club.

Bob Windsor of Chapel Hill, president of the YDC, who announced program plans, said that Governor Williams' appearance here will be the first in a series of addresses by prominent Democrats to be presented by the YDC during the spring semester. Another who has accepted invitation includes Senator Dick Neuberger of Oregon, he said.

Prior to the Governor's address the YDC will honor the speaker at a private dinner. A reception will be held in Graham Memorial immediately following the program.

Before his election as Governor of Michigan on the Democratic ticket in 1948, he served as deputy director for the Michigan office of Price Administration, Democratic member of the Michigan Liquor Control Commission and a member of the law firm of Griffiths, Williams and Griffiths. He was re-elected in 1950, 1952 and 1954.

Interracial Teen Group Sets Study Of Schools Integration

An interdenominational and interracial group of high school students from a number of churches in the community is being organized to make a study of the schools integration issue here this month.

Sanctioned by the Chapel Hill Ministerial Association, the group is to have the first of its five Sunday afternoon meetings on Feb. 6. Leaders of the program, which was initiated by the Community Church youth group, met in a planning session recently with several ministers.

One of their number, Richard Hall of the Community Church, said they felt "By getting together with youths from all churches we felt we could better understand the problems that will face us in the school integration situation and will be better able to meet them."

Among the various programs they plan to have during the proposed study, according to Hall, are a study of the history of races and their qualities, the history of the Negro in the United States and of segregation laws, and, if it can be arranged, a panel discussion presentation by students from an integrated school in Washington, D. C., who would tell of their experiences in the elimination of segregation in their schools.

'Billions Of Years Ago' Show Combines Scriptures And Science

By ETAUN SHURDELO

"Billions of Years Ago," a startling and dramatic combination of the Scriptures and scientific knowledge in an effort to explain the birth of the universe, opened at the Morehead Planetarium last week.

Produced in natural, rich color and featuring three dimensional effects with full stage settings, "Billions of Years Ago" offers and dramatizes the illustration that the Planetarium visitor is witness to the creation to the universe.

The Book of Genesis is closely followed for the scriptural portion of the program. Planetarium officials have drawn upon the knowledge of leading scientists and the creative abilities and facilities of Life Magazine for the scientific portion.

It closely ties with the scriptural reports, just as science and the Bible are coming closer and closer together yearly in their concepts about the firth of the earth. Portions of Life's series, "The World We Live In," are used in the production, especially selections from "The Earth Is Born" and "Canopy of Air."

The magic of the Zeiss projector is used to explain some of the theories about formation of stars and galaxies out of chaos, the expanding universe according to leading scientists and the changes in positions of stars over billions of years.

One startling portion is a simulation of the receding moon as it may have broken from the earth and moved out into space.

Music and three dimensional effects will complement the Genesis story. The entire Planetarium chamber will be bathed in natural color twice, for an underwater panorama of sea creatures, and for depicting prehistoric monstors and now-extinct animals. The closing "Santification" scene will further emphasize the relation of spiritual to scientific knowledge.

"Billions of Years Ago" will be presented nightly at 8:30 o'clock with matinees Saturdays at 11 a.m., 3 and 4 p.m. and Sundays at 2, 3 and 4 p.m.

The Demands Of Business & Democracy

We watched a Business Administration major thumbing through his class cards yesterday (economics, business organization, accounting, corporation finance) and reflected on a speech made this year at State College by William Ruffin of Durham, president of Erwin Mills and former president of the National Association of Manufacturers.

The over specialized college graduate, said Mr. Ruffin, who ought to know, "can feel the lack of enough training in the humanities, in language and literature, in the arts." And he added:

Describing a man as "well-rounded" has, I suppose, long since become trite, but give me a better expression. At least give me a man for leadership in industry or commerce who is on good speaking terms not only with the technical phases of his own business but with many other important facts of life to which he will find himself exposed—the languages, literature, the arts and, neither last nor least, religion.

He will find himself sorely in need of them and in my opinion cannot develop his full potential without them. He will even find it difficult to hold his own in the lower echelons of industrial and business leadership unless he is a well-rounded man.

I predict . . . there will be more demands from industry and business to give broader education in the liberal arts courses to the college man working for the specialized degrees.

These are not, we repeat, the sentiments of an English professor, but of a businessman. They have been echoed, in the last 12 months, by such distinguished Southern businessmen as the personnel director of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, the president of Carolina Power and Light Company and the vice president of the Norfolk and Western Railway. The General Electric Company is spearheading a convincing national crusade for the humanities. The Ford Motor Company is emphasizing liberal arts education as training for its new employees.

There is, in all this, the suggestion that a graduate of the University may be a whiz in accounting and business organization and still not be prepared to succeed in business without a little Plato under his belt: that, in fact, the progressive corporations of the day might prefer an employee made intelligent through humanistic studies and sciences humanely approached to the most aggressive business-trained graduate.

There is one consideration more: that the strength of a democratic society is directly proportionate to the number of its citizens whose thinking is not limited by their occupation and their class. If, in the end, democracy has any implications, one of them is that its citizens must become involved in it, and not just through their jobs, but through their lives.

This seems to us to place the one-track mind behind the times and to form a sermon to the student with the one-track batch of class cards: Greek civilization may be as important as corporation finance, to your employer as well as to yourself.

Spring Signs: A Campaigner And A Coed

Louis Kraar

"YOU'RE THE most powerful coed on campus. I could win with your support," the prospective student body presidential candidate told the girl at his side.

She smiled, looking about her at the smoke, noise, and people in the crowded Greensboro Plantation Club. And the campaigner went into the second verse of his line.

The coed, "the most powerful coed on campus," kept smiling and made a conscientious effort to look intelligent. She was intelligent, but she tried particularly hard to appear that way after the campaigner's comment.

Soon the conversation between the hopeful candidate and the intelligent coed was drowned out by Student Party politician Louis Brumfield telling a story about "my judge friend in Yadkinville."

The Student Party boys (and girls), at the suggestion of Jim Turner, had gathered for an informal party with some Daily Tar Heel staffers. But several of the SP pols decided that the occasion would be a good one for campaigning. So they did.

A toast to the Democratic Party brought only minor objections, fewer than those raised about an insistent waitress set on making the group pay their check early in the evening.

Turner, host to the affair, had managed to gather together Manning Muntzing, Larry McElroy, Norwood Bryan, Ruth Jones, and other prominent party members.

Before long all the toasts were over, a poor floorshow ended, the music stopped, and I got up to leave.

The ardent campaigner gave my hand a good squeeze, muttered something about mutual respect for the press, and the party was over.

On the way back to the Hill, I suddenly realized it was almost spring—and election time.

COEDS WHO stayed on campus during the between-terms break really had it tough. Hours were 11 o'clock all weekend.

"Technically the dorms are closed during holidays. This was a student holiday. However, we kept most dorms open.

Perhaps it is tough on a dorm hostess who is supposed to be on vacation to stay up until 1 o'clock. But it would seem that something could be worked out for the Carolina coed who stays in Chapel Hill—then can't enjoy the place past 11 o'clock.

★

MY NOMINATION for the most agitated coed after exams is a young lady who came over to me in the Dairy Bar, put down a penny, and thanked me for lending it to her.

When I told her I wasn't the lender, she decided the girl next to me was the one she owed.

"Who was that?" I asked the girl who had just acquired the penny.

"I don't know. Never saw her before. But she was so embarrassed that I had to do something."

Guided Missiles—The Ultimate Weapon

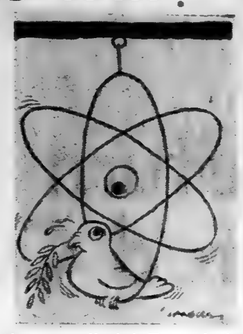
The Grim Race We've Got To Win

Stewart Alsop

WASHINGTON — By those who should know, this country is now given about an even chance of beating the Soviet Union in the race to be first to get an inter-continental ballistic missile into the air.

Although this whole subject may seem impossibly remote to most people, this should rate as about the best news the country has had for a long time. For until rather recently, intelligence studies of the Soviet effort in the field of long range guided missiles strongly suggested that we would almost certainly lose the race for the inter-continental ballistics missle—the I.B.M. And this is a race which the United States simply cannot afford to lose.

The I.B.M., married to a hydrogen warhead, is the true ultimate weapon. It can be fired from one continent to another to destroy a great city, in much the way that a murderer fires a bullet through his victim's head. The difference is that a man can hide, and a city cannot.



As of today, at least, there is hardly even a theoretical defense against the true inter-continental guided missile, except to get the weapon first, to make it better, and to make it in greater numbers. Until recently, the effort to win the I.B.M. race was strangled in red tape and hobbled for funds. Today, a greater effort could, and undoubtedly should, be made. But at least the effort is now a serious one. And it is already beginning to pay off.

If we beat the Russians to the I.B.M.—and thereby avert what would surely be world catastrophe — a good share of the credit, according to those who know, should go to a youngish California engineer - businessman, called Trevor Gardner. Gardner was brought into the Air Force by Secretary Harold E. Talbott to get the long range missiles into the air.

In the process, Gardner has stepped on a great many toes—so many that his appointment as Assistant Secretary of the Air Force has been held up in the Senate. But Talbott and Air Force Chief of Staff Nathan F. Twining have backed him up, for which they also deserve credit.

By dint of toe-stepping, much has been accomplished. Pentagon red tape has been slashed. An able Air Force man, Brig. Gen. Bernard Schriever, has gone to the West Coast to ride herd on the big companies, like Northrop, North American, Convair, and Lockheed, which are doing the actual work on the missiles.

Totally unrealistic requirements — like the requirement limiting the margin of permissible error in the inter-continental missile to 1,500 yards—have been rescinded. And funds for the missile efforts have been fairly sharply increased. The amount of increase is hidden in the over-all Ari Force budget, but it is said to be substantial.

As a result of this effort, the timetable for our entry into the age of the long range guided missile has been revised downward all along the line. Most significantly, the State Department and the British Foreign Office are now negotiating for a 5,000-mile missile firing range, extending into the Atlantic from Florida to the Ascension Islands.

The immediate reason for this negotiation is the SNARK, the jet-propelled, pilotless aircraft guided by the stars, and which flies just under the speed of sound. But the SNARK is only the fore-runner.

After the SNARK comes the NAVAHO, the ram-jet which is a true guided missile, flying more than twice the speed of sound. Then comes the mighty ATLAS, the true inter-continental ballistic missile which climbs an incredible 600 miles into space before it plunges to the kill. And at some point — depending on a decision which has not yet been made — there comes the first man-made, artificial earth-satellite. But, for the immediate future, ATLAS is the decisive weapon.

There will be a further report in this space on these strange and terrible gadgets. Here it is enough to say that in each case the prospects for early success are immeasurably brighter than they were a year ago. But there is still no cause for complacency. Our chances of winning the I.B.M. race have improved—but they are still no better than even.

Those in a position to judge believe that we could be almost certain of winning this race we must win, on one condition. This condition is a national sense of urgency, leading to a major effort on a war time scale to win the race. This would involve greater expenditures. But the concentration of energy and talent which a national sense of urgency brnigs forth is a more important element in the equation.

And this sense of urgency is now lacking for a very simple reason. The secrecy syndrome from which this Administration suffers has made the I.B.M. an unmentionable subject.

Formosa Policy: 'Something For Everybody'

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON — The Eisenhower resolution on Formosa is a medal showing a different face to each of the opposing forces in the struggle over U. S. Policy in the Far East.

It draws a defense line at Formosa and the Pescadores and it seeks a cease fire under United Nations auspices between the Chinese Nationalists and the Communist government of Peiping. This side of the medal is for our anxious allies and for those who fear that the objective of Chiang Kai-Shek is all-out war with U. S. participation to regain the China mainland.

The other side of the medal invokes for Chinese Nationalists and their powerful political friends here a picture not just of a safe-guarded Formosa and Pescadores but such "protection of related positions and territories" as may seem vital to the President who will, of course, be advised by the military.

When it is realized that the present chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff is Admiral Arthur Radford, an avowed apostle of a naval blockade of Red China and the bombing of mainland installations, the pull of the pro-Nationalist side of the medal is readily apparent.

Senate debate has already proved that the pro-Nationalists like what they think they see in the resolution more than the Senators who are determined to protect but to neutralize Formosa care for the picture shown to them.

When Senator Wayne Morse had conclused an impressive review of his apprehensions regarding the resolution, Republican Senate Leader William Knowland jumped to his feet and attacked him for "misleading Peiping" and "endangering the security of the country." This line is nicely calculated to discourage Morse's probing into the meaning of the resolution.

It was Knowland's first public utterance, when ordinarily he does not mind denouncing a Presidential position on foreign policy almost before it is spoken. His smiling silence, indeed, has been perhaps the most significant aspect of the situation. It gave consent — and Knowland has never hitherto given consent to anything that did not represent unflinching support for Chiang and all Chiang's works.

In an old Sherlock Holmes story, Holmes called attention to the significance of the barking dog. "That is what is significant," Holmes replied.

It is said privately by responsible sources that the President himself is committed to the cease fire, that he will never consent to be drawn into war on the mainland of China. The obvious question is: "Does Senator Knowland know this and is it really all right with him?"

Senate debate will be directed toward clearing up what Morse has called "the alarming implications and broad scope" of the Eisenhower resolution. It will be enlightening to watch both the Knowland faction and the extent to which Eisenhower spokesmen explain the President's own attitude.

The technique of the medal with two attractive but different faces is distinctively John Foster Dulles'. The Secretary of State in his career here has been adept at putting something for everybody in his foreign policy moves to hide or smooth over the deep divisions in his party on that issue, and to cloak his own changes of direction.

This time, however, the sharp legal brain of Morse and the intuitive political insight of Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota sniff war in the Dulles technique. They will try to get plain answers which may not please everybody but will explain the true goals of the Administration.

YOU Said It: Writer Replies To Columnists' Jabs & Jibes

Editor:

I would like to reply to the storm my previous letter has raised.

To Mr. Gray:

Not trying to be condescending let me say, I would probably be impressed by the paper too if I were a freshman. However, since I've read it the last three and a half years, I know it can and has been better.

To Mr. Mundy:

Let me congratulate you on your timing . . . the last publication for almost two weeks. It's really a rather low form of argument, don't you think to say "If you can do better, do it"? I am neither a journalism nor an English major and I see no reason for my criticism to lose any strength because I have no talent in that field. If a surgeon does a poor job do you expect a reply such as that? You do write a fairly interesting column. I suppose it's because you do seem to have trouble with a lot of people, don't you?

To Mr. O'Sullivan:

It appears to me that you are begging the question. You can't please everyone so why try? That's sound reasoning. As to my little qualification to criticise . . I don't claim to have any other than that of being a reader. Who are you writing for?

If I am alone in my viewpoint then I am sure I'd rather forget the whole thing. If not, try to take the criticism with a little more grace. After all, we are fighting on your home field.

A Negative Look At Positivism

Ed Yoder

There's been talk around this campus of getting that apostle of the practical hosannas, Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, to make a speaking appearance.

Dr. Peale's fame as a "pulpit toastmaster" has been leaping. To judge by the taste of the reading public, his windy treatises on religion, ethics, morals, and how to win friends and lose gray hairs by religious positiveness, stand superior on the non-fiction front to the work of stylists and thinkers like Elmer Davis and E. B. White.

Davis and White have both had books on the best-seller lists within the last year or so. But neither of those books could bounce up and displace for long Dr. Peale's Power of Positive Thinking.

In this age of nerves atrophied by war-scare and nuclear fever, the nation's readers have in general laid by the sounder and more realistic thought of White and Davis for the polyanna-voice of Dr. Peale.

Everyone by now knows Dr. Peale's formula for peace and comfort: If you are worried because large numbers of people are hungry; if you are disturbed because Indians live in mud-huts in the midwest; if you are afraid the top of your head might be blown off tomorrow by a hydrogen bomb —take heart. All you have to do is go to the mirror, look yourself straight in the eye, and inhale. Then you say,

This done, you simply think that the situation isn't as bad as others make out. You go about your business mumbling, instead of "it's later than you think," "it's better than you think, it really is better than you think . . . "

We'd be suprised, maintains Dr. Peale, how much better things would be if we just thought they were better.

What about his qualifications to speak on the campus of a state university?

It is true that the ssociated Exhibiors of the National Education-Association has chosen Dr. Peale to receive the 1955 American Education Award. But this should be considered more feathers tarred to the hide of the "Associated Exhibitors" than a feather attached to the hat of Dr. Peale.

Dr. Peale, wih his specious education for the readers of this country in the pages of Power of Positive Thinking has thrown a finely ground dust in the eyes. The aim of education, contrarily, is to clear the eyes.

That's not the half of it. If Dr. Peale's attitudes toward the broad range of education may be judged by the organizations with which he has linked his name, his score dips to the minus category.

Dr. Peale was at one time chairman of the Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government. Another member of that same committee, R. C. Hoiles, a California-Colorado-Texas newspaper owner, argues that public education violates the Constitution and the Ten Commandments. Dr. Peale has taken membership in the Select Advisory Committee of Spiritual Mobilization and in the advisory committee of Freedom Clubs, Inc.

According to an editorial in the current issue of The Nation's Schools, both Spiritual Mobilization and the Freedom Clubs participated "in the campaign to bar UNESCO materials from the Los Angeles Public Schools."

These are the qualifications as speaker at a public school that Dr. Peale would lay at the feet of those who want him here.

Then . . . the lights would dim in Memorial Hall, the band would strike up the themesong of the "I don't care girl," a shiny new Trojan Horse would appear, rolling to a halt at center stage—with appropriate advertisements for The Power of Positive Thinking—and out would jump Dr. Peale, apostle of the practical hosanna.

'Horse Sense' & The Role Of The Intellectual

The Charlotte News

The principal speaker at a gathering of Charlotte businessmen a few days ago was introduced as a "Ph. D. with 'horse sense.'" The implication was, of course, that a combination of higher education and "horse sense" nowadays is remarkable indeed. We found the incident strangely symptomatic of a growing disillusionment about the role of the intellectual in modern society.

The professor—and to a large extent the traditional intellectual values he represents—has become the subject of suspicion and the target of ridicule.

He is accepted in certain company only if he posesses "horse sense." Now "horse sense" in this instance does not necessarily mean the hard-headed, practical realism associated with yesterday's rugged individualists. More often it indicates simply an acceptance of the popular, sloganzed cynicism of postwar America. The intellectual with "horse sense" is thus the intellectual who denies or at least conceals his intellectuality.

It is a surprising transition—this falling from grace of the professor. In many minds he has changed from a respected figure to a foolish or even dangerous one. He is associated with fudzy-headed economics, moral softness, naivete about Communists and something we have heard described as "visionary nonsense."

The real danger is that social pressure from today's militant demi-intellectuals will compel the professors actually to abandon their visionary hopes and motives; that, in their fear of being thought naive, they will replace intellectual values with "horse sense" (in its most limited modern definition).

That would, we believe, be a tragedy.

Pete Gets 26, Cunningham 25 As Tar Babies Win 13th Game

Parris Island's Richie Regan Held to Eight; Former Pro Star Savage Meshes 24 for Losers

By BERNIE WEISS

Pete Brennan, Bob Cunningham and Tom Kearns all scored better than 20 points last night as the Carolina freshmen won their 13th game in 14 starts, upsetting the strong Parris Island Marines, 93-83, in Woollen Gym.

All-American Richie Regan, the Marines' high scoring guard, was held to eight points in the rough affair.

Brennan tallied 26 as the now Quigg-less Tar Babies continued to rack up on another winning streak. Cunningham put 25 points through the hoops, 17 on foul shots, and Kearns put in 20.

Brennan shared scoring honors with Parris Island's Jim Haverder, who also had 26. Don Savage, formerly with the Syracuse Nationals, was second highest for the losers with 24.

The Tar Babies ran up an early lead thanks to their accuracy from the foul line and Parris Island's inaccuracy from the floor. At halftime Carolina led, 49-44, even though the Marines had narrowed the margin to one point with less than five minutes left before intermission.

In the second half, Brennan and Kearns managed to keep Carolina out front despite the rough and tumble, fancy-passing game of Parris Island. After Regan, who was the play-maker of the team, and Savage fouled out, the Marines fell farther and farther behind.

The close-cut (some were nearly bald) Marines came into the game heavily favored. They have lost only three games of 24, suffering other losses to Belmont Abbeay and Quantico.

The game was the first half of a sports double-header in the Woollen Gym. The gymnastics Illinois gymnasts, 45-35. squad defeated the University of

Carolina Puts Leadership On Line Friday

Leadership of the Atlantic Coast Conference will be at stake here tomorrow night when North Carolina plays host to Duke.

The Tar Heels of Coach Frank McGuire are currently perched all alone on top of the conference standings with a record of seven victories and only one loss, but the Blue Devils are just a game back at 6-2. A Duke victory Friday would leave both clubs with 7-2 ACC records.

North Carolina has bumped off Clemson and South Carolina twice, N. C. State, Virginia and Wake Forest for its seven victories, with a 10-point loss to Maryland the only sore spot on the record.

Coach Hal Bradley's charges have whipped Clemson and South Carolina twice, and Maryland and Virginia, but have dropped games to Maryland and N. C. State.

But while the conference lead is one matter to be decided, the matter of Duke avenging an earlier season loss to the Tar Heels in the Dixie Classic is another. North Carolina downed the Blue Devils in the Christmas holiday affair, 65-52. However, the game does not count in the official ACC standings.

Carolina students are reminded that today is the last day for the exchange of student pass book tickets for game tickets.

Although his squad took the first meeting of the season between the two teams, Tar Heel Coach Frank McGuire is regarding Friday's match as the "big test" to see which of the two contingents is the best.

"When we played Duke in the Dixie Classic," McGuire said, "both of the teams were kind of 'let down' after the previous day's action. We had been nosed out by N. C. State after we had moved into a lead near the end of the game and Duke had lost a tough six-point game to Minnesota. I think this will be the big test to see what the two teams can do against each other."

While the Duke Blue Devils will be out to "avenge" themselves against the Carolina varsity, the tables are exactly reversed with the UNC frosh, who will be out to even things up with the Duke freshmen. Duke's Blue Imps handed the Carolina frosh the only defeat they have suffered in 13 outings.

The frosh prelim will get under way at 6:30 p.m., with the varsity clash slated for 8:15.

Food For Thought at HARRY'S

Gymnasts Top Illini, 45-35

By BOB DILLARD

In the second event of last night's sports double-header at Woollen Gymnasium, the Carolina gymnastics squad rang up its second win of the season against two losses, by downing the University of Illinois, 45-35.

The Tar Heels appeared well on the road to victory in the early part of the match. At the end of three events, the Carolina squad led 30-18, but the Fighting Illini lived up to their names, and pulled to within four points with one event, tumbling, left to go. A last-minute first place, snatched from the Illini team by Pete Brumley, put the match on ice for the Tar Heel squad.

Other first place winners for Carolina were Gordon Hudson and Howard (tie) parallel bar, Hudson again, sidehorse, and Brumley in the tumbling.

The Summary:

Drake's Marks Accepted As U. S. Official

Phil Drake, a 6-4 University of North Carolina swimmer from Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., found himself holding two United States pool records today following their official acceptance.

Drake, only a sophomore, recorded his record-breaking times last year in going the 100-yard course butterfly in 58.2 and the long course butterfly in 60.2.

The official acceptance of the 19-year-old's marks came as welcome news as the North Carolina poolmen prepared to meet the University of Michigan team here today in Bowman-Gray Pool.

The Michigan squad, Tar Heel Coach Ralph Casey has warned his squad, is one of the best on the North Carolina schedule. Michigan boasts two 1952 Olympic team members and five boys of All-American rating.

Bumpy, holder of the world record in the 400 yard individual medley at 5:29, captains the touring midwest squad.

PHENOM AS FROSH

As a member of the University of North Carolina freshman team, Lennie Rosenbluth, the school's soph basketball stand-out, accumulated 627 points for an average of 26.1 per game.

Tankmen Swim Michigan Tonight

By BOB COLBERT

The varsity swimmers take on Michigan at 8 o'clock tonight in the indoor pool after defeating the University of Georgia at Athens, Ga., on Monday, 48-36.

The Michigan team, which swam N. C. State last night, will bring to Chapel Hill some of the nation's top swimmers. Four members of the team competed in the last Olympics, Captain Bumpy Jones in the 300 yard individual medley and the 200 yard breaststroke; Jack and Bert Wardrop, British National champions, in the backstroke and free style races; and Ron Gora in the 220 and 440 yard events.

Jack Wardrop, 220 yard NCAA champion, is regarded by many as one of the most versatile swimmers of all time. He holds no less than four British titles and is regarded as almost a cinch to make the Olympic team in 1956.

GEORGIA FALLS

The Tar Heels are now sporting a 5-1 record after defeating Georgia. The 300-yard medley relay team of Charlie Krepp, Phil Drake and Dick Baker, ACC recordholders, set a new pool record of 2:49.6. Krepp just missed the backstroke record held by former Olympic swimmer Alan Stack by seven-tenths of a second, swimming the event in 2:11.9.

The bright spot in the Georgia lineup was Hal Stolz. Stolz swam what is believed to be the best time in the nation in the 200 yard breaststroke event in 2:26.9.

200 Breaststroke: Stolz (G) Shannon (UNC), Arnold (G). 5:05.6. 2:26.9.

440 Freestyle: Drake (UNC),

A GUIDE FOR THE DATELESS

With the cost of dating rising higher and higher (seems the only pleasure that costs the same these days is Philip Morris), it is no wonder that so many of us men are turning to discus throwing. Naturally, we would prefer nuzzling warm coeds to flinging cold discs, but who's got that kind of money? Prices being what they are, the average man today has a simple choice: dating or eating.

Let me tell you how Finster Sigafoos, a man no smarter, no richer, than you or I, solved his dating problem. Finster came to college with the normal ambition of any average man: he wanted to find the prettiest coed on campus and make her his. He looked long and carefully, and at last he found her — a tall job named Kretchma Inskip, with hair like beaten gold.

He asked her for a date. She accepted. He appeared at her sorority house that night, smiling, eager, and carrying a bouquet of modestly priced flowers.

"Now then," said Kretchma, tossing the sleazy flora to a pledge, "where are we going tonight?"

Finster was a man short on cash, but long on ideas. He had prepared several attractive plans for this evening. "How would you like to go out to the Ag campus and see the milking machine?" he asked.

"Ick," she replied.

"Well then, how about running over to the dental school to fool with the drills?"

"Bah," she replied.

"Well, what would you like to do?" he asked.

"Come," said she, "to a funny little place I know just outside of town."

And away they went.

The place was Millionaires Roost, a simple country inn made of solid ivory. It was filled with beautiful ladies in backless gowns, handsome men in dickeys. Waiters scurried about bearing costly eats on flaming swords. Original Rembrandts adorned the walls. Philip Morris trays adorned the cigarette girls. Chained to each table was a gypsy violinist.

Finster and Kretchma were seated. "I," said Kretchma to the waiter, "will start with shrimps remoulade. Then I will have lobster and capon in madeira sauce with asparagus spears. For dessert I will have loads of out-of-season fruit."

"And you, Sir?" said the waiter to Finster.

"Just bring me a pack of Philip Morris," replied Finster, "for if ever a man needed the soothing, steadying, beneficent aromas of mild vintage tobaccos, it is me now."

So, smoking the best of all possible cigarettes, Finster watched Kretchma ingest her meal and calculated that every time her fetching young adam's apple rose and fell, he was out another 97¢. Then he took her home.

It was while saying goodnight that Finster got his brilliant idea. "Listen!" he cried excitedly. "I just had a wonderful notion. Next time we go out, let's go Dutch treat!"

By way of reply, Kretchma slashed him across the face with her house mother and stormed into the house.

"Well, the heck with her," said Finster to himself. "She is just a gold digger and I am well rid of her. I am sure there are many girls just as beautiful as Kretchma who will understand the justice of my position. For after all, girls get as much money from home as men, so what could be more fair than sharing expenses on a date?"

With good heart and high hopes, Finster began a search for a girl who would appreciate the equity of Dutch treat, and you will be pleased to hear that he soon found one.

Radio Grants Slated Here

The opening of competition for the 1955-56 WBT-WBTV Scholarships at UNC and State College in Raleigh was announced last week by WBT-WBTV and the Scholarship Selection Committee.

Graduates of high schools and preparatory schools in both North and South Carolina are eligible for the two scholarships, which were established by the Jefferson Standard Foundation, which owns and operates stations WBT-WBTV in Charlotte, to encourage and assist worthy students to obtain college training for a career in radio or television broadcasting.

The two scholarships, designed to cover the four year period of the recipients' college education, are each valued at $625 yearly. The UNC scholarship will be awarded to a student interested in the creative aspects of radio and TV, while the State College grant is intended for those with engineering interests, to be carried out in the Electrical Engineering Department.

During the past two years, only one scholarship, valued at $1,250 yearly, was granted, with the winner's interest deciding the school in which he would study.

The award is based on scholarship ability and achievement, character and interest in occupational entry into the field of radio or television. "The financial need of candidates is not considered, except that among those of equal merit in other respects preference is given to those having greater financial need," the Committee said.

Application blanks may be secured from William C. Friday, Assistant to the President, here. Deadline for return of completed applications is April 1.

All applications will be reviewed by the Selection Committee during the month of April and the six best selected.

After personal interviews with the six, the committee will decide upon the scholarship recipients, who will be announced on or about May 15.

Besides the dates of all campus activities, space is provided for a complete list of all campus organizations and presidents, personal memos and spring exam dates. Unlike to previous years, the calendar will be available only in places o fresidence. Hodever, a calendar has been made for every student on the campus.

'Nothing New'

"I have heard nothing new concerning whether Mr. Truman is coming or not," Dr. Alex Heard said yesterday.

Dr. Heard, chairman of the Committee on Established Lectures, has asked former President Harry Truman to deliver the annual Weil Lectures this spring.

Dr. Heard said that he would announce as soon as he knew if Truman could come.

GM Sets Recorded Concerts

Graham Memorial Student Union will present a new program of recorded concerts starting Monday, John Ludwig, chairman of Graham Memorial's Special Events Committee, announced yesterday.

The purpose of the program is to assure full usage of the facilities in Graham Memorial, he said. Up to the present time, commented Ludwig, students have been asked to request those records they would like to hear but only a few students have made the requests.

The program is designed on the basis of the poll recently conducted in Graham Memorial. The questionnaire included inquiries as to what time of day, what day of the week, what type of music, and at what volume students wished to hear recorded concerts.

The results of the poll showed that students wanted classical selections of music to be heard late in the afternoon and evening. Students, according to the poll, preferred to listen to the music at a medium volume. This would permit both listening and reading at the same time.

The program material is as follows: Monday, broadway musicals; Tuesday, popular classics (more familiar works); Wednesday, modern classics; Thursday, heavy classics (Mozart); Friday, quiet music (Jackie Gleason, Ray Anthony); Saturday, I. special concert and II. popular classics concert: Sunday, I. classical and II. special concert.

Special concerts are placed in the program for the students to make requests for works not presented in the program. Selections can be made from the Graham Memorial Library and records used from Kemp's Record Shop.

The program has been set up so that all weekday concerts will be scheduled from 4 to 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Saturday and Sunday I. concerts will be from 4:00 to 6:00 p. m. All Saturday and Sunday II. concerts will be from 8 to 10 o'clock in the evening. Times for radio broadcasts will be announced.

President Creasy To Talk To Profs Today In Opposition To Cut System

Executive Committee Termed 'Resolved' Against Fee Hike

By JACKIE GOODMAN

"I am strongly opposed to any fee raise and along with my committee have resolved to plan our action in a way that we can best fight the proposed fee raise," said student body President Tom Creasy yesterday.

Creasy said that when a dormitory fee raise was proposed by the Advisory Budget Commission to the state legislature Jan. 6, he appointed a group of students to study the problem with him.

"In the past several weeks we have done considerable research and have talked with many people in both an official and unofficial capacity in an effort to arrive at a course of action in the best interest of all," said Creasy. "As a result of this the committee has unanimously agreed that any increase in fees should be strongly opposed," he continued.

The student body president said that the plan of action which he and the committee will take against the proposed raise has not been decided upon yet. He mentioned several courses of action however, which included appearing before the Legislaturt, writing to the legislators and personally contacting the members of the Legislature individually.

"Although our plan of action has not been as yet determined. . . . we are determined to make a good fight against proposed fee raises," said Creasy.

In giving reasons why he is taking a stand against dorm fee raises, Creasy said, "For one thing, I feel that while there are many students here in school that can well afford to pay the cost as it is now and take care of a raise, I am mainly concerned with how many promising students will be kept out altogether by a raise."

COST DOUBLED

Creasy said that the establisned minimum cost of attending UNC has doubled from $475 in 1938 to $950 now.

"We as students and the men of the state as our legislative representives should not forget that one or the cornerstones of University tradition is that the doors have been kept open to qualified applicants irrespective of financial circumstances," said the student body president.

"Also," he continued, "there are many living distinguished alumni of this university that could not have come here at all except for that tradition, not excepting the Governor himself."

"For these reasons," concluded Creasy," and because I feel that to limit our student body because of high expenses today would limit the leadership o four state tomorrow."

Kollegian In College

According to a story appearing in yesterday's Durham Morning Herald, "A former faculty member of the Kollege of Musical Knowledge is going back to school.

"Georgia Carroll, who was married to the old professor Kay Kyser while serving on his staff, has enrolled as a special student at the University of North Carolina," said the story.

Miss Carroll, who said that she has audited courses here before, will take a course in sketching this semester, according to The Herald.

Dr. Curnen and his associates have established laboratory procedures already which will aid in identifying the viruses recovered from blood, fecal samples, or other specimens from patients with suspected polio.

APO's Book Exchange Is Now In Operation

The student book exchange run by Alpha Phi Omega is now in full operation in New East Annex.

The book exchange will be run on a strictly non-profit basis with only a 10 percent fee of the book price charged by APO.

The system is set up so that students bring their used books to the exchange, set their own prices and fill out the claim forms. One of these forms the student will keep, one APO will have and one will be placed in the book. When the book has been sold, APO will notify the student and he will collect his price.

Hours for the book exchange are from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. daily and until noon on Saturdays. The book exchange will run through next Wednesday.

Two Profs See Their Volume Go On Sale

Two professors in the University Sociology Department saw their book go on sale here Tuesday.

Rupert B. Vance and Nicholas J Demerath, editors of the book The Urban South, were assisted by Chapel Hillians F. Stuart Chapin Jr., associate professor of city planning; Floyd Hunter, associate professor in the School of Social Work; Elizabeth Fink, executive and editorial assistant in social science, and Sara Smith, now an instructor in the sociology department at Woman's College.

The volume consists of a series of studies on the process of the South's urbanization. Cost of the book is $5. It was released by the University Press.

The book is on exhibition in the front hall of the University Library.

Two UNC Students Are Fined In Traffic Court

Two UNC students were fined in court here this week.

Charles S. Ackerman, 121 W Rosemary St., was served a warrant this week in Town Hall for parking at a fire hydrant.

Ackerman, whose home address is 210 W. 90th St., New York, N. Y., was released on a $50 bond. It was his second offense since Dec. 15.

TRI DELT SUPPER

Delta Delta Delta will give a spagetti supper as its annual scholarship benefit Sunday from 6 until 8 p. m.

The supper will be held at the Tri Delta house and the tickets may be obtained from any Tri Delta for $1 each.

20-Cent Days Gone

The price of cigarettes at Graham Memorial, formerly 20 cents, has increased to 23 cents per package.

The cigarette machine in the first-floor hall, in the past geared to receive two dimes, now requires 25 cents for operation, returning two cents change.

Jim Wallace, director of Graham Memorial, says any decrease or increase in the price of cigarettes is a result of Graham Memorial policies, and not of the University.

All profits derived from the cigarettes go directly to the student union, as they have done in the past, he said, and the reason for the increase was stated as being an opportunity to enlarge the student union budget, and thereby aid the students who participate in Student Union Activities, according to Wallace.

Chief Will Carry Out Legislature Resolution

Student body President Tom Creasy said yesterday that he will appear before the Faculty Council this afternoon to express opposition to certain parts of the new cut system which was voted into existence by the Council last Nov. 19.

According to Creasy, his appearance will be the result of a resolution presented to the student Legislature by Manning Muntzing and Max Crohn and passed by that body which opposed some parts of the system.

After the resolution had been signed by him as president of the student body, Muntzing and Crohn began research on the cut system and also formulated arguments against parts of it, according to Creasy.

"I have been working with Manning for the last few days, and . . . I will present the argument for the student body before the Faculty Council," Creasy said.

The bill passed by the student Legislature at its last session which favored certain changes in the cut ruling was introduced and voted upon at the same meeting. The group suspended its rules to facilitate the vote.

The recommended changes which were proposed for the consideration of the General Council of the faculty, were: that undergraduates taking courses listed in the General Catalogue for advanced undergraduate and graduate, and junior and senior electives, be put on attendance probation after missing 20 per cent of their classes: that such students be dropped from the course in question after missing 25 per cent of the classes; that the dean of the school or college in which the student is registered determine whether the student will remain in residence after dropping two or more courses; and that the work taken up while a student was in unexcused absence be made up at the convenience of the student and the instructor.

Athletic Club Slates Plans

A list of plans for the spring semester for the Monogram Club has been drawn up, according to club president Wilbur Jones.

These plans include continued sponsorship of the Blue-White football game which climaxes spring football practice. The game will probably be played on March 12 this year. Also in connection with the Blue-White game, the club will sponsor a "Miss Blue and White" contest for a queen to reign over the game, Jones said.

Trophies will be awarded at the game to the varsity coach of the year and the freshman coach, as chosen by the club. The winning team will also receive a trophy.

The club is also planning to sponsor a party for orphans during the Easter season.

To Be Telecast

The Duke-Carolina clash tonight in Woollen Gym will be televised over WUNC-TV, according to Athletic Director Chuck Erickson.

Erickson said previous friction between Big Four schools as to the televising of contests has been settled.

Actual telecast will begin with the freshman game between the Baby Devils and the Tar Babies at 6:30 p. m.

Erickson said he still was not sure whether the N. C. State-Carolina game here later this month will be televised.

STATISTICS COLLOQUIUM

"Inverting certain patterned matrices occuring in statistics" will be the subject of a talk by S. N Roy, professor of statistics, at the meeting of the Colloquium Hall. Discussion will follow his talk.

The Quarterly Starts Annual Fiction Contest

For the fifth year in a row, the Carolina Quarterly is running a fiction contest, but now there are two prizes instead of one.

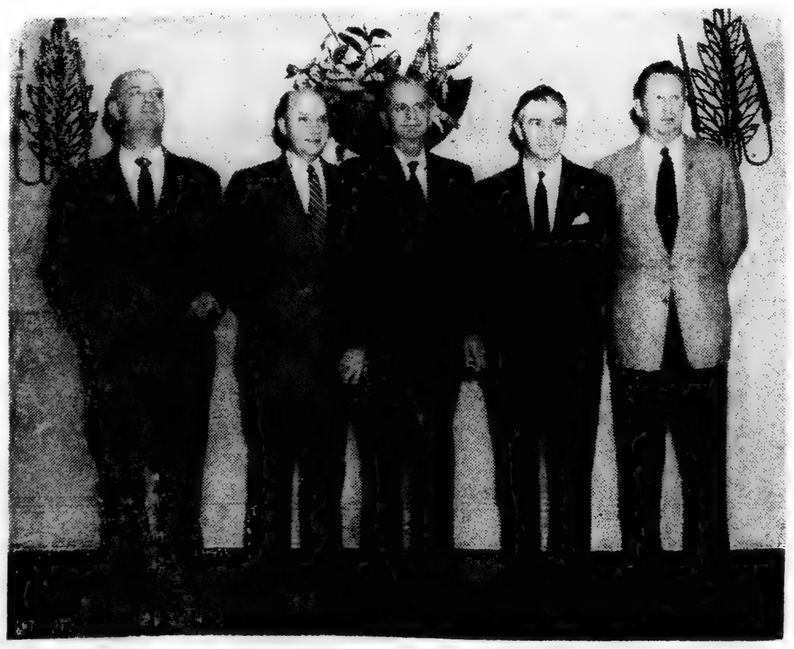
In previous years, a prize of $50 has been awarded to the writer of the best short story. This year, an additional prize of $25 will be given to the runner-up.

Authors must be enrolled in the Consolidated University at the time their work is submitted. Manuscripts should be between 1,500 and 5,000 words long, typewritten and unsigned. The author's name and address should be attached on a separate sheet of paper.

The judges this year will be Mrs Doris Betts, winner of the 1953 Mademoiselle College Fiction Contest, and John Ehle, writer for WUNC's American Adventure and instructor in the Radio Department.

Te deadline for all entries in the Contest will be April 1. Winning entries will be published in the spring Quarterly. The judges reserve the right to withhold the awards if, in their opinions, the entries do not deserve them.

Last year, the winning story was Louise Hardman's "The Lost Beach." It was first printed in the Quarterly, then in Mademoiselle, women's magazine.



Speaker Hails Open & Free Universities

"Our colleges and universities must remain open and free as a means of seeking the truth in this age of some hysteria," Dr. Raymond Paty, member of the three-man board of directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority, told an audience here last week.

"There is a necessity for freedom of the mind and freedom of disagreement if we are to come to adequate solutions of the problems of the 20th century," he added.

Dr. Paty, formerly president of the University of Alabama and chancellor of the University of Georgia, spoke before Emory University alumni from the Chapel Hill-Durham-Raleigh area at a dinner session in the Carolina Inn.

There are some 100 Emory alumni in the area, said William Geer of the UNC social science faculty. Geer pointed out that similar meetings of the university's alumni are being held at this time all over the country.

'People, Situations & Consequences'

Professor Alexander Heard, in a letter printed on this page, calls attention to the significance of the Supreme Court's decision on segregation in the day of the cold war.

The letter arrived, by coincidence, on the same day The Daily Tar Heel received the announcement by another faculty member, Dr. W. C. George of the medical school, that his petition for continued segregation had reached Governor Hodges. Of some interest is the comment by Dr. George that virtually none of the signatures on the petition were obtained in Chapel Hill.

"Apparently," said Dr. George, "people in Chapel Hill have come to think of the race problem in concepts of slogans rather than in concepts of people, situations and consequences."

Dr. Heard, we think, aptly demonstrates in his letter where prudent consideration of people, situations and consequences amid the present-day rivalry of systems must lead: to "prompt and well-mannered execution of the Supreme Court's directions."

"Then," as he says, "the United States can face the world clean of hands, clear in purpose and united in spirit."

An Isolated Dissent

It is often forgotten that a little objection can go a long way.

By that token, any protest — no matter how isolated — against the oaths of loyalty that are administered to teachers in this (or any other) school is better than no protest at all. We are certain that the majority of professors find the oaths odious; but it has become obvious that the same majority are content to sign the oaths as a matter of expediency.

We have learned of a reversay; one instructor in the University, called upon this year to sign the oath, appended a note expressing his rejection of the idea. He signed; but he did not fail to make clear his objection to signing. We hope that isolated action may set a new precedent.

"A university," said Robert Maynard Hutchins of Chicago, "is a kind of continuing Socratic conversation."

The word Socratic, when campuses begin to think and act on loyalty oaths, can's be under-emphasized. For Socrates himself was a firm believer in the isolated voices, a believer that one voice among a thousand that are silent or neutral can often stay a tottering ideal.

Gracious Living - XXI

The terrifying, damnable march of mechanization is once more in danger of ensnaring the free human will. Gracious Living in Chapel Hill is stubbing its toe daily on a machine. It happens in the basement of Graham Memorial, where a cookie-dispensing device sits innocently, full of cheese crackers and chocolate crackers and fig newtons and something called Taylor-tarts, all waiting in horizontal chutes for the passerby's nickel. But consider this: In one of the chutes, the tasteless Taylor-tarts block the passage of the fig newtons, so that one must wait until they are gone before the fig newtons are accessible. Often, we have noticed, the cheese crackers and chocolate crackers disappear, leaving a full row of Taylor-tarts and fig newtons; the fig newtons are in full view through the plastic window, but they are inaccessible to the fig newton-fanciers who are justifiably too proud to fill the machine with nickels and their pockets with Taylor-tarts just to get to what they want. Somebody, we know, is going to bash the window open one of these days, leaving the Taylor-tarts right in their cursed compartments and gorging himself with fig newtons. But for now, the cookies go unbought, Gracious Living continues frustrated.

Double-Talk On Cut Rule Is Confusing

Louis Kraar

THEY PUT a little something extra in our envelopes this time.

I'm talking about the letter enclosed in the class ticket envelopes which said that if you cut over three times, you fail a course.

Although I realize, as the letter says, that attendance "is essential to a good class," it's equally true that a good class will be well attended without rules.

Why the University has to make so much of a matter that has been strictly between students and faculty amazes me. Assuming most students are reasonably mature, they will want to attend class. If they don't want to attend, they're cheating themselves.

Dr. C. P. Spruill, author of the letter, writes that a student "should realize that minor emergencies are to be expected from time to time and that he has the full responsibility of counting an occasional absence within the limit of three unexcused absences in each class . . ."

Just what "minor emergencies" are, only my imagination and the unpredictable interpretation of deans can decide.

According to this same information-packed letter, excuses may be issued by deans "when extraordinary circumstances have compelled his (the student's) absence from class."

Now we're stuck with two fancy terms. And, naturally, neither are explained.

If you miss class because of "extraordinary circumstances," you may receive an excuse from your dean. But watch out for those "minor emergencies" because they count as one of your three cuts.

The academic double-talk of the Spruill letter is almost as ridiculous as the cut rule.

H. A. SIEBER, a young Chapel Hillian who recently published a book if poetry called "In This Marian Year," has this story to tell about one of his poems.

Sieber sent a copy of "A Cruel Imagery," a poem dedicated to Albert Einstein, to the noted physicist.

Einstein replied thanking Sieber but went on to say that he didn't really understand the poem.

"I started to write him and tell him him I didn't understand his Theory of Relativity either," declared Sieber.

THERE'S AN almost criminal practice going on in a certain Western Durham institution, according to the last issue of the Duke Chronicle.

The Duke student paper, which modestly calls itself the "tower of campus thought," has decided that "we've had enough of blue jeans."

Apparently some of the commoners took to wearing the rural rompers on campus. And the Chronicle, from its Ivy League tower, noticed "a tendency this year toward increasing sloppiness in men's dress, regardless of class."

I sympathize with this great problem of Duke student leaders, but the last paragraph of the Chronicle editorial probably explains the breach of taste:

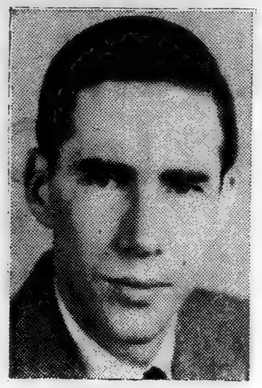
YOU Said It

The Gage Of Battle: 'How Does The Dark Man Fare In Your Land?'

(The writer of the following letter is a professor of political science in the University.—Editor.)



Editor:

North Carolina is presently searching for ways to accommodate to the segregation ruling issued by the Supreme Court last May. This ruling may well prove to be the Court's most important action of this century.

Regardless of what measures are ultimately worked out to assure equal educational opportunities to white and Negro Americans, two results of the Court's action seem inescapable. Another step—a supremely important and unique step — has been taken in fulfillment of the American dream. The American dream has always envisioned equal opportunity for all men. And, since it is hard to make this kind of dream come true, an enormous responsibility has fallen upon all Americans to respect the Court's purposes, and to act with speed and good will.

By the nature of our times and the nature of our country, whether improved and equal education is achieved for Negro Americans, and how it is achieved, will affect the life of every citzen of the United States. In this, no man has a private destiny.

The future of Negro Americans is a large part of the future of the United States. This is not alone because of their large number. This country was once the unrivaled emblem of the hopes of the world. We are now engaged in a great struggle for the faith of men all around the world, against another and newer great hope. Most of the men for whose faith we struggle are like Negro Americans: they have dark skin.

The struggle in which these persons play such a part is really two struggles, different yet presently inseparable. The United States and the Soviet Union are engaged in a rivalry of nations. A rivalry of nations is familiar to our time, and in the fleeting second which is American history, that nation has never lost. There is also a contest in the world that crosses the boundaries of nations and reaches individuals everywhere. This is a rivalry of systems: one, imperfectly called communism, with its initiative centered in the Soviet Union, and the other, political democracy, with its exemplars around the globe and its strength centered in the United States.

The battle of the nations and the battle of the systems is being waged and in the end must be decided among the peoples of dark skin. Whether in Nyasaland or Laos, in India or Indonesia, in China or Ecuador, whether on the islands of the Pacific or on the Gold Coast, the soldiers of victory will have dark skin. President Abraham Lincoln would have said that God must have loved these peoples, for he made so many of them. The gage of battle is down: How does the dark man fare in your land? How does he di under your system?

These are challenges to Americans of the next half century. Religion and education are the ultimate sources of power. With freedom and equal opportunity for them both, the answers can be our strength instead of our weakness.

This is to say that the ultimate test of the United States before the world is not its armed might, but its purpose and its record. Yet, if we fulfill the purposes of the American dream and enoble the record, we shall also increase our might. All these things are required if we are to survive the rivalry of nations and the rivalry of systems.

The prompt and well mannered execution of the Supreme Court's directions will bring together better schooling in the years ahead to millions of Americans. Better schooling means greater mental and manual contribution to the common wealth that makes a nation strong. It is not alone, however, in the making of more guns and of more men able to fire them that the greatest new power is to be found. It is what can happen in the hearts of men that can most strengthen America.

An English jurist once said that it is not enough for a judge to be just. He must also give the appearance of geing just; he must convince the parties to the contest, and all who look on, that justice is geing done. When Americans feel that they receive an equal chance to learn in skill, to grow in mind, and to deepen in appreciation of the beauty of the world, then they can feel that justice is being done, and then their strength and their resolve will be multiplied.

Then, too, the United States can face the world clean of hands, clear in purpose, and united in spirit. Strength from within engenders strength from without, and there need be no fear.

Reaction Piece

Campaigns Already In Low Gear

David Mundy

Lest someone hasn't noticed, the spring campaigns are underway. While walking across campus, I noticed someone approaching from some distance. He was nodding, smiling, and speaking to everyone he passed. He did the same to me. I presented my customary scowl and walked on; Then I recalled who he was; one of the UP'ers who has said that he isn't running.

V. L. Yoder's (V. L. for Very literary) candidacy for editor has been effectively announced by his trips through the slums i.e., he has been eating at Lenoir for a week or so. If you think it crowded there between now and spring elections, you can attribute it to the "champions of the common man" who are trying to get closer to constituents and votes.

I can't quite decide if Louis ("The Funniest Thing Happened to Me") Kraar is a candidate. He probably is, since I've seen him strolling across campus several times every day, whereas before I almost never saw him there.

And then managing editor Fred Powledge might run. His best strategy would be a promise to never again carry a news story about "George the campus Collie, and the Great, Great Chapel Hill and Carolina Campus Institution That He is."

Anyway, the voter won't have much of a choice. Literary essays on Nosnevets, the Creeping Anti-Intellectual Trend, and Negative Looks at Positivism vs. Stories of What Happened to Me in the Dairy Bar and the Goody Shop, vs. George the Campus Collie.

I do hops that the DTH's weekly letterwriter Sisk doesn't take offense at jibes about his criticisms. Mayhaps he will notice that his letters have, almost alone, constituted the Letter-to-the-Editor column for some weeks. The mere fact that the DTH gets such a letter, critical or not, tickles it "pink." (I shouldn't say "ping," else Messrs. Kuralt and Yoder might accuse me of 'white-collar McCarthyism' again.)

Acceptable as my own is a quote from writer Sisk's latest letter: "I am neither a journalism nor an English major, and I see no reason for my criticism to lose any strength because I have no talent in that field."

'This Could Spoil The Whole Racket, Men'

Ridgway & Congressional Anxiety

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON — Rep. Overton Brooks is inclined to be wordy but the question he put to General Matthew B. Ridgway, Army Chief of Staff, was plain enough. Did the general feel in view of Red China's threats that it would jeopardize the safety of the country to go through with the planned reduction of the Army by 140,000 men?

General Ridgway's hands had hung quietly at his side as his immediate superior, Army Secretary Robert Stevens, sitting next to him at the witness table, defended the cut. He clenched them as Brooks drove the point home, softly uncurled them as he answered quietly:

"I think we should not reduce the size of the Army."

The Congress at last had an answer on the record to prove the widely-rumored story that General Ridgway felt that the Army's commitments were outgrowing the Army's capacity. The general has been discreet, but what he refused to say before Senate committees had increased Congressional anxiety.

Ridgway retreated to the safer shelter of an executive session when Chairman Carl Vinson pursued the matter. The chairman said he thought the country ought to know what the Army's commitments are, as of now, and whether those commitments can be met with the new program. He promptly acceded, however, to Ridgway's plea to be heard privately on that matter.

The Army chief of staff is in a most difficult position. He has positive views born of long experience, including service in Korea and as Supreme Commander of NATO. He is impervious to the quick brilliance and glamour of Admiral Arthur Radford, chairman of the Joint Chiefs, who has pushed steadily for a harder policy in the Pacific.

But Ridgway's commander-in-chief is the country's most famous soldier, elected President in part because Americans trust his judgment in war situations. Ridgway happens also to be one of the career officers who feels that too many career officers have been essaying the role of Monday-morning quarterbacks to the President.

Army discipline seems more durable than that of the other services. When former President Truman cut the Navy, the admirals, led by Radford himself, mutinied. Air Force Chief of Staff Hoyt Vandenberg fought cuts in his service against his former supreme commander in Europe when in the painful grip of cancer.

The veteran Armed Services chairman, Rep. Vinson, has watched the United States get into three wars for which it was not adequately prepared. He proposes to support the President but he is taking nothing for granted from a Defense Department whose head, Secretary Charles Wilson, only last week described the Formosa situation as "just a ripple" in defense preparations.

Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

THE HORSE was horsing abour near Spencer, when I saw him; and lo! Mr. Neckley, the Giraffe, was with him!

"And Mr. Wump," The Horse said reprovingly, hoofing The Frog into view from behind a forward Iris spear. "Do not leave out Mr. Neckley's alter ego, who is my consultant on low-level views of things. Not that there is need for Wump's peculiarly depressed views, if one is to credit our Peerless Leader's pronunciamentoes on how we-uns never had it so good."

"Wump!" Mr. Wump editorialized on this.

Neckley moved majectically closer to Spencer and chewed his cud ruminatively, not to say speculatively, as he stared into an upper window of that distaff dorm. Suddenly, the giraffe's stubby tail started to pendulate.

"He's sort of rushing the season," The Horse acknowledged, shrugging his withers. "Spring is still far distant. But to judge from his waggish reaction of his posterior appendage, so apparently is a coo-ed or three. Neckley privately informed me that red flannel underthings leave him, if not the wearer thereof, cold."

So, obviously, Mr. Neckley was not gazing on red flannels, active or passive; yet, The Horse evinced no interest. They didn't see eye to eye.

"In a wallleyed sort of way, we do," The Horse set me straight. "We are both Thomists, if I may philosophize in a Philosophic way of speaking. But while we both agree that everything good begins with sensory perception—which Mr. Neckley is now demonstrating via his caudal appendage—I hold that a perceived subject worthy of study depends as much on reason as on revelation."

O? So?

"Ergo, not to mention ipso facto or de nature rerum, reason informs me it is too danged cold to be exercised over revelations," The Horse tossed off some Ullmanian linguistics. "Pure reason, yessir."

"In the immortal words of Poor Dobbin," The Horse declaimed, rocking to and fro on his creaky legs, " 'All would live, but none would grow old.' Me, I accept that some day old age will lay its frosty snow on my shingles."

Some day, Some day. What was that postcard Poor Dobbin had got in his mail . . .? 'Dear Horsie: When did you die? I saw your corpse rocking on a rocker, on TV, several nights ago.' How 'bout that?

"Well, at least he admitted I was on my rocker," The Horse offered, "the guy who wrote that slur. From what one hears along the highways and the byways, such a condition is remarkable, not to say unknown, on TV. Leave us say that like TV's biased detractors, my correspondent's vision goes not beyond the silver-tubed screen. Also, that card was from a young pal in the newspaper business."

What was the significance of this?

, "Television's most ardent detractors and hope-you-die critics are found in newspaperdom, which you will notice rhymes with 'bum'," The Horse stated. "Fear compounds with myopia to give birth to asininities. Do I not recall my Uncle Chesnut and Cousin Piebald, not to overlook Grandpap Bay, neighing and inveighing against the horseless-carriage, when that was new?"

Well, the horseless-carriage had retired The Horse's equine counterparts to the pasture, had it not?

"Yup," The Horse affirmed, with one eye on Mr. Neckley's now violently wagging tail, "and that is just what is going to happen to newspapermen who, like a certain capitally located, if not capitally run, daily, he-he chi]dlishly while they type their childlishly non-sequituring mouthings against TV. They'll be put out to pasture while other and more opportunistic journalists go along with TV instead of going under against it."

He could suggest . . ., Just one small item,

"Let the newspaper print a complete programming of channel-offerings in all North State cities, instead of ostriching along with just programs of their cities; instead of snidely, not to say stupidly, referring to Educational TV appropriations when calling attention to cuts in departments of state administration that have no more relation than the ill-conceived newspaper propaganda has to logic. I" elaborate, if you—"

Something In Black panthered past, and for all his talk of Spring being far distant, The Horse lost interest. In me, I mean. I thought The Horse was short-sighted to be so easily distracted-

"Wump!" Mr. Wump retorted, bouncing along in he wake of The Horse. "Wump!"

Not only Mr. Neckley is rushing the season!

And What To Drink?

. . . from the Christian Science Monitor

When you give your food order in any restaurant in the South and stop talking for a fleeting second, the waitress begins to tap her foot and with pencil poised, asks, "And what to drink?" . . . And if you say, "I'll let you know later," the waitress looks on you with pity, contempt and frustration but mostly frustration. Nothing makes the little people of this world madder than to hit smack up against a guy who refuses to send Telegram No. 2 to his mother on Mother's Day, so to speak.

When a waitress asks me "And what to drink?" I always smile broadly . . . because I am thinking of what would have happened to a waiter in old Mouquin's or Rectors or Little Hungary if he had asked a gentleman diner, —"And what to drink." The waiter would have been found at the bottom of the Hudson River sealed in cement . . . I do not wish to make a scene, so I meekly say, "all right, make it coffee." but they can't stop me from thinking of—cement.—The Carolina Israelite.

Tar Heels Hosts To Blue Devils Tonight, Frosh In Prelim

Both the Carolina varsity and the Tar Heel freshman team will have stern purposes in mind tonight when they take the floor here in Woollen Gym against the respective varsity and freshman teams of Duke.

The frosh preliminary is scheduled for 6:30 o'clock, with the varsity ACC clash slated to follow at approximately 8:15.

The UNC upperclassmen will be out to keep the top spot in the Atlantic Coast Conference by claiming their 10th win of the season and their eighth against only one defeat in the conference, while the frosh will be out to avenge a five-point loss to the Baby Devils which broke a nine-game winning streak last month.

Coach Frank McGuire's varsity charges, who took over the top slot in the conference with their upset of nationally ranked N. C. State in mid-January, have now bumped over conference foes Clemson and South Carolina twice, Wake Forest and Virginia as well as State.

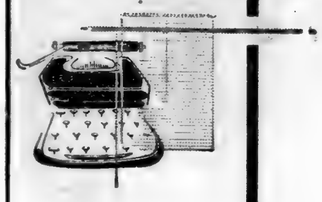
But while North Carolina has fared well within the conference, the team has met with tough opposition from the outside. The Tar Heels have been able to win only one of four against outside competition, with losses to Louisiana State, Alabama and William and Mary and a win over Southern California. The other victory and defeat in the Tar Heel's 9-5 overall record came against Duke and State, respectively, in the Dixie Classic.

Carolina's 65-52 win over Duke in the Classic is not being regarded as an accurate barometer by Coach McGuire. Not only had both teams just finished playing a "toughie" (Duke lost to Minnesota and Carolina to State) but McGuire figures both teams are a good deal stronger now than they were in December.

McGuire is also concerned about the between - semesters lay-off. Carolina had been going strong before exams, but there is fear that the slight holiday may have cooled the team.



Tonight Carolina will start the same five which led the team before. They are Lennie Rosenbluth and Jerry Vayda at forwards, Bob Young at center, and Tony Radovich and co-captain Al Lifson at guards.

Duke will probably start Joe Belmont and Hal Turner at the guards, Junior Morgan at center, and Ronnie Mayer and Bob Lakata at forwards.

In Talk To Faculty:

Leave Number Of Cuts Up To Instructors — Creasy

President Suggests Minimum, Not Maximum, Law Be Adopted

"We would like to see minimum uniformity to the extent that a student can have at least three unexcused cuts, but will not be put on attendance probation until having missed 20 percent of his classes."

"We feel that how many cuts a teacher allows over and above the three provided three unexcused cuts should be left up to the discretion of each individual teacher."

"Students believe in a uniform cut system, but only as a minimum one," said Creasy. "This means that in no course would students have less cuts than is outlined in a uniform system, but that, first and foremost, enforcement of attendance is a matter between individual instructors and students," he continued.

Creasy said the change was suggested because instructors vary as to "stress on class lecture, stress on outside reading and amount of teaching." He also said that students vary as to "ability to learn best from class and ability to learn best by their own efforts."

"Thus, said the student body president, "it is hard to make one overall hard and fast rule that would be just and adequate for all concerned or even a portion of those concerned."

"I believe that uniformity is good, but only to a certain degree, for having such a hard and fast rule in existence is to take away much from the individual teacher-student relationship which I think is good and necessary," said Creasy.

Additional recommended changes which Creasy proposed to the Faculty Council included a suggestion that the rule be changed to read that only unexcused absences during the two day period before and after vacation should count as double cuts. Any student, said Creasy, with an excused absence during the period, should not be given a double cut.

Creasy also recommended that the part of the rule which says that the dean of a student's school will decide whether that student may continue in residence upon the student's being dropped or having quit one course also be changed. He proposed that the number of courses after which a student's residence be decided upon be changed from one to two.

The final change which Creasy proposed to the Council was the addition of a provision to the sys-

Williams Has Busy Schedule

Michigan's Gov. G. Mennen Williams has a busy itinerary facing him when he arrives in North Carolina Tuesday.

Governor Williams will be the first in a series of prominent Democrats who will appear here to speak under the auspices of the Young Democrats Club.

According to Bob Windsor of Chapel Hill, president of the YDC, Governor Williams will be accompanied by Mrs. Williams, his state police aid, two pilots, and several other persons who are as yet unnamed.

Windsor said tentative plans are being made for Governor Hodges' personal car to meet Governor Williams at the airport to take him to Raleigh for a conference with Governor Hodges. However, confirmation from the Governor's office on these plans is still pending.

Also tentative are plans for Governor Williams to appear on the Scott-Jarrett program on WTVD Tuesday afternoon. Windsor says that he still hasn't gotten the okay from the station officials.

The Michiganite will then come here for a tour of the campus, after which he will be guest at a dinner given in his honor in the ballroom of the Carolina Inn, where Governor Williams and his party will be staying.

Governor Williams will make his speech at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall. There will be no admission charge and all students and faculty members who wish to attend are cordially invited, Windsor said.

Following the speech there will be a reception in Graham Memorial.

Anyone who is interested in attending the dinner for Governor Williams may do so by contacting A. W. Sapp, first year law student.

Pastor Signed To Play For Germans

Tony Pastor, above, will play the annual Germans Club winter dance Friday night. Earl Bostic will play the concert.

Tony Pastor & Bostic To Play For Germans

Tony Pastor and Earl Bostic will provide music for the Winter Germans, which will be held next Friday and Saturday, according to Jake Rountree.

Rountree said yesterday that Tony Pastor will play for the dance to be held Friday night from 9 p. m. until 1 a .m. in Woollen Gymnasium. Bostic, he said, will give a concert Saturday afternoon from 4 until 6 o'clock in Memorial Hall.

Pastor's musical career began at an early age when he joined the Commanders under Irving Aaronson. Three years later he opened his own night club in Hartford, Conn., where he featured his own orchestra.

After the depression forced him to close the club, Pastor joined several touring bands. The last of these was that of Artie Shaw.

Soon after 1939 he left Shaw's band and formed his own.

Among the records which Pastor and his band have made are "Dinah," "Your Red Wagon," "Sentimental Music" and "Red Silk Stockings.'

Bostic formed his musical aggregation in 1938, after being featured with the Don Redman, Cab Calloway and Lionel Hampton orchestras. With the exception of three years during World War II during which he played only for armed forces, Bostic and his combo have played around the country since that time .

The records which he has made include "Mambolina," "Always," "Moonglow" and "Flamingo."

German, Swiss Fellowships Offered

Berlin, Keil Universities Slate Grants

A fellowship at the University of Berlin and an International House award at the University of Keil are among the grants for German Study open to American students during 1955-56.

These and other opportunities for graduate study in Germany were announced by Kenneth Holland, president of the Institute of International Education, recently.

The Free University of Berlin offers two awards which include tuition and a small stipend plus lodging at the student house.

The International House of the University of Keil offers a tuition and maintenance fellowship in the field of economics, political science and sociology. The award is for research work at the University's Institute of World Economics.

The Deutscher Akademischer Austauschdienst offer 10 fellowships to be used at universities and institutions of higher learning in the Federal Republic of Western Germany.

Other awards usually available to American students for German study include a tuition and maintenance award at the University of Cologne.

In the past the Aachen Technische Hochschule has offered a tuition and maintenance award in the field of construction, mechanical or electrical engineering, architecture and mining.

The Bavarian Ministry of Education and Culture has offered two tuition and maintenance awards for six months of study at the Universities of Munich, Erlanger, Wurzburg, or at one of the four philosophical - theological institutes in Bavaria.

The competitions are open to men and women between the ages of 20 and 35. Candidates must be U. S. citizens.

Other eligibility requirements are: a bachelor's degree by the time of departure; a good command of the German language; a good academic record and capacity for independent study; good character, personality and adaptability and good health.

Information on the German awards may be obtained from the Institute, 1 East 67th St., New York, N. Y. Closing date for application is March 1, 1955.

Swiss Colleges Set Several Graduate Aids

Opportunities for American graduate students to study in Switzerland during 1955-56 have been made available by Swiss universities and societies and by the Scientific Exchange.

Universities offering tuition grants are: Ben Fribourg, Geneva, Lausanne, Neuchatel, Zurich, the Federal Institute of Technology (Zurich) and the St. Gallen School of Economics and Public Administration.

These grants will be supplemented by stipends given by Swiss educational institutions and societies under the Swiss American Student Exchange.

The grant-aid practice was established in 1927 in appreciation of that given by American colleges and universities for Swiss students.

Fields of study open to American students in Switzerland include architecture, chemistry, engineering, geology, physics, international law, economics, banking and insurance, as well as language and literature.

Application is open to men and women ,preferably under 35 years of age. Candidates must be citizens and have a bachelor's degree good academic record and knowledge of French or German.

Further information on the Swiss awards may be obtained by writing to the Institute of International Education.

Still Silent
Nothing more has been heard about ex-President Harry Truman's coming to the campus this spring.

Truman has been invited to deliver the annual Weil Lectures.

Dr. Alex Heard, chairman of the Committee on Established Lectures, said yesterday he has heard nothing more about Truman's coming, but would make an announcement as soon as he did.

Creasy Vetoes $1,100 Bill Giving Aid To UNC Band

The bill recently passed by the student Legislature which favored the appropriation of $1,100 to the University Band has been vetoed by student body President Tom Creasy, it was learned yesterday.

Creasy, who originally recommended the proposal, said, "The lack of legislative funds was the primary reason for the veto."

Going into detail about the thumbing down of appropriation, Creasy said "my original purpose in recommending to certain parties that the Legislature give the band vitally needed financial assistance was not that such legislation would furnish the band with all its needs, but that such an act by a representative group would get the ball rolling and eventually raise the band to the level that it, as far as support is concerned, should be maintained at."

As to why he put the brakes on the proposal after the University Party had pushed it through the Legislature, Creasy reasoned that "the Audit Board appealed to me that the Legislature simply did not have the necessary funds in its unappropriated balance to facilitate such a bill." Creasy is a UP member.

"I placed my veto on the bill, thus killing it even though I thought it was highly worthy, solely because it was untimely and I felt it would endanger the procedures of student government by digging into an already nearly drained budget."

But why was the budget nearly drained at this early date?

Creasy answered, "dormitory improvements last spring left our appropriations at one of its lowest ebbs. Our surplus has diminished and we must begin a building-up process."

Will the band try to raise funds funds of its own accord?

To this Creasy replied, "I have talked to band President Ken Pruitt and he seemed to feel that certain members of the band hoped that money could be raised."

Did the Legislative passage of the bill giving money to the band mean that it was starting a "give away" policy to any deserving organization?

"The band plays for many campus functions and therefore they deserve financial aid—I do not feel that other organizations will take this as a cue to demand appropriation," replied Creasy.

But what of the band's future? "I hope that something can be worked out. Were it not for the untimeliness of this bill, as far as financial conditions were concerned, it would have gone through without difficulty," said Creasy.

The exceedingly low financial status, to which Creasy blamed the turning down of the appropriation, has already been felt in a number of other campus organizations. The Daily Tar Heel has been put on a five-day-a-week operating basis and several other groups have been turned down requests for aid.

If a budgetary surplus is built up, will the band get monetary help?

To this question, Creasy gave an emphatical "Yes. They are certainly deserving and I am sure that a later request will be granted."

SP, UP Bringing Vital Issues Up . . .

Lot At Stake Thursday

By NEIL BASS

The Thursday night assembly of the student Legislature psomises to be a high tension session. Both the Student Party and the University Party have vital issues at stake.

For the SP solons, the convening will mean the passage or rejection of three of their original four campaign platform planks. Their bills deal with: (1) The return of 50 percent of profits from vending machines situated in dormitories to the dorm social funds, (at present, the individual student residences receive none of these profits); (2) Establishment of a first aid station in the center of campus with authority to issue class cut excuses; (3) And the recommendation to provide two class-free Saturdays each semester.

The only plank not touched upon by the SP legislators concerned student parking and the car situation. When questions arose as to why the SP did not include this proposal and thereby attempt to pass its entire platform at one session, David Reid said "it was better not to raise any contention about is subject at the present." Reid is SP floor leader.

The University Party can breathe a bit easier throughout the session, for it has only one bill it will attempt to push through. The group originally introduced two resolutions but, according to floor leader Jack Stevens the UP, which recently sponsosed a bill to appropriate $1,100 to the University Band, "will try to withdraw one of them, a bill to appropriate $150 to the Faculty Evaluation Comfunds. The proposal UP will attempt to pass is one to establish a bi-partisan board for the selection of candidates for the editorships of The Daily Tar Heel and the Yackety Yack.

The Student Party-sponsored bills have been referred to the Student Welfare Board. The University Party appropriation bill has been forwarded to the Finance Committee.

The fate of all the bills lies in the hands of Thursday's legislative session.

Dook Featured In Time Issue

Duke University "has but one major job to do: not to grow up —which it has done already—but to grow older," sums up a six-page article on the University in the current issue of Time Magazine.

The national news magazine covers Duke with some 13 pictures — 11 of them in color—and with the lead article in its education section, concluding that "Duke has gone far in its brief 30 years, and perhaps its greatest asset is the fact that it is so fully conscious of how far it still has to go."

Noting that the University, created "almost overnight," led observers to ask "what lay beneath the fancy facade?" Today, Time says, "Duke is in a better position to answer that question than ever before. If not yet out in front, it is giving its older sisters in the South an increasingly lively race."

Time pays tribute to the late President William P. Few and the "solid little liberal arts college named Trinity," (the University's precedessor) but notes that "it was not until 1949, when rangy (6 ft. 2½ in.) Arthur Holis Edens took over, that it began to come back into its own."

Brighter TV In Education Stressed Here

The needs for brighter educational television programs and more visual material to accompany television news stories were stressed this weekend at the annual meeting of District IV of the American College Public Relations Association here.

In a discussion on "Educational Aspects of Television," Robert F. Schenkkan, director of Consolidated University of North Carolina Television, told members "We must create a programming policy which has sufficient variety and breadth of appeal, so that the educational station is vital as well as educational."

Other talks were made by Lynn D. Poole, director of public relations at Johns Hopkins University, who reported on the growth of educational TV; William D. Carmichael Jr., UNC vice-president and finance officer, who discussed the financial aspects of the Consolidated University's stations; Ralph Burgin, program director of the State College TV studio, and David M. Davis, program director of the Woman's College studio.

At another panel, the topic of television news was discussed. A A. Wilkinson, director of the Woman's College News Bureau, served as moderator for the panel, which also included Ernie Group, Station WTVD, Durham; Nelson Benton, WBT, Charlotte, and Bob Stroh, WFMY, Greensboro.

The meeting began Thursday night, with a dinner and panel session in Lenoir Hall. At this time, delegates heard President Dale H. Gramley, Salem College; Chancellor Cary H. Bostian, State College, and Chancellor R. B. House, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, discuss "What College Presidents Expect of Public Relations and Publicity Programs."

The Independent Women's Council-Panhellenic Clothing Drive for the Glade Valley School will end today.

Any women interested in visiting Glade Valley School at the completion of the drive should contact either Miss Marilyn Zager at Smith Dorm or Miss Joan Leonard at the Alpha Gam House.

Miss Zager said that IWC and Panhel representatives should bring all the clothing collected from the dorms and sorority houses for which they are responsible to Smith parlor at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

Legislature To Hear Carolina Appropriations Appeal Tuesday

The University of North Carolina will appear before an appropriations and finances committee of the state Legislature Tuesday.

On Jan. 7, the Advisory Budget Commission recommended to the Legislature that average dormitory room rents be raised to $130 per year.

The Commission also failed to recommend that over four million dollars, requested by the University for permanent improvements be appropriated to UNC.

The meeting, an open one, will be held at 513 Revenue Bldg., Raleigh. Nothing will be enacted at the meeting, but legislators will gather later in executive session to draft legislation.

The opinion of the Advisory Budget Commission has in the past usually coincided with that of the lawmakers.

Weather Discouraging

According to the U. S. Weather Bureau at the Raleigh-Durham Airport, the weather outlook for the weekend is not encouraging.

The skies will be overcast with sleet and freezing rain likely to start late Saturday night, the weatherman said.

The high today will be near 40 degrees, and the low tomorrow morning will be 32 degrees with a high temperature in the upper 30s, he said.

'Normal' Strength In Abnormal Days

What, in our age, is strength?

The Rev. John R. Brokhoff, pastor of St. Mark's Lutheran Church of Charlotte, has brought up the question before a meeting at Lenoir Rhyne College.

"The world today needs normal men," he said, and cited the case of Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer as an instance of highly educated men lacking in normal strength.

We think normality's measuring rod is the tempermament and potentiality of men and their ages. If in our time we cite Dr. Oppenheimer as a man lacking in "normal strength," it is, we believe, because our own standards of strength are being measured by mediocrity. If clear, logical and realistic thought and the patriotism that goes beyond a constant mumbling of oaths of conformity constitute strength, Dr. Oppenheimer demonstrates as much as anyone on the national scene.

For his acts of strength, Dr. Oppenheimer's only applause was vituptration and, later, suspension and stigmatization as a saboteur of defense efforts. But it was he who saw that the growth of Soviet air-atomic power tended automatically to depreciate the value of our own air-atomic strength and, seeing that, argued for air defense and for continued development of weapons smaller and more manipulable than the hydrogen bomb. More, it was Dr. Oppenheimer who faced up to the chaotic possibilities of atomic warfare and who pled for a new moral sanity.

The advent of the hope of coexistence, the growing belief that absolute warfare is outmoded by the scientific pace of the Twentieth Century, the growing realization that nuclear weapons must be examined from a moral as well as from a strategic viewpoint: All these developments tend to bear out the Oppenheimer ideas that earlier were found so distasteful.

Dr. Oppenheimer's strength in a crucial situation has, we think, been fully demonstrated. His intense concern for humanity in the day of the atomic weapons he helped create is the soaring strength that endures. And the real test of strength, Mr. Brokhoff, is endurance.

The Too-Deep Cut

The suggestion made yesterday by President Creasy to the Faculty Council that the number of class cuts should be left up to the individual professor has some merit. As we see it, the only drawback to the new "four-cuts-and-you've-failed" regulation is that it takes one more power from the hands of the teachers.

If there is to be a uniform rule, however, The Daily Tar Heel believes the new rule to be the best one available. Three cuts per class is a reasonable allowance in a self-respecting University and the earlier student proposals to require only 75 percent attendance for upperclassmen has apparently been dropped.

We are glad to see that particular daydream pass. This is not, as it has been called, a matter of student freedom; it is a matter of University integrity. That integrity can be upheld by the professor's-choice system or by a uniform three-cut rule, but any further loosening (except the wise exclusion of dean's list students from the whole business) would be an unfortunate compromise in the realm of the University's chief function—academic excellence.

The Dough Is In Danger

The word from Raleigh is gloomy. The Advisory Budget Commission recommended little enough money for the University, and now, it is said, even the comparatively small appropriations we did receive (among them, the $1,00.000 so essential to WUNC-TV) might be lopped off by the Legislature. That would be the crowning blow; so, we're happy to see President Creasy's strong statement against the slice and the proposed raise in student fees. It is not impossible that concerted student action might make a difference, and, with time rapidly running out, we'll be watching for the "good fight" President Creasy promises.

Letter Brings News Of Faith In America

Louis Kraar

A LETTER from the other side of the world is an interesting thing to receive, particularly when it brings a message from a friend.

I met Taizo in Iowa at the National Student Association Congress last summer. Having left his studies at Weseda University to visit this country, Matsui spent his days and nights listening to American students, talking, and asking questions.

Many night we talked until dawn about the changes in Japan, the threat of atomic war, and Communism. But Matsui was disturbed about one thing—Senator McCarthy.

"Just what kind of democracy has American given when you have men like McCarthy," he asked earnestly one night.

I, tried, perhaps inadquately, to explain the workings of the Senate. He understood our government, but he said he'd never understand the senator from Wisconsin.

BUT NOW comes this letter from the Japanese student who was worried about McCarthy. Matsui has returned to his country and the books after several months in the United States.

"I had an opportunity to observe the discussions in your Senate while they had a heated discussion on McCarthy sensure," he writes from Japan.

"It was very interesting to observe them to discuss just in front of me. Of course, I was satisfied by the outcome of that matter. Surely I have more respect for your States as well as Senate," Matsui adds.

A letter like this is a heartening thing. When thinking students from other lands view this country, things we don't see come to light.

To American students at the Iowa meeting last summer, Joe McCarthy was just something unpleasant that the nation had to put up with — like income tax and exams. But to students from other countries, he was a symbol that made us look hypocritical when we talked of democracy.

Now at least one student, and an influential one, has a better look—and opinion — about our country.

"I went to New York . . . and spent a day sightseeing there," he writes.

He also saw "University of Virginia, Home of Jefferson, Berea College in Kentucky, Tennessee, and Greensboro in North Carolina," according to the letter.

"Back in New York . . . I attended the seminar of the United Nations for three days and then spent the weekend in Boston.

"Dropping in New York again and Cornell University I proceeded to . . . University of Minnesota . . . and there I stayed about a month and half in a certain fraternity."

He continues, ". . . I flew to San Francisco via Los Angeles and met with 11 Japanese students who I took care of until the time I left the States. I had the chance to go to the East again together with these 15 boys and girls by train this time.

"Stanford, University of Michigan, Cornell, Georgetown University in Washington . . . were included in our itinerary."

A few more lines about the fun we had at the NSA meeting last summer, and my friend adds:

"That's all for today . . . I have got go back to my study. The examinations are waiting for me in a couple of days. I must prepare for them with all my might."

Such is the heartening news from a friend in Japan, a friend who can believe how in the Western institutions that have reshaped the life of his own country.

'Shall We All Recognize The Situation?'

War An Even Bet—For Now

Joseph Alsop

TAIPEH, Formosa. — Here is one point, at any rate, on which President Eisenhower and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek appear to be in agreement.

Judging by the soothing statements emanating from Washington, the American Administration is convinced that the Chinese Communists will not press the Formosa crisis to a warlike conclusion. The Generalissimo also believes that the Communists will even refrain from attacking Quemoy and the Matsu Islands if they are firmly and clearly told that this will mean war with the United States.

Thus high level judgement may be said to be all on one side. It is at least worth noting, however, that the visible hard facts of the situation are all on the other side.

No single piece of tangible evidence discoverable by this reporter supports the official judgment in Washington and Taipeh. This judgement of the Formosa crisis has been reached, very evidently, by calculating what we would do if we were the Chinese Communists ruling in Peking. But it is always well to remember that we are not they.

This was forgotten in 1941, for instance. The American leaders were then chiefly conscious of the strong opposition at home to any involvement in the war. Therefore they could not believe the Japanese would commit the folly of forcing America into the war. But the Japanese were chiefly conscious of the American naval threat on their Pacific flank. They could not believe they could move southward with safety without eliminating this American threat. And here, and not in any silly talk of plots, was the real explanation of Pearl Harbor.

Other disastrous examples might be cited of the same error, such as Gen. MacArthur's "home by Christmas" attack toward the York. And in the present instance, the conviction that the Chinese Communists will not risk war over Formosa is based on what we think will best serve Red China's interests. But those who hold this conviction somehow manage to overlook both Red China's warlike preparations and war-like declarations.

These preparations and declarations are the hard facts—what the Marxists call "the objective evidence." The preparations have been going on apace for at least two years.

By extending existing airfields and building new ones, the Chinese Communists have built up one great jet airbase complex in the Yangtsze River delta, in Chekiang and Kiangsu provinces, within easy range of the Tachen Islands and Okinawa. They have also built up a secondary but wholly adequate airbase complex in the region directly across the Formosa Strait, within easy range of Quenmoy, the Matsus and Formosa and the Pescadores.

Great efforts have been made to stock these airbase complexes with large reserves of all kinds of supplies. At present, the main Communist air force has already moved from Manchuria and the Peking area into the Yangtsze delta airbase complex. It can move south again at will.

Meanwhile, an army of 200.000 men has been assembled at the jump-off point for an attack on the Tachens. An equally large force threatens Quemoy and the Matsus, which are held by less than 40,000 Chinese combat troops. And the assault on Yikiangshan has already revealed careful Chinese Communist training for triphibious operations.

Thus the forces for an attack are in place. Meanwhile, the Peking government has been promising its people to take Formosa this year at the top of its voice. The Peking leaders have also been assuring leaders of neutral nations, like Burma and India, that they mean every word they say about taking Formosa.

Finally, there are excellent reasons to believe that Chou En-lai had exact advance knowledge of the contents of President Eisenhower's message to Congress on the Formosa treaty. If there was any lingering doubt about the American military guaranty of Formosa, that message should have removed it. Yet the Chinese Communist Prime Minister having this knowledge, at once reaffirmed the Chinese pupose to take Formosa this year.

It is really hard to see why the brilliant Chou En-lai should thus engage Peking's prestige to the very hilt, if the threat to Formosa is a mere vainglorious maneuver, intended to extract some other concesion from the West. In fact if Washington and Taipeh are right about the real Communist intentions, you have to conclude that Chou En-lai is a mere boastful muddler.

Such is the conflict of evidence. This reporter's opinion, which is worth little, is that the thing is an even bet either way for this year. But a Communist grab for Formosa is a virtual certainty next year or the year after that, if we do not strengthen our shockingly weakened defenses on this side of the Pacific and if we fail to find some better Asian policy than piece-meal retreat.

Keys To The United Kingdom

The Greensboro Daily News

We rejoice that Duke University has been selected by the Carnegie Foundations to be the recipient of a $350.000 grant for the purpose of establishing a center for studies of the British Commonwealth.

The British need a lot of studying, and we trust that the Ducal scholars will come up with a lot of answers to some hard questions which have troubled us, off and on, for years.

Consider the British brussels sprout. Whole volumes might be devoted to a thorough study of this soggy little item as prepared and served up in the average British restaurant. The first man ever to eat an oyster pales by comparison with the first Englishman to consume a boiled brussels sprout.

Consider the British knack for unappetizing names for their national dishes. After a heavy dinner, why does an Englishman's face light up at the prospect of, say, suet pudding? It is as if the hostess had suggested a nice slice of lard cake, but somehow the British manage to eat the stuff.

Possibly these are not major problems. Perhaps they da not exist throughout the Commonwealth. But they want study. Why, for example, are the English content to rush through the night in railroad trains hauled at tremendous speeds by locomotives unequipped with headlights? Is this sheer, steely courage? Is it native smugness; a belief that no cow would be so ill-bred as to wander onto the right-of-way? Is it because the ydo not believe in headlights? Why?

Why, too, will the English make such an issue of being English, whilst (and why "whilst," while we're at it?) their Commonwealth cousins are merely British? Why, even in the midst of the World War II newsprint shortage, did they persist in keeping the "u" in honour, colour, etc.?

As we see it from over here under our favorite mulberry bush, $350,000, is a trifle, the merest drop in the bucket when the magnitude of the task is considered. Nonetheless, we wish the learned men of Duke luck. They will need it.

And while they're at it, they can discover the origin of the Shandy, that mad British invention which consists of half a pint of ginger ale mixed with half a pint of mild. Now who thought that one up? And how do the British manage to get the stuff down

Ivy League Jazz

Tom Spain

The Ivy League Swing once connoted debonnaire sophistication in a rather wealthy atmosphere of college life. It connoted a certain type of dress, an aloof manner, and a comfortable attitude toward living in general.

The Ivy League Swing is still tht same, but another element, quite different, has joined in. Stan Rubin's Tigertown Five, and the Spring Street Stompers of Williams College have swung high into the realms of good jazz, adding music to the old way of life.

Princeton has featured jazz bands for many years, but strictly on an amateur basis. But now the ivied campus rings with the sound of professional dixieland jazz. The Tigertown Five and the Tiger Sextet, both under the direction of Stan Rubin, have been making big names for themselves not only among the college groups in this country, but in Europe as well.

They began in typical Dixieland fashion—from the tailgate of a truck, and have been big names in the jazz sets ever since. A five year contract with MCA assures permanency for the Tigertown Five and for Rubin, who plans to continue further into the field. The sales of Jubilee records show financial as well as popular possibilities for the group.

A similar group at Williams College is beginning to rival the Princeton group. The first intercollegiate jazz meet has already taken place, and the riotous reception indicates more than slight approval of the trend. The Spring Street Stompers, a more robust an dsomewhat less traditional group than the Tigertown Five, is equally exciting in its music. Though the band sports a graduate clarinetist, the Williams band differs only in that there is a banjoist of real talent included.

Carnegie Hall was selected not only as a neutral location for the contest of the college musicians, but due to the presence of a large part of both student bodies in New York City over last Thanksgiving vacation. Somehow, jazz presentations in Carnegie Hall become immortal, and the college groups made no exception.

Enthusiasm was high and with spirits uncorked and soaring, the rooting sections of both schools expressed untold enthusiasm. Outstanding performers of the evening were the consistant stars of both bands. Stan Rubin, leader-clarinetist; John Eaton, pianist; trombonist Bill Spilka; and drummer Win Morgan all drew hearty applause. The same enthusiasm was enjoyed by the Stompers' Jim Hayne, a notable trombonist and powerful leader of the group.

Jubilee Records has recorded the entire concert on three 12-inch LP recordings. One features the groups playing together, while one features each band alone. The music presented is lively, spirited and happy, even in the bluest of the blue numbers.

Trombonist Jim Hayne of Williams leads his boys through an excellent and very popular interpretation of the BASIN STREET BLUES. Hayne's trombone work is surprisingly near that of Jack Teagarden in his early days, providing both the lead and the following simultaneously. His versatile and subtle touch makes the presentation a memorable one.

Bix Beiderbeck's WOLVERINE BLUES is played in the conventional Beiderbeck style, and receives very nice treatment from the Stompers. Here again, Hayne proves himself the outstanding feature of the band but the nimble piano work of Don Coates deserves due recognition. But the traditional Armstrong blues number BLACK AND BLUE, is perhaps the best Williams rendition of the evening.

The Princeton boys tend to be the more measured of the two. Their style is characteristically Chicago, and with the exception of the extended drum bursts of Win Morgan, the group is a perfect example of the early Condon school of jazz. Best in the Princeton presentations is the opener, BEALE STREET BLUES, which shows the high degree of ensemble integration of the group. Rubin's clarinet emerges slightly in front of the band with some hot, but reserved, licks which help to indicate his talent as a leader and a subtle side man.

RIVERBOAT SHUFFLE is another notable that the Five treats with all fairness. Pianist John Eaton forms a backbone of rhythm and melody throughout the entire tune, his style not unlike that of Count Basie.

College jazz is here to stay, and no longer is the band featuring soft, danceable music, the only kind to survive the academic tastes. The Spring Street Stompers are growing as well as the Tigertown Five. Their supporters are not unknown, and Ed Sullivan, Arthur Godfrey, Ted Husing and even King Farouk are strong behind them in their rise to success.

The music is good, often authentic, and the talent is excellent. One judge, Eddie Condon, the master of ceremonies at the Carnegie concert, put it aptly:: "It's quite apparent that these boys know what they're doing."

Tonight At The Moom Pitchers

Guinness Again, & In Top Form

JOHN SALEW (L) AND ALEC GUINNESS
. . . the priest at the bar of justice.

Guinness turns up as a priest this time, a priest who doubles in crime detection after the fashion of G. K. Chesterson's celebrated Father Brown. But this is one of the few cases where the character on the screen is a grander, more entertaining soul than the character in the literature. Guinness is a better detective than Chesterson's creation and a better priest than Barry Fitzgerald.

Plot, as you know, never matters much in these Guinness episodes. This one happens to lead Guinness in search of a notorious French criminal, Gustave Flambeau—not, as is the case with conventional sleuths, to turn him over to the cops—but, reasonably enough, to win his soul. This, to Father Brown, is a higher calling than that of the prosaic (and, naturally, stupid) policeman, and leads him far astray from the accepted routine of a man of the cloth.

The movie is full of those wry witticisms that have made Alec Guinness the funniest man in motion pictures. If you look hard, you'll find the same warm soul that showed in the other Guinness films. This seems to be just a new carreer for the same old character.

"The Detective" isn't quite as uproariously funny as "The Lavender Hill Mob;" there is none of the diversified genius of "Kind Hearts and Coronets;" there's no tricky ending as in "Captain's Paradise:" but "The Detective" stands up to all of these as a demonstration of the rare Guinness ability.

Also, there are fine views of the English and French countrysides and of the water in the English channel for the geography students in the class.—C. B.

'You Put Me In An Embarrassing Position . . . How Can I Refuse To Take It?'

Duke Cagers Humble Crumbling Carolina, 91-68

Tar Heels Open Slate With Okla.

By BOB DILLARD

With the exception of the addition of the University of Oklahoma and the dropping of Tulane University, the 1955 Carolina grid slate is much the same as that of 1954.

Replacing Tulane, and opening the season for the Tar Heel squad, will be Oklahoma's Sooners. The game is set for September 24 in Kenan Stadium, and promises to be an early season test for the Carolina team. Next on the slate is N. C. State away on Oct. 1. Following in succession are Georgia, away, Oct. 8; Maryland, home, Oct. 15; Wake Forest, away, Oct. 22; Tennessee, home, Oct. 29; South Carolina, away (the Oyster Bowl in Norfolk, Virginia) Nov. 5; Notre Dame, home, Nov. 12; Virginia, home, Nov. 19; and Duke, away, Dec. 2.

The Duke tilt, normally scheduled for the last Saturday in November, has been postponed until the following week to allow students to make the trip home for the Thanksgiving vacation and still attend the game, and also to avoid conflict with the nationally televised Army-Navy tilt which, in the eyes of the Athletic Association, many grid fans would like to witness.

Coach George Barclay seemed pleased with the schedule saying "It's a fine inter-sectional schedule, and the home games will be good games for the spectators to watch."

Barclay also was pleased with the rescheduling of the Duke contest.

Klochak Leaves

Barclay was not too concerned over the fullback problem, which blossomed when Don Klochak, last year's sophomore star, left the University because of scholastic difficulties. Klochak's return is doubtful, according to Barclay, and in the event he does return, he would be ineligible for next year's season.

Marshall Newman, who alternated with Klochak at the fullback post, has returned to school but plans to give up football and enroll in medical school.

Barclay stated that the prospects for the fullback position were not too bad. Besides upcomand John Gaca, Don Lear and Howard McMullen will be counted on to fill the vacancy. Nick Marcopoulos, out last year with injuries, may also return to the squad.

Concerning the scholarship of his remaining athletes, Barclay said that "the overall outlook is pretty good." He expects no difficulty resulting from ineligible players, and in many cases, was highly pleased with his players' mari...

UNC Collapses In Second Half, Scoring But Five Field Goals

Rosenbluth Scores 27, 17 on Foul Throws, Before LIFE Cameras; Mayer Buckets 21

By BERNIE WEISS

Carolina's Tar Heels didn't die, but they faded away plenty fast last night in the second half of their game with Duke at Woollen Gym. The final score was 91-68, and the Blue Devils had accomplished a feat which State couldn't do—to wit: Terribly humble their Chapel Hill rivals.

It was strictly no contest from the intermission point on, and the only bright spots in the cloud of gloom which hung from the Woollen rafters were the intermittent flashes of light from Life Magazine photographic equipment.

A capacity crowd of 5,500 fans sat silently and moaned, for their Tar Heels were able to collect only 16 field goals all night. Their second half total was five.

Five Duke cagers tallied in double figures. Forward Ronnie Mayer, the sparkplug of the Blue Devils, was high with 21 points. Guard Hal Turner popped in set shots to the tune of 16 points. Bob Lakata had 13. Junior Morgan scored 12 and Marty Doherty, playing with a protective patch on his forehead, scored 10. Doherty suffered a serious injury recently in a game against State College, but it didn't affect his performance last night. The tall, skinny guard added much to the Duke onslaught.

By virtue of the loss, Carolina is forced to give up its hold on the Atlantic Coast Conference lead. The Tar Heels are now tied with Duke for the No. 1 spot, both teams having 7-2 records.

Duke's victory avenged an earlier Carolina win, 65-52, in the Dixie Classic last December.

The sluggish Carolina five was just unable to find the range in the second half. Playing against a tight man-to-man defense, the team elected, or possibly was forced, into shooting from the outside rather than working the ball in for close shots. Al Lifson and Jerry Vayda, usually the two who carry the burden in such a game, couldn't find the basket and therein lies the story of the game. Vayda fouled out early.

Len Rosenbluth, as usual, was high scorer for Carolina, but 17 of his 27 points came from the foul line. Too many times he displayed a disgusted face and shook his head as the ball failed to drop in after he had faked his man out of position for the field goal attempt.

For the first 15 minutes of the game it appeared as if the between-semesters lay-off had not hurt the UNC attack. The game was tied seven times during this period, and at no point did more than four points separate the two clubs.

But Carolina faded too quickly. During the last five minutes before half-time Carolina hit on only one field goal and missed a number of tosses from the line. Duke, meanwhile, with a steady and balanced attack, took the lead and kept it.

The score at the half was 42-34, Duke.

Then the rout began. Two minutes after play resumed Vayda left via the foul route. The Tar Heels went approximately 10 minutes without a bucket from the floor. With eight minutes left in the game Gerry McCabe connected on a lay-up, the second two-pointer for UNC in the half, and received a small round of applause for breaking the ice.

Soon Tar Heel coach Frank McGuire began subbing, for there was not question as to the outcome.

Tickets for the N. C. State game here February 22 will go on sale Monday, with students having odd-numbered passbooks getting priority on the reserved seats through Wednesday. Thursday, the holders of even-numbered books will get first chance through Saturday.

Wake Forest Smashes Tiger Five, 120-65

Wake Forest, N. C., Feb. 4 ½—With an eye on the record book, Wake Forest swamped Clemson, 120-65, tonight and shattered two Atlantic Coast Conference marks in the process.

The total ran up by the Demon Deacons passed the previous single game high of 115 set by Duke against Clemson earlier this season.

Wake Forest center Dickie Hemric, scoring 41 points, snagged 36 rebounds and passed the record set by North Carolina State's Ron Shavlik against Villanova last Saturday

Krepp, Drake And Baker Establish Collegiate Mark In Michigan Meet

By BOB COLBERT

Nine records, including one national collegiate mark were set as the Michigan Wolverines defeated the Tar Heel swimmers Thursday night by a score of 61-23.

The 300-yard medley relay team, composed of sophomores Charlie Krepp and Phil Drake, and Junior Dick Baker, set a new national inter-collegiate record with a time of 2:45.9. The old record was 2:47.2 set by Ohio State last year. Krepp swam the backstroke leg in 57.6, just two-tenth of a second slower than the pool record, which he presently holds. Drake swam the dolphin breaststroke in 56.9, and Baker swam the fastest 100-yard freestyle he has ever swum in 51.4.

This is only the third time in the 17 years of swimming at Carolina that such recognition has ever been attained. The first time was in 1941 when Denny Hammond set a national collegiate record in the backstroke, and the second in 1951 when Jimmy Thomas set a national collegiate record in the backstroke.

Along with the collegiate record, the time in the medley relay broke the pool and university record. Charlie Krepp, member of the relay team, set a new pool and university record in the 200-yard backstroke, going the distance in 2:07.8.

Michigan set a pool record in the 200-yard breast-stroke, 440-freestyle and 600-backstroke relay. The time in the backstroke relay is a new noteworthy performance for this event.

According to Coach Ralph Casey, "I didn't realize they (Krepp, Drake and Baker) were going that fast. They'll all be back next year and their times will be better then."

Michigan was on a tour of the East, having swum and beaten Indianapolis AC, New York AC, Army, and N. C. State.

Carolina's next home meet will be against Clemson College on February 18th. The frosh will swim Greensboro High School here on Saturday, February 12th.

UNC Matmen Meet Virginia Here Tonight

By AL KORSCHUN

Varsity wrestling coach Sam Barnes welcomed the return of lightweights Broadus Thompson and Bob Wagner, both ineligible for competition last semester, and began preparations Wednesday for tonight's match with Virginia at 6:00 in Woollen Gymnasium.

Both Thompson and Wagner have shown up well in practice this week and both may break into the starting lineup despite their three month's layoff. But nevertheless their presence on the squad will strengthen the Tar Heel team which has lacked sufficient depth all season.

The matmen, wrestling before the home crowd for the first time this season, have a good chance to upset the slightly favored Cavaliers, who thus far hold wins over Delaware and North Carolina State and have lost to two very strong teams, Maryland and V. P. I. The visitors will be strongest at the 167 lb. and heavyweight classes.

The Carolina grapplers have been defeated in each of their four previous meets, and their last scheduled match with State before the semester break was postponed until February 16 because bad weather contitions prevented the team from traveling to Raleigh.

WOOLLEN GYM

Woollen Gym, where the University of North Carolina basketball team plays all of its home games, was named for the late Charles T. Woollen, who served the University as Controller and Graduate Manager of Athletics.

OLDEST MARK

The oldest standing University of North Carolina swimming record was set in 1948 by Floyd Drew with a 23.3 performance in the fifty-yard free-style event.

THIRD IN NAAU

Charlie Krepp, record-breaking University of North Carolina sophomore swimmer, was third in the NAAU outdoor 200-meter backstroke event last season. Krepp has broken six records this season.

TALL SWIMMER

Phil Drake, the University of North Carolina swimmer who recently had two of his butterfly marks recognized as national records, is fairly tall as swimmers go. He stands a towering six-foot-four.

Freshman Five Takes Early Lead For 14th Victory; Second Half Slowed By Foul Action

By BOB DILLARD

Carolina's Tar Babies jumped to a 6-4 lead at the end of three minutes of last night's encounter with the Blue Imps of Duke, and were never headed, as they went on to vanquish the Duke University five, 79-67. It was the 14th victory of the season for the Tar Babies, against one loss, suffered at the hands of the Blue Imps earlier this season.

Duke controlled the opening tip, and on two-pointers by Bucky Allen and Bobby Joe Harris, jumped to a quick 4-0 lead. However, Duke supremacy for the first half and for the game ground to a halt when Pete Brennan hit his first four foul shots of the game to put the Tar Babies ahead 6-4.

The Tar Babies never relinquished that lead, but Duke kept the game on an even keel until late in the first half, never falling more than five points behind the Tar Baby quintet. A spurt by the Tar Babies, led by Tommy Kearns and Pete Brennan increased the Carolina lead to 10 points at the end of the first half, and the teams retired to the dressing rooms with Carolina in front of the Duke five, 42-32.

Action in the second half slowed considerably, with the majority of second half scoring coming on foul shots. 23 of the Tar Baby's 37 points in the second half came as a result of free throws, and 12 out of the last 14 from the charity line.

Ike Gets "Hot" Balls; Now Needs Souped Clubs

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4. (AP)—President Eisenhower today received a supply of "souped up" golf balls which the donor said will travel 30 to 40 yards farther than regulation balls.

The balls were left at the White House by retired Air Force Col. Robert W. Kenworth of New York, who told newsmen he makes them himself for distribution to friends in the armed services.

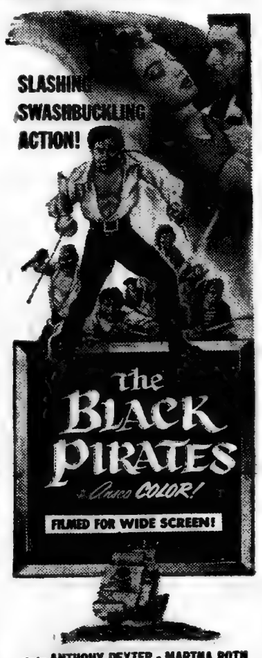
UNC Boardmen Enter VMI Relays Tonight

By RAY LINKER

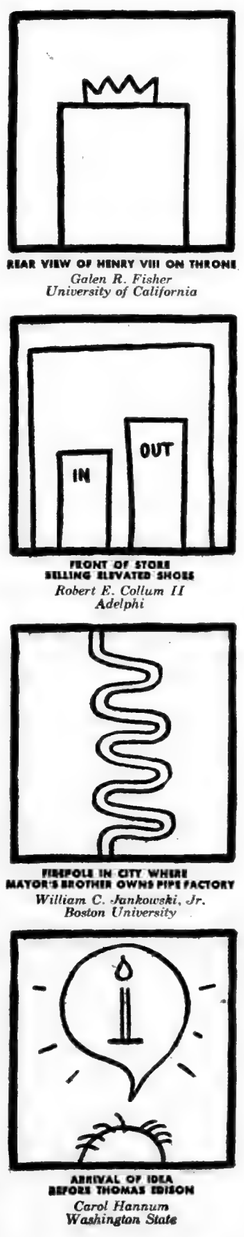
Carolina's indoor tracksters will enter 14 men in the VMI Relays tonight at Lexington, Virginia. Tar Heels are expected to perform in three field events and five relays on the 13-event schedule.

No team score is kept, with only individuals being declared champions. Representatives of several strong teams will be on hand however, including runners from Maryland, VPI, Virginia, Duke, William and Mary, N. C. State, Richmond, and the host VMI team.

Last year the Tar Heels entered six men and copped second in the pole vault and the distance medley and third in the sprint medley.



Charlie Yarborough, who was second in the pole vault last year, will team with Richard Waters in that event this year while Roger Morris and Larry Maslow are seeking honors in the shot put. Ken Bryant and Bob Wilson will do the high jumping for the Tar Heels.



The five relay teams as set up now have three runners seeing action in two events, four being required to carry the baton three times each, and two being called on only once. The sprint medley relay finds Don Wright running the first leg (a 440), followed by Richard MacFaddin (220), Claude Rhyle (220), and Bill Booth (880).

The mile relay team will be Wright, MacFaddin, Rhule and Wilson. Wright (440), Booth (880), Boyd Newman (¾ mile), and Jimmy Beatty (mile), will compose the distance medley relay team while the two-mile relay will see Booth, Beatty, Bobby Barden, and Newman running 880's. Taking part in the 4-mile relay will be Newman, Beatty, Barden and Glenn Nanney.

Only two events are scheduled for freshmen, and one of them—the ¾ mil run—will have Carolina's Ben Williams seeking top spot.

ALL NEW! LUCKY DROODLES!

WHAT'S THIS? For solution see paragraph below.

A STUDENT'S BEST FRIEND is Lucky Strike. At any rate, the greatest, up-to-datest college survey shows that college smokers prefer Luckies to all other brands—and by a wide margin. Once again, the No. 1 reason: Luckies taste better. They taste better, first of all, because Lucky Strike means fine tobacco. Then, that tobacco is toasted to taste better. "It's Toasted"—the famous Lucky Strike process—tones up Luckies' light, good-tasting tobacco to make it taste even better. Luckies taste better anywhere, any time, as illustrated in the Droodle above, titled: Skier enjoying Lucky while whooshing under bridge. State Introduces Bills To Revamp Courts, Milk Prices

RALEIGH, Feb 4 (AP)—Bills to give the State Milk Commission power to fix minimum wholesale and retail milk prices and to change the state's superior court setup were tossed in legislative hoppers today.

Sen. Ralph Scott of Alamance, a dairyman and brother of the former governor and U. S. Senator, introduced the milk pricing measure which has the backing of most of the state's farm organizations.

Bills to increase the number of regular superior court judges from 21 to 32 and to divide the state into 30 instead of 21 judicial districts were introduced in both Senate and House. Rep. David Clark of Lincoln and 38 other House members introduced the bill in the House while Sen. Nelson Woodson of Rowan was joined by 15 other senators in sponsoring the bill in the Senate.

Other legislative highlights today included the appointment by Speaker Larry I. Moore of nine more House committees. These committees and their chairmen were: Penal institutions, Rep. Thomas Turner of Guilford; mental institutions, Rep. John W. Umstead of Orange; constitutional amendments, Rep. Sam Worthington of Pitt; employment security Rep. Dwight W. Quinn of Cabarrus; commissions and institutions for the blind, Rep. Radford G. Powell; health, Rep. Addison Hewlett of New Hanover; corporations, Rep. George A. Long of Alamance; drainage, Rep. John F. White of Chowan; enrolled bills and printing, Rep. J. Paul Wallace, of Montgomery.

Scott, who introduced the bill to give the milk commission power to fix minimum retail and wholesale prices, sponsored the bill in the 1953 Legislature which created the State Milk Commission.

Three Deacs Declared Ineligible For Football

WAKE FOREST, N. C., Feb. 4. (AP)—Wake Forest College football coach Tom Rogers received gloomy news yesterday: Three players have been declared ineligible for the 1955 season because of scholastic difficulties.

They were not allowed to register for the second semester yesterday.

ALL TAR HEELS

Some years ago many of the athletic teams at the University of North Carolina had their own nicknames. For instance, the basketball team was called the "White Phantoms" and the swimming team the "Blue Dolphins." However, it has since become the custom to call all North Carolina athletic teams by the nickname "Tar Heels."

University of North Carolina wrestling coach Sam Barnes barely missed making the U. S. Olympic wrestling team twice while competing on the Oklahoma A & M team. He was eliminated in the quarter-finals once and in the semifinals the following year.

Officials From 3 Universities To Appeal To Solons Today

Student Delegations Also Going

A delegation of students and University officials will attend the Appropriations and Finance Committee meeting of the state Legislature in Raleigh this afternoon. The group will appeal to the committee concerning the proposed hike in dormitory room fees.

The Advisory Budget Commission recently recommended to the Legislature that average room rents be raised to $130 per year.

Consolidated University President Gordon Gray will head the administrative delegation and will deliver an address to the committee. Other University officials attending the session include James H. Purks, University provost; W. D. Carmichael, vice president and controller, and W. C. Friday, assistant to the president.

Also attending as representatives for the Consolidated University will be the three chancellors, Carey H. Bostain, N. C. State; Edward K. Graham, Woman's College, and Robert B. House, UNC.

Business managers from the divisions of the Consolidated University, Claude Teague, UNC; Graves Vann, N. C. State, and John Lockhart, WC, will also be present.

Concerning the budget requests for the Consolidated University which President Gray is going to present, he had this to say yesterday: "We are still getting it into shape to offer for the approval or rejection of the assembly and I have none of the content to reveal at the present tmie."

The message which Gray is to deliver to the assembly also contains requests for the Administrative Division of Health Affairs, Dr. Henry Clark, administrator.

Students Going

The student delegation, which arose as a result of the student Legislature's suggestion to "descend a pressure group on Raleigh and make the students' feelings well known," will consist of Ed McCurrey, David Reid and a number of other student leaders.

The Legislature hearing will start at 2 p.m. in Room 513, Revenue Building in Raleigh. The meeting is an open one. No legislative action will be taken.

Mennen Williams To Speak In Public Meeting Tonight

Final plans for Michigan Gov. G. Menen Williams' visit to the the University today have been announced by Bob Windsor president of the Chapel Hill Young Democrats Club, which is sponsoring his appearance.

The governor will deliver a public address in Memorial Hall at 8 p. m. and a reception in Graham Memorial will follow.

Windsor said a private dinner honoring the governor will be held in the Carolina Inn Ballroom prior to his address and a tour of the campus is planned for earlier afternoon.

Governor Williams' appearance here will be the first in a series of addresses by prominent Democrats to be presented by the YDC during the spring semester, Windsor said.

Others who have accepted invitations, according to Windsor include former President Harry S. Truman and Sen. Dick Neuberger of Oregon.

A native of Detroit, Mich., Williams received his A.B. degree from Princeton University in 1933 and graduated from the University of Michigan Law School in 1936 with a J.D. degree. He began his career as attorney for the Social Security Board in Washington, D. C., in 1936.

In 1938 he served as Assistant Attorney General for the State of Michigan, and later as Executive Assistant to U. S. Attorney General Frank Murphy.

In August, 1942, he was commissioned Lieutenant (j. g.) in the U. S. Naval Reserve and saw active duty as an Air Combat Intelligence Officer, leaving the service with the rank of Lieutenant Commander in 1946. During his war service he received 10 battle stars, the Legion of Merit with Combat V and three Presidential citations.

Prior to his election as Governor of Michigan on the Democratic ticket in November, 1948, he served as Deputy Director for the Michigan O. P. A., Democratic member of Michigan Liquor Control Commission, and member of the law firm of Griffiths, Williams and Griffiths. He was re-elected governor in 1950, 1952 and 1954.

Governor Williams has received a number of honorary degrees and is a member of numerous civic, fraternal and veterans' organizations, as well as sportsmen's and conservation clubs. Since his Princeton days he has been a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Phi Delta Phi and Phi Gamma Delta.

Coed Dorm Party Fees Are Upped

Women's dormitory social fees have been raised by a recent vote of the Women's Honor Council, according to Miss Ruth Jones, chairman. Fees have been raised to $2 and the assessment fee to $1 per semester. Former fees were 50 cents and 75 cents. They are required of all residents of women's dorms, and go into effect this semester.

The reason for the increased fees is to allow the dormitories to carry out a more elaborate social program, which has been urged by some administrative officials, said Miss Jones. The officials, she said, want to see more in the way of faculty teas, picnics, study breaks during exams and dances.

The increase in the assessment will eliminate the necessity of "passing the hat" for fund raising projects, Miss Jones said. The treasurer of each dormitory is responsible for the handling of funds, and for working out a tentative budget for the semester with the approval of the executive council of each dormitory.

All Residences To Be Visited In Polio Drive

Every dormitory, fraternity and sorority on campus will be canvassed tomorrow night by members of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity and other volunteers in the PiKA's annual campus march against polio, according to Luther Hodges, Jr., director of the drive for PiKA.

The drive will be conducted from door to door, said Hodges, and students are requested to give as much as they possibly can to aid in the battle against infantile paralysis.

"The year just ended witnessed giant strides against polio, but victory is not yet won," said E. C. Smith, director of the March of Dimes Drive in Orange County, yesterday. "Even if the trial vaccine experimented with last year is effective, polio will continue to strike during the years just ahead.

"Orange County appreciates the help the students have given in the past, and we hope that they will contribute as much as they possibly can Wednesday night," Smith added.

The PiKA drive was originally scheduled for January, but it was postponed so that it would not interfere with study for final exams.

Students who have not received theirs may pick one up at the information office in Graham Memorial, said Forester.

Student Race Petition Turned In

A petition in protest against the Supreme Court's racial integration decision, signed by over 1,000 University students, has been presented to the General Assembly.

The document, student-originated, and circulated in men's dormitories on the campus during the past two months, is a sort of companion appeal to a similar petition to state authorities tha. was backed by Dr. W. C. George of the University Medical School faculty. The George petition had over 5,000 signatures, about two-thirds of them reportedly from Orange County, exclusive of Chapel Hill.

Spokesmen for the approximately 1,050 student signers of this latest petition said their document has been turned over to a committee of the General Assembly, and, they understand, will be discussed in connection with forthcoming legislation on the schools-race issue.

In a statement of position that accompanied the petition the spokesmen declared that those who signed would resist by all legal means any group that sought a change from the "present social order." They further stated their opposition to the recently proposed idea to allow autonomous school boards to decide on segregation in their districts, and suggested that legislation should be enacted prohibiting the mixing of races in the state's public schools.

The petition itself is a brief appeal against the Supreme Court decision that protests "this unconscionable violation of the fundamental American principles of states' rights as guaranteed in the . . . Constitution."

Here are excerpts from the statement of position that accompanied the petition: ". . . We wish to emphasize that our concern is for the Negro race and its place in our society as well as for our own. We feel that the preservation of our present system is essential to the well being of both races.

"The petitioners feel that in the final analysis the over-all question is for the people and they should be given an opportunity to express themselves at the polls by voting on appropriate constitutional amendments where the same may be necessary; in no case should any self-perpetuated or autonomous school board be permitted to abolish segregation in our schools. The petitioners further feel that legislation should be enacted to prohibit mixing of the races in any public school in the state of North Carolina.

"In conclusion, we would like to recall that our great grandparents faced a similar situation during the terrible days of Reconstruction, but after a long, hard and courageous struggle, and with even greater odds against them than now, they finally triumphed. Only with the will and determination to peacefully defend our constitutionally guaranteed rights can we too succeed."

IDC-Backed Blazers Go On Display Today

Robert Rollins Blazers, the company which furnishes the official Olympic team blazer and the Woman's College jacket, has been awarded this year's contract for official UNC blazers.

Announcements came from Bob Barlowe, Interdormitory Council vice-president and chairman of of the organization's blazer committee. The IDC is sponsoring sale of the jackets.

The jackets will be on display tomorrow in front of the Y. Men's blazers are featured in three colors: navy blue flannel, charcoal, grey and Carolina blue. The official seal is embroidered on the pocket in colorfast silk threads.

Other features of the $25.95 blazers are: perspiration-proof rayon lining, two inside breast pockets, back-center vent, soft shoulder pads, identification tag, coat hanger, two or three button models, an extra pocket and set of buttons.

The women's blazer is basically the same as the men's. In addition to the navy, charcoal and Carolina blue, doeskin flannel and white tweed garments are offered.

The plain navy flannel is $18.95, the menswear flannel is $22.95, and the white doeskin sells for $26.95. Bermuda shorts are $9.95.

Students wishing jackets will be fitted Feb. 14 and 15 in the YMCA on the second floor. At that time a down payment of $5 will be charged.

"Blazers provide a distinctive group identity in a highly dignified manner," said Barlowe. "They stimulate group and school spirit providing an opportunity for the individual to show pride in his school and class membership. The blazer is a fashion garment you can truly live in, from a casual coat to a formal date garment," said Barlowe.

English 51 Is The Spice Of Life

After we suggested, last week, that business students ought to take more liberal arts courses, a business major we know dropped in to explain why they don't.

"The liberal arts courses fill up so fast," he said, "that business students have trouble getting the ones they want."

Well, we thought, this is a sorry state of affairs. We have checked, and can now testify to the truth of our friend's testimony. Business majors do have trouble getting the classes they want.

Here's a rundown of some of the most popular liberal arts courses applied for by B. A. students: English 40, 41, 44 and 51, Religion 28, History 167 and 168 and Classics 92. These are almost always closed before the end of registration, and always packed with business students.

What are they? English 40, 41, and 44 are speech courses. English 51 is a course in business forms and letters and professional papers; so highly specialized is it that it cannot be counted toward an English major. Religion 28 is the course taught by the highly popular Messrs. Boyd, Gitlin and Nash. History 167 and 168 are courses in economic history. Classics 92 is good old archaeology.

We do not dispute the value of these courses. Only one or two of them are "crips." Their appeal for business majors lies in the popularity of their teachers or the proximity of the subject matter to the business curriculum.

But this is the point. Business students are allowed to take only six courses outside the B. A. school and the Department of Economics; and they are required to take only four. Thus it is possible for a business major to graduate from the University having taken, in his last two years, 26 business and economics courses and four others — chosen, say, in public speaking, economic history, business letter writing and (since everybody takes it sooner or later) Dr. Harlan's archaeology course.

This is not just an exercise in theory. The University gives degrees every year to men with that schedule—and worse schedules. Some business majors undoubtedly consider history and archaeology too far off the beaten track.

So our answer to the BA friend becomes clear: If you can't get these courses, it's because th eroom is full of othe—r B.A. majors.

It seems fair to ask some questions about all this. How many men has the University sent into the business world without the dimmest acquaintance with political science, philosophy, English, history, music, art and literature?

How many walking IBM machines hold University degrees, unwilling to delve on their own into the humanities and sciences or unable to do so by University regulation?

How many waves of vocationalism must pass over the University before we reach a more perfect balance between training for business and education for life?

Jazz Goes To College

At first it struck us as a good idea, but the further it goes, the more doubtful we get.

The present-day academic interest in jazz music, we mean. Consider what's happening to jazz: They're teaching it for credit at two Midwestern music schools. The stuffy old Concert Hall Society, which looked down its nose at anything lighter than Strauss a couple of years ago has made "An Historic Announcement To Music Lovers": A jazz appreciation course with all the trimmings.

And even Eddie Condon, who used to make his music with Teschmaker, MacPartland and Tough at the Columbia Ballroom in Chicago (music four nights a week; four fights a night) is now playing in a classroom at Columbia University.

Mr. Lawrence (Bud) Freemen, an ex-Chelody saxophone player for the Austin High School gang and one of the best jazz musicians left is lecturing an attentive group of studious individuals weekly in Washington Square. Mr. Benny Goodman, still the greatest clarinet man around, is being heard with increasing frequency by the classical devotees—playing concerti with symphony orchestras.

Jazz cannot help but be altered under such circumstances. The new direction in this native form is personified by Dave Brubeck, a talented pianist given to injecting a little Rachmaninoff into his jazz. And what is the name of his most popular album? "Jazz Goes To College," but of course.

Well, we don't know if jazz ought to go to college. There's no denying the appeal of the Brubeck school, but along with all the decency and polish jazz music has acquired of late, we think we detect a little sterility, too. Along with all the books and courses on understanding jazz, there goes a misunderstanding of something important: that jazz is meant to be listened to.

Not examined. Just listened to. If you'd like to test this idea, any Saturday night in Stuyvesant Casino will do. With, say, Joe Sullivan, Pee Wee Russell, George Wettling, Miff Mole and Buck Clayton on the stand, the understanding will come on without benefit of lecturer or lectern.

Story About Duke Progress Is Depressing

Louis Kraar

THE CINDERELLA story of a university and its growth is being read by millions this week in a national news magazine. And to a student of the University of North Carolina, it's a depressing story. The magazine story treats the rise of Duke University "almost overnight by the great Duke . . . tobacco fortune." It's depressing because it chronicles progress in Durham at a time when progress in Chapel Hill is almost nil.

Today in Raleigh a committee of the state legislature holds a public hearing on the University's appropriation. Some here on campus have called this meeting "the slaughter" because the University's requests for money aren't going to be met.

And, as I said, it's all very depressing just at this time to read of a dynamic university in Durham that is moving ahead because it has the needed money.

Already the same group has turned the University down on all requests for permanent improvements.

Carolina requested funds to build a new pharmacy building and remodel Howell Hall for occupancy by the School of Journalism. The request was turned down.

A request for money to add to and remodel Peabody Hall was also given a thumbs down. The University asked for a new dormitory for men, a 400-student affair which would include dining room and kitchen.

The request for a new dorm was also turned down, while students in many dorms live three-deep in rooms built to house two students.

NO MONEY was granted to hire new faculty members or increase the pay of existing personnel.

Note this, then turn to the story in Time magazine and read of Duke's faculty growth. Phrases like "on almost any academic or government committee, there is apt to be at least one faculty representative from Duke" jump up from the slick pages to bother the Carolina student.

Carolina's request for a new physics building was turned down. It's no secret that our Physics Department is not up to par. Chancellor House told members of the Advisory Budget Commission just that early this fall. They came through with a small grant for physics equipment, but no new building.

Now note the story on Duke: "Duke physicists operate the Southeast's first 4,000,000-volt Van de Graaff nuclear accelerator."

★

BEFORE I'M accused of being a Duke partisan, let me say that I think the University is not going to the dogs. But unless we can get the necessary funds from the state legislature, Chapel Hill is not going to move ahead as it has been doing.

Competition among schools in this area is keen for the services of bright, young graduate students to teach freshmen and sophomores and work on their doctorate degrees.

Carolina pays these young men less than a number of other universities in this part of the country. Yet the scholarship that is carried on by these young teachers is vital to Carolina, and the teaching they do makes students what they are.

As I said, it's depressing to read the story of Duke's progress at a time like this for Carolina.

'Just A Routine Check-Up'

A Partisan View

The 'Big-Time' & The Athlete

Ed Yoder

In these days of semi-professionalism in college athletics when alumni demand that coaches win all or nearly all games or go to the chopping block, when coaches who question the sanity of the cult are warned to keep silent or lose their jobs, and when major subsidies are going to players and not scholars, the most obvious question is this: What is emphasis on "big-time" sports doing to education?

But there are other, perhaps more important questions.

For example, what are the movements toward professionalism in "amateur" sports doing to individuals who participate in college sports?

Many college athletes, going to school on scholarships, find themselves in a situation that demands more of them than they are prepared to give. Beginning students, in particular, find the countless adjustments necessary to being an athlete-student hard.

Such was the case of a certain football player, an ex-student at Carolina, whose identity, for obvious reasons, must not be known.

This football player was not the typical "athlete" portrayed so adversely and often. He didn't have five tutors getting his lessons for him every day. He didn't make exorbitant demands of his instructors. Academically, he was more or less average student. He was not a replica of the Bolenciewitz mentioned in James Thurber's new-famous essay, "University Days," who had to hear a "choo-choo-choo" sound from prompters in the back of the room to think of railroads as a utility.

This particular football player didn't go overboard on his book work. On the other hand, he didn't neglect his studies and recognized that they held an important place in his life as a college athlete.

The trouble with this certain player was not in himself, but in his stars that he was required to meet more demands than it was in his power to meet. He saw, with amazing objectivity for a partisan such as he was, the strange irony of his place in the college sphere.

In the afternoons he was required to go out on the training field and learn to be as aggressive as a code of football ethics would allow. Then, in the mornings, perhaps inadequately prepared, he walked into the different atmosphere of a classroom where he heard his teachers expound on the noble qualities that education seeks to instill in students. He saw clearly the difficulties (since he was a first-semester student) involved in keeping pace on the football field and keepin his scholarship and, at the same time, adjusting to and keeping pace with students with more study time. In an English theme, he wrote:

". . . The hours reuired to practice football and the trips that have to be made mean that these boys (football players) miss a lot of their work and don't have the necessary time to study their lessons. This puts them behind during the first semester, and they are never quite able to catch up with the others. If they have had improper preparation for college work, then this plus the inadequate time for study gives the wrong impression of their mental capacities. They are considered . . . stupid . . ."

"Their disciplinary training . . . can swing (the football player) to one side or the other. Either he applies to everyday life the values taught him, or he twists them to his own purpose. The roughness and aggressiveness necessary to football is a habit hard to break after the season is over, and some are unable to curb it. While some players settle down and do the work that is to be done, others feel intensely the sudden reversal of schedule. They are restless and can't be still. Their aggressiveness gets them into trouble, and their ability to make quick decisions turns to impulsiveness."

These, it must be remembered, are the words of a partisan, of a man who loved sports—and particularly football. They are candid words and words filled with irony.

True to what one might imagine, this particular player did improve his work when the season came to an end. The instructor who received the theme I've quoted from noted that, when the boy was freed from the rigid demands of his outside duties, his themes became more and more sensitive in character.

Thereby hangs the final irony of the tale. Apparently the very contradictions he had so clearly forseen caught up with him.

We can never know whether that violation was deliberate and needless or whether it was a move of last minute desperation. We can only wonder.

The Christian Science Monitor

Thierry Vaubourgoin is causing quite a stir in Paris. He is an artist, and has 45 of his paintings hanging in a gallery on the fashionable Rue Faubourg St. Honore. M. Vaubourgoin has been painting for three years. The most unusual thing about him, perhaps, is that he is exactly ten years old.

Without seeing his work, one can be sure that it is fresh, gay, and spontaneous, for, being a child, he sees as a child. All the world is new and clothed in glistening dew. This is one reason why much of the painting and drawing done by our youngsters is such a joy. Whether it is the slanty crayoned house with the orange roof and the purple chimney that comes home from kindergarten, or one of those whirly, often-sodden creations to emerge from the delight of a finger-painting orgy, we see something in it that is special, artistic.

What is it? The modern master Henri Matisse put it one way: "An artist has to look at life without prejudices, as he did when he was a child. If he loses that faculty, he cannot express himself in an original, that is, a personal way."

Painters like Matisse spend all their lives seeking to achieve and preserve the childlike approach that Thierry Vaubourgoin now has, which may be described in another way as peeling off layers of human experience to get to the idea behind the rose. Isn't this what Gertrude Stein was groping toward when she made that classic statement, "Rose is a rose is a rose is a rose?"

$700,000 LESS

There is some evidence that the present administration in Washington is reversing the trend toward increased Federal financial aid in the fields of health. Currently, Federal appropriations to North Carolina are about $700,000 less than for the previous year, roughtly two-thirds of which would have been used for work at the State level and the remaining one-third for local communities.—Health News

Wolf Ladejinsky & World Opinion

Dr. Arnold Nash

To The Editor Of The New York Times:

In your issue of Jan. 11 you reported Senator Wiley's expression of anxiety about the fashion in which the foreign policy of the Eisenhower administration "has harmed this nation's standing in the free world." You went on to say that the "Wisconsin Republican singled out what he termed the 'bungling initial decisions in the Ladejinsky case and certain of the administration's immigration policies as having 'done us little good in the eyes of the free world.'"

The President cannot very well continue to ignore his own immediate responsibility occasioned by the fact that one of his subordinates, Harold Stassen, has given security clearance to Mr. Ladejinsky's, while Secretary Benson refuses to dispel the cloud of suspicion over Mr. Ladejinsky's head.

You ask with point, in your editorial of Jan. 8, the question, "Can Mr. Ladejinsky expect to have the full confidence of the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States?" But does the President in his press conference of Jan. 19 improve the situation?

Last year I returned to America after having spent nine months lecturing in the universities of India, Burma, Hong Kong, the Phillipines and Japan, having spent the previous six weeks as an ordinary tourist in the Near East.

Repeatedly among professors, journalists, lawyers and civil servants one met a very genuine anxiety about America. It did not usually have its origin in any serious acceptance of the Moscow "devil" theory of American policy and program, for their anxiety lay not so much in what these people felt about America's wicked heart as depicted by Moscow propaganda.

Rather, as I had previously found out in several trips to Western Europe in 1946, 1948, 1951, and 1952, among these people (all of whom hold such key positions in the present propaganda war) was the notion that America is irresponsible not so much because of her alleged wickedness of soul but because of her stupidity of head.

Thus when they fear that America will precipitate World War III they do so not because America will deliberately, a la Hitler, plan to do so, but because in her stupidity she will blunder into it and take the rest of the free world with her.

It is in the light of these conversations in Europe and Asia that I venture to raise the question whether on any point has that irresponsibility more obviously expressed itself than in the fond notion entertained by President Eisenhower to the effect that an agricultural economist even of the stature of Mr. Ladejinsky can be expected to be taken seriously in such a key area as South Vietnam when Mr. Benson apparently still doubts whether Mr. Ladejinsky is to be trusted.

Who among the Vietnamese will be willing under these circumstances to take the risk of revealing to Mr. Ladejinsky their real thoughts and feelings?

The President, over the last few months, has several times made it clear that he has some awareness of ideals and ideas in the present struggle. It is difficult to think of any better contribution he could now make (and one which surely lies readily to his hand) than to remove the absurdity of the present situation when one of his Cabinet members sends to Vietnam an official who does not have the confidence of another Cabinet members.

PROF. NASH
'. . . the incredible confusion'

As Americans we often ventilate our foolishness to the world, but this episode is one that almost passes one's imagination. It certainly is beyond my comprehension. There is, of course one consoling—even if ironical thought: in the Kremlin many anxious hours are being spent in trying to search out a rational raison d'etre for the present riddle, for that is what, granted their presuppositions, it must be to them. However, it is hardly a sufficient reward if the prize we must pay to belwilder our enemies is that we confuse our friends.

More, history often shows that war breaks out when one side so misunderstands the other that it makes fatal and irrevocable miscalculations. . . . .

Nothing can so seriously mislead the Soviet authorities as can miscalculations about the real temper of the American mind and spirit. The present incredible confusion about the trustworthiness of Wolf Ladejinsky is not typical, I venture to say, of what American really stands for.

CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN
. . . a build-up for president?

Warren Is '54 GOP Possibility

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON — The Democratic majority in Congress is quietly burying the idea of having Chief Justice Earl Warren deliver a special message to a joint session on the needs of the Federal judiciary.

This is not personal. It is because Democrats sniff a build-up of the Chief Justice for 1956 in the event that President Eisenhower decides not to run again.

Instead, increased pay for the judicial branch will be included in the bill now in the works to raise governmental salaries. Speaker Rayburn has given the green light to a flat salary of $25,000 for members of Congress and Federal judges; he strongly prefers it to what he regards as deceptive gimmicks like tax-free expense accounts.

Since President Eisenhower also advocates pay raises the prospects for action in 1955—which is not an election year—are good.

The idea for the history-making Warren message came from the Department of Justice. Deputy Attorney General William P. Rogers proposed it last fall and has been quietly pressing for it among his friends in the press and in Congress.

It never has had a chance of being considered on its merits in spite of the Chief Justice's dignity and discretion. Rogers, his superior, Attorney General Herbert Brownell, and his intimate friend, Vice President Richard Nixon, are the three men in the Eisenhowr Administration whom Democrats unanimously suspect of putting purely political considerations into all that they do.

Rogers traveled with Nixon in the '52 campaign and staged the famous Checkers telecast. Rogers sat beside Brownell when he pulled his subordinate, FBI chief J. Edgar Hoover, into the Harry Dexter White case where former President Truman was all but put on trial.

Rogers and Brownell are also associates of Thomas E. Dewey whose professional touch lent the final victorious push to the Eisenhower campaign. Democrats suspect that Dewey, now a private citizen, may be thinking of Warren, his running-mate in 1948, as an insurance policy for the moderate-progressive Republican faction—just in case.

The idea itself of building up Warren as an ace in the hole for 1956 is logical and meritorious. Had the present Chief Justice achieved in New York what he did as Governor of California he would have been nominated President and elected by acclamation.

Instead he had to sit by in Chicago in 1952 and watch the Republican liberal forces coalesce around a candidate of whose domestic views they knew nothing. He permitted himself to call attention to it when with friends, but he has never complained.

The Chief Justice is now attempting to remove himself as far as possible from political consideration. If the Republicans think they need him, however, they will draft him as all politicians realize. The prospect is the more real because the present Rpublican big three in California—the Vice President, Senate Minority Leader Knowland and Governor Goodwin Knight—are in a bitter family fight for control of the state's delegation to the 1956 Presidential nominating convention. Like Barkis, these three are all willing.

UNC Baseballers Begin Practices Next Monday

CUFF NOTES

By

BERNIE WEISS

During the freshman preliminary game to last Friday night's Duke-UNC clash, I spotted Phil Fox, the veteran referee who flies all over the East officiating college and professional basketball, sitting in the first row of bleachers behind the press table.

Fox was just hanging around until the time arrived when he would go below and change into his uniform for another night's work, this time with Arnold Heft.

You will recall that Phil was the arbiter who received a so-called "threatening" letter from LaSalle coach Ken Loeffler a few weeks back. Loeffler, in the letter, charged Fox with certain action on the court, especially in one particular State-LaSalle game, which was unbecoming to officials.

So the natural question was put to the genial Washingtonian: "What about that letter?" And he came up with the classic answer, "No comment. All I know is what I read in the papers."

The conversation shifted quickly after this, but it shifted to a subject upon which he was more talkative. The conversation, of course, ran to basketball and here is what it was all about:

Fox would like to see certain revisions in the collegiate game. He predicts it will only be a matter of time before they are adopted.

First, he would like to see the foul lanes widened to the same width as the foul shooting circle, as they are in pro ball. This will eliminate much unnecessary roughness under the basket.

He would eliminate fouls charged on individual players, and would charge them to the team. After a team commits a specified number of fouls, it would be penalized for each additional free toss for the opposing five. This is also the practice in professional leagues.

"In football," said Fox, "a player is not penalized if he is offsides. The team is penalized. The only time a player is penalized is when he commits a flagrant foul (ejection from the game).

'I don't see where it helps the game of basketball to force a player to leave the contest after five fouls. He isn't taken out if he scores 2 points. The majority of fouls are not purposeful, anyway," he continued. "The fouling player is usually making an honest attempt to get his hands on the ball. If he fouls intentionally, that's a different story, and he could be told to leave the game as is the practice in other sports.

Fox pointed out that if these changes were made, there would be less fouling all around because the coach would be forced to teach defense, knowing that too many fouls against his team could lose the game. This system would also eliminate the astronomical scores of today's college games, and would speed up their actual clock times, there being less interruptions.

Fox would eliminate the bonus foul rule, put into effect this year. "A player, with the bonus rule, can do as well from the foul line, scoring two points, as he can from the floor on a field goal. The floor should be more rewarding because of the pressure and continuous action."

However, he would not want to see the 24-second "must" shoot rule in college games.

Having preached this sermon for nigh onto four years, Fox has suggested that many schools give the system a trial in a number of intramural games. It is worth thinking about—much better than many of the other proposals which face the NCAA annually.

He knows what he talks about. During the three and a half months of the year when basketball is played, Fox referees an average of six games per week, and this often totals to more than 100 games per season.

Unfortunately, Life Magazine picked a bad time to photograph the Tar Heels Friday evening. Duke soundly thrashed Carolina, 91-68, and looking on were 5,500 fans in person, radio and television addicts, plus the millions who read Life. The millions will see what it was all about in the Feb. 28th issue.

Life is sending a crew of eight men, including two photographers with countless cameras, on a tour of the south for a pictorial essay on the development of basketball below the Mason-Dixon line. Dave Beitlin, Life's Assistant Sports Editor, headed the group. The Carolina-Duke game was one of five stops.

Beitlin said his crew probably took up to 200 pictures Friday. Life will use less than six.

Season Opens With Ga. Tech In Late March

Carolina Will Train Four Days At Rollins

By BOB DILLARD

Spring practice sessions for the North Carolina baseball team officially get under way on February 14, culminating in a four-day trip to Rollins College in Winter Park, Florida for the annual Rollins "College Baseball Week," March 24, 25, and 26.

The Tar Heels 1955 schedule opens on March 24, with a game against Georgia Tech. The team will play three more games in Florida, two with Ohio State and one with Rollins, before returning to Chapel Hill and the remaining 19 games in the slate.

The schedule is as follows: March 26, N. C. State at home; April 1, Maryland at home; April 2, Michigan State at home; April 7, 8, and 9, N. C. Invitational Tournament at Durham; April 13, Wake Forest at Wake Forest; April 14, Duke at Durham; April 16, N. C. State at home; April 19, Wake Forest at Wake Forest; April 22, South Carolina at home; April 23, Clemson at home; April 27, Wake Forest at home; April 29, Virginia at Charlottesville; April 30, Maryland at College Park; May 4, Duke at home; May 6, South Carolina at Columbia; May 7, Clemson at Clemson; May 11, N. C. State at Raleigh; May 13, Virginia at home; and May 14, Duke at home.

Rabb commented on the approaching season, saying that "A great deal depends on young boys of the squad, particularly pitchers." Rabb also stated that the squad "has potential among the young pitchers for a good staff." In other positions, the team has experience and depth, with returning lettermen and players up from last year's freshman squad.

While Coach Rabb expressed the opinion that the league would be balanced, Wake Forest is generally considered to have the best team on paper in the conference. Along with last year's star Lefty Davis, the Deacons have fine pitching prospects for the coming season. Duke will field a better team than last year, with the added help coming from last year's freshmen. N. C. State will also be improved, for the same reasons.

Tickets Available For UNC-State Tilt

Holders of passbooks bearing odd serial numbers may exchange their books for tickets, having first priority, through tomorrow. Holders of passbooks bearing even numbers have first chance Thursday through Saturday.

Monday, all remaining tickets will go on sale to the general public.

Tickets Now On Sale For Indoor Track Meet

Tickets are now on sale at the Woollen Gymnasium ticket office for the second annual Atlantic Coast Conference indoor track meet to be held here Feb. 26.

There are a large number of tickets presently available, but only 832 student tickets. Seventy-five cents and pass-book ticket No. 27 are required for students while the regular tickets are going for $1.50. Tickets are good for both the afternoon (1:30 o'clock) and night (6:30 o'clock) sessions.

The gala day-long affair will have between 500 and 600 athletes and officials putting on one of the greatest unrehearsed shows to be seen anywhere. There will be several tight battles for top honors in various events, and some records are in danger of being broken.

Winless UNC Wrestlers Meet SC's VPI Friday

The Carolina wrestling team will travel to Blacksburg, Va., Friday hoping to upset a powerful V.P.I. team which is a strong contender for the Southern Conference wrestling title.

In their last match Saturday, the winless Tar Heels became the third victim of a strong Virginia squad and were flattened by a score of 28-8. The Cavaliers had the meet won after the 130 pound match by scoring 10 points on two quick falls.

Gregorys Star

The one-two punch of the Gregory cousins, Arthur and Miles, was the only highlights for UNC as both scored decisive victories over their opponents. After wrestling to a draw for the first two periods, Arthur reversed his opponent and then got two more points to gain a 4-0 decision. In the best match of the night, Miles Gregory won his second victory of the year by pinning Pentritti early in the third period.

UNC Sets Medley Relay Mark

Carolina's indoor tracksters came away from Saturday's VMI Relays holding the record for the distance medley relay, and a tie for first in the pole vault, and several second place showings.

The distance medley team of Bill Booth, Boyd Newnam, Bobby Barden, and Jimmy Beatty knocked 16.7 seconds off the old record with a run of 10:50.

Charlie Yarborough cleared the pole vault bar at 12'6" to tie with Mel Schwartz of Maryland and Georgetown's Seetenhoff. Tar Heel Ken Bryant tied for second in the high jump with a leap of 5'10" behind Duke's Joel Shankle and Ray Quillen of Virginia, who both went over at 6-feet even.

Roger Morris could garner only a third for the Carolinians in the shot put with a 48' heave, while Durham Lawsche of Duke was winning with a 49'11" throw.

Creasy Picks Pre-Medical Man To Job

Bert Veazey, a junior from Raleigh, has been appointed Chairman of the Orientation Committee for next year, according to Tom Creasy, president of the student body.

Veazey, who was selected for the position by Creasy, is a pre-med student. He is a member of ATO fraternity.

The new orientation chairman was a member of the student Legislature during the last quarter of his freshman year and all of his sophomore year. He was appointed to the Consolidated University Student Council last spring. Also during his sophomore year, Veazey was a member of the Interfraternity Council.

Veazey is a member of the IFC court this year and was chairman of last fall's Consolidated University Day. He is also now on the Student Audit Board.

Creasy, after announcing Veazey's appointment, said, "I think that Bert is one of the ablest men in student government, and I am very happy with his acceptance of the appointment."

"I am greatly honored to have received the appointment to this position," said Veazey. "My only hope," he continued," is that I can approach the wonderful success which my predecessors have had with this duty. I realize the importance of student orientation to our University and shall do my utmost to present a good program for our incoming students next fall."

House Favors Bill Extending Military Draft For Four Years

Special To The Daily Tar Heel

Spurred by international tensions, the House leadership shoved the bill through on a hurry-up schedule. It was brought up for floor action in the unusually short time of six days and passed with only about four hours of debate. It goes now to the Senate with approval taken for granted.

Rep. Short (R-Mo), supporting the measure, underlined a keynote sentiment by saying: "We must serve notice on our enemy that we mean business."

The measure continues until mid-1959 the government's authority to draft youths 18½-26 years for two years' active duty, followed by six years in the reserves. The present law expires next June 30 and must be extended if compulsory service is to continue.

Before final passage, the House beat down a proposal to limit the draft extension to two years. The standing vote on that was 153-30.

The House Armed Services Subcommittee meanwhile took up another of the Administration's military manpower measures, one feature of which is designed to insure that draftees keep up with their reserve obligations after completing active service.

Secretary of Defense Wilson told the members, headed by Rep. Brooks (D-La), that for the next few years it seems necessary "that all young men coming of military age will be required to serve in some capacity."

"The speed with which another world war might be fought and the destructiveness which is possible with weapons existing in the world today makes it imperative that we place our entire security program, reserve forces as well as active forces, on a basis of more immediate readiness," Wilson said.

Dr. Frank Graham Will Talk On UN Tomorrow

Dr. Frank Graham, United Nations mediator and former president of the University of North Carolina, will deliver a speech tomorrow at 4 p.m. on "The Role of the United Nations in Building World Peace" at the Fifth Annual Conference on World Affairs, to be held here.

The conference has been arranged by the American Association for the United Nations and the UNC Extension Division for women's church and civic leaders over the state and will be held Thursday.

The day-long program, which will be devoted to the theme, "The Role of the United Nations in Building World Peace," will feature addresses by several internationally-known leaders.

Miss Anna Lord Strauss, president of the League of Women Voters' Carrie Chapman Catt Memorial Fund for education and research, who served as United States delegate to the Sixth General Assembly of the United Nations which met in Paris in 1951, will address the opening session on the women's role in the UN. Miss Strauss has lectured in a number of Asian countries under the educational exchange program of the International Information Administration of the U. S. Department of State.

The afternoon sessions will feature three group discussions. Clark M. Eichelberger, director of the American Association for the United Nations, will serve as chairman of a panel on the international development and control of atomic energy. Members of the panel will include Sherwood Eddy, secretary of the YMCA for Asia; Keener C. Frazer, professor of political science; Carl H. Pegg, professor of history, and Milton S. Heath, professor of economics, all of UNC.

"Food, Health and Technical Assistance" will be the topic of a discussion chairmanned by Lt. Col. Mark T. Orr, UNC professor of air science.

Panel members will include Philip M. Burnett, acting officer in charge of the technical assistance unit of the office of International Economic and Social Affairs of the U. S. Department of State; J. Lewis Allison, professor of plant pathology, and Selz C. Mayo, associate professor of rural sociology, both of N. C. State College; Harold A. Bierck Jr., associate professor of history; John Cassel, associate professor of epidemiology, and Edward G. McGavran, dean of the School of Public Health of UNC.

Russell M. Grumman, director of the University Extension Division, will preside at the closing general session beginning at 3:45, when a short report from each of the groups will be heard.

UNC Graduate Writes History Of Education

A three-degree graduate of UNC has written a new history of education and dedicated it to the late Edgar Wallace Knight, Kenan professor of educational history here.

The author of the new volume, Dr. William E. Drake, worked under Dr. Knight's guidance in carrying out research for his Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy degrees, which he completed in 1928 and 1930.

"To My Master Teacher and Friend" is the dedication which is included as a tribute to Dr. Knight in the 624 page book which has just been issued to Prentice-Hall, Inc. of New York.

Dr. Drake is a professor of education at the University of Missouri and has been teaching college courses in the history and philosophy of education for more than 25 years. Designed as a text for college juniors and seniors in educational history courses "The American School in Transition" has been in preparation for more than 15 years.

Pharmacists May Receive $10,310 Aid

Approval of a tentative budget of $10,310 to provide fellowships, research supplies and other special material for the School of Pharmacy here was given by directors of the North Carolina Pharmaceutical Research Foundation last week.

Holding their ninth annual meeting, in Howell Hall, the directors approved the sum, which will provide six research fellowships, tuition aid, research supplies and special library materials for the school year 1955-56.

The net worth of the Foundation is $98,000 in permanent endowment funds plus $15,000 in the expendable fund, he explained.

Gray Appeals Raise In Dorm Rent; Asks Legislators For Appropriations

Williams Warns That Demos Must Avoid Defense Tactics

Governor G. Mennen Williams of Michigan, addressing a statewide rally of young Democrats here last night, warned that the Democratic Party must avoid a "defensive" campaign in the 1956 elections but should look to the future and not rest upon past achievements.

The lack of vision shown by many Democratic leaders in 1952, Governor Williams said, violated one of the basic premises of the Democratic creed, which Jefferson had stated as "using principles of the past as organic material to be moulded to the needs and aspirations of a living age."

Speaking in Memorial Hall, Governor Williams was introduced by Capus Waynick, Democratic leader from High Point. The Governor's appearance in Chapel Hill was sponsored by the local Young Democrats Club, headed by Bob Windsor.

Predicting 1956 Democratic victories which "will make those of 1954 emphatic," Governor Williams struck at "glib" Republican campaign promises, "many already broken, many unfilled."

Governor Williams predicted that these promises "will return to haunt the men who made them."

Referring to America's crucial problem of agricultural economy, he mentioned the work of "such outstanding leaders as your own senior Congressman Harold D. Cooley."

"The Democrats brought the farmer a greater prosperity than he had ever known," the Governor said. "They had to pioneer new ways—but they weren't afraid and they did the job."

Governor Williams suggested that the Democrats in the future can help the small farmer by supporting a revision in the price support program which would maintain support percentages but limit loans to any one individual.

TVA is an illustration of the Democratic Party's basic belief in government's duty "to use all its power and resources to meet the nation's problems head on," the Governor said.

He cited the benefits brought by TVA in the "tremendous rise in purchasing power in the valley, and the increased consumption of products from areas by valley residents whose prosperity had increased."

Governor Williams said that such facts make it difficult to view TVA as "creeping socialism," but rather they indicate that it is "good government dedicated to the expansion of free enterprise."

In picturing a bright outlook for 1956, the Governor said, "the Democratic Party will grow and prosper as long as its programs are conceived with enterprise and dedicated to progress, as long as they offer, where necessary, bold new methods which hold promise and hope for America."

Federalists' President Will Talk Here Today

Dr. W. R. Berryhill, Dean of the University School of Medicine; Dr. F. D. Lawrason, Assistant Dean; and W. P. Richardson, Assistant Dean for Continuation Education, attended the Annual Congress on Medical Education and Licensure which met in Chicago last Sunday and Monday.

Dr. Berryhill, a member of the Executive Council of the Association of American Medical Colleges, also attended a program on Medical Education at Northwestern University School of Medicine.

Lab Instructor Raise, Russian Course Asked

"When the time arrives that only the wealthy population can educate their children, then the Greater University of North Carolina has ceased to function for the purpose that it was created." So spoke University President Gordon Gray to the Appropriations and Finance Committee of the State Legislature yesterday afternoon in Raleigh.

The session, conducted in the Appropriations Committee room in the Finance Building, was also attended by W. D. Carmichael, University controller, Chancellor Robert B. House, William C. Friday and a host of other university officials.

PRESIDENT GRAY

President Gray, who spoke to request appropriations for the three divisions of the Consolidated University and also to appeal a proposed resolution which will, if enacted, raise the average dormitory rents to $130 per year, also cited the need for "a number of appropriations which are necessary to maintain a first-rate university."

"We believe that the state wants a competent University and in all fairness to the people of North Carolina, we should have no less than the best facilities available, but to obtain and to maintain such facilities requires a multitude of funds," Gray added.

Concerning the University at Chapel Hill the president outlined several "critical needs," which he called the "highlight requests," emphasizing that there were "many matters which needed financial attention but which were omitted at that present time because the administration understood that the Legislature was more or less at a loss for funds to meet the new budget."

President Gray also brought out in his talk "the need for more compensation for the laboratory instructors." Gray called the group as a whole "one of the best and cheapest sources of instruction that we have available." The amount of appropriations sought for this pay boost was $35,000. The request also stated that the money would be used to hire additional instructors.

"The hiring of persons to teach the Russian language" which Gray proposed for what he called "reasons which will enable students to better understand the sources of friction between the two nations" brough signs of amazement from a number of the Legislators.

One legislator when confronted with the question of whether or not the University at Chapel Hill needed additional funds, said "Every time I go to Chapel Hill all I see are cars cluttering up everything. It appears to me that perhaps the students can afford a rent raise, judging by this." The legislator could not be reached for identification purposes. He proposed that students be singled out according to financial status and pay tuition in proportion to their means.

Gray answered to this approach toward solving the present low financial state and increased budget of the Legislature that, "We are already charging students enough. Once we dispell with equality of treatment to all students, we also dispell with the true purposes of a great state institution."

Oak Ridge Symposium Set Here

An Oak Ridge Regional Symposium on "Atomic Energy in Science" will be held on Friday and Saturday, March 11-12, here, at Duke and N. C. State for all secondary school and undergraduate college students and teachers in the State.

The Oak Ridge National Laboratories and Institute of Nuclear Studies are cooperating with the three institutions which will share the two days of sessions on their campuses in Chapel Hill, Durham and Raleigh, respectively.

The North Carolina Symposium will be the fourth in a series held in various Southern universities since March, 1954, when the program was initiated.

Senior staff members from Oak Ridge will serve as lecturers at the symposium, along with faculty members from the three sponsoring schools.

Dr. Arthur Roe, chairman of the UNC Chemistry Department and head of the four-member Symposium Committee, has released final plans for the program.

Dr. Roe announced that the Friday morning opening session will be held here, with registration, three lectures and a luncheon meeting scheduled.

Duke will play host to the group Friday afternoon and night, when members will attend three more lectures, view scientific exhibits from Oak Ridge and hear Dr. Wm. G. Pollard, ORINS executive director, speak on "Nuclear Energy in Nature."

Lawton Joins Public Health School Roster

Dr. Gerald W. Lawton, University of Wisconsin sanitarian, has joined the faculty of the Department of Sanitary Engineering in the University School of Public Health.

Dr. Lawton, who is now on leave of absence as assistant professor of civil and sanitary engineering at Wisconsin, will serve as visiting assistant professor of sanitary chemistry for a period of one year.

In addition to teaching and carrying out research, he will act as a replacement for various staff members of the Sanitary Engineering Department who will go to Lima, Peru, for periods of from one to four months each, to act as consultants for the Peruvian National Engineering School.

This year the University signed a two-year contract with the Peruvian school to aid in the revision and expansion of its curriculum in sanitary engineering.

Women's Council Tried 52 Coeds During Fall Semester

By NANCY WHISNANT
Chm., Woman's Honor Council

The Women's Council tried a total of 52 cases during the first semester.

The large majority—43—of the cases were violations of the social rule. Four of the cases dealt with violations of the Campus Code, and five girls were alleged to have committed Honor Council offenses.

Three of the five Honor Code violators were accused of having lied during their trial and were placed on social probation. One girl reported herself for having cheated on an entrance exam and was given a Council reprimand. The last was found not guilty of cheating on a French quiz.

Of the four Campus Code violators, all were given a lengthy period of social probation. Three of these same girls were also found guilty of having violated the Honor Code, having spent the night in Chapel Hill unauthorized, and having broken coed closing hours.

The remainder of the cases were violations of the social rule. Nineteen girls failed to sign out; 15 of them were given social probation and four were excused.

Seven girls were over one hour late, and four were given no penalty due to conditions beyond their control. The remainder were placed on social probation.

Four girls were found guilty of having either illegally opened or illegally entered the dormitory doors after closing hours. Two of these were given social probation while the other two were given social probation plus a council reprimand.

Two girls were brought before the Council for committing six house council offences and were placed on social probation.

One girl was found guilty of having stayed illegally in Chapel Hill, not reporting herself to the house council and failing to sign in on return to the dormitory. She was given social probation also.

Another coed was found not guilty of having spent the night illegally in Chapel Hill and was given no penalty.

Social probation means that the girl must stay in her dormitory after 8 p.m. It also requires that she sign in with her vice-president and that she does not enter into the social rooms of the building. Probation of this type may be from one night to the remainder of the college period.

A council reprimand is recorded on file in the Dean of Women's office. If a similar violation occurred again, suspension would most likely occur.

The Petition

A strange but familiar contrast lies between the first and last parts of the statement that accompanied the student pro-segregation petition to the General Assembly.

Early in the statement we find high-pitched concern "for the Negro race and its place in society." In the course of the statement, unfortunately these sentiments falter. We read, in the concluding paragraph, that "we (the petitioners) would like to recall that our great grandparents faced a similar situation during the terrible days of Reconstruction, but after a long, hard and courageous struggle . . . they finally triumphed."

Of rationalized stands against the Supreme Court decision of May 17 we have had no end. We have heard now that the decision will retard Negro progress fifty years; that the Supreme Court has "legislated" and has violated states rights; that inequality should be preserved because majority opinion perhaps favors it.

But, like the student petition in question, if the stands run true to form they always hang on the same nail: What was "courageous" and right for our great grandparents, what was justified by a 19th Century situation, remains right for us in our own situation.

The petition called for state legislation prohibiting "mixing of the races in any public school in the state." Any such action would be contrary to the calm "wait and see" attitude North Carolina has adhered to so far. And in that call for open defiance of the Supreme Court, we believe the petitioners are in a distinct minority, not only on this campus but in the state.

The Daily Tar Heel finds it particularly unfortunate that such a petition originated in Chapel Hill, where much of the intelligent Southern thinking on racial matters had its beginning. Before the year is over, we hope, the considerable majority of students who did not sign the pro-segregation petition will find a strong way to express their own convictions.

The Supreme Court's decision should not be a signal for the sort of last-ditch prejudice shown in the student petition, but for a closing of ranks — especially in a college community — to find ways of putting the decision into effect. Racial barriers should fall first in the universities; we believe they will. And we hope this University may step to the forefront in this matter of Southern importance, as it has in so many others.

The 'Isms' Aren't Out At Socony

You may remember our printing, a couple of months ago, a letter written by Norman Thomas assailing a personnel pamphlet of the Socony-Vacuum Oil Company. The pamphlet, in a "tips to employees" section, warned against unorthodox politics. "The isms are out," it said. And we noted that the pamphlet was among those on the shelves of the University Placement Bureau.

Well, not for long. C. F. Beatty, director of industrial relations for Socony-Vacuum, has announced a change in the particular section. It is, he said, "contrary to our intention and beliefs. Socony-Vacuum emphatically does not wish to limit freedom of expression on any subject. On the contrary, people who are accustomed to thinking for themselves, regardless of their conclusions, are essential to this country's continued progress in one of the most competitive industries in America today." A new edition, he said, is on the press.

Mr. Beatty and Socony-Vacuum are in for congratulations. His statement leaves little doubt that he means what he says, that the "isms" are not necessarily out at Socony-Vacuum after all. This sort of prompt attention to reactionary cracks in American industry's wall by industry itself is a healthy sign, and one worth noting.

Correction

Allow us to fall back and regroup. In an editorial yesterday we said the ratio of required business courses to liberal arts courses for Business Administration students was 26-4. The actual required ratio is 16 B. A. courses to 4 liberal arts courses, a fact ascertainable by simple addition, and a curriculum considerably better. We regret the error.

During Exams Our Coffee Cups Ran Over

STUDENTS HIT the books during exams twice as hard as the rest of the term — if Y coffee sales are any indication.

The Y coffee bar sold an average of 2,000-2,500 cups of coffee during exam period. That's almost twice as much as is usually sold.

Sales of No-Doz (caffeine pills equal to a cup of coffee in effect) also doubled during exam period.

NEWEST DEVELOPMENT in the Woman's College hassle over the nude male drawing in the literary magazine came recently when the WC chancellor published an excerpt from the student Legislature's minutes.

The WC student paper, noted this year for its lack of backbone, declared the chancellor's action was "illegal." The charge was based on Roberts Rules of Order.

"This kind of disregard of parliamentary law is particularly dangerous when such a highly controversial issue is at hand and can only result in the gradual destruction of the student Legislature's rights and dignity," said the newspaper in its first firm stand of the school year.

EVER READ the dictionary?

I ran into Alex Thacker, a senior who practice-taught in Goldsboro last term, and she suggested that Webster's old word book makes good reading.

"When I finished teaching some days I didn't have anything to do, so I read the dictionary," she said.

I've never sat down to read the dictionary myself, but I recall that O. Henry, the famous short story writer, would dip into the dictionary for fun. Maybe on the next Saturday afternoon when there's nothing to do (a rarity at Carolina), I'll read through the A's.

CAMPUS POLITICOS took one look at the new Graham Memorial calendar, and tensed up.

Spring elections have been scheduled for the day after spring holidays. The politicians don't like the date because of the time lapse between the end of campaigning and the voting day.

Actually, the date has been set at an unfortunate time. But rest assured that the student government moguls will jump to have it switched.

From Cheka Cop To Premier

Bulganin: What Kind Of Man?

By Charles Kuralt

He is a man with mild eyes and a goatee who has made a success of almost everything to which he has turned. Successful versatility seems to be the key facet of his nature, reappearing time and time again.

He had less than a year's military experience when Hitler invaded Russia. But — picked by Stalin to be the Western Front's political commissar — he showed that his administrative brilliance could more than make up for his lack of military knowledge.

And long before this, Bulganin had demonstrated this ability in administration. In the late 1920's he was a successful Soviet factory manager, though he knew little of engineering. A decade later, as head of the Russian banking system, he turned in a creditable job despite his lack of knowledge in finance. Without experience in government, he laid a strong foundation for his future political rise by becoming the most outstanding Soviet mayor of Moscow.

Shortly after the Bolsheviks overthrew Alexander Kerensky's government in 1917, the 22-year-old Bulganin became a member of the Cheka, the secret police agency which conducted the Red Terror. He advanced in the Cheka; and advancement in those days meant the successful, hard detection and punishment of counter-revolutionaries. Leniency and softness were never characteristics of the Cheka.

The 'Little Politburo'

In the twenties and thirties, Bulganin held more than a dozen jobs of inceasing influence and of widely varied nature. Stalin handpicked him for the job of keeping Russian troops from defecting and surrendering to Hitler during the German advance in 1941. This particular task was one at which Bulganin didn't, of course, really succeed; but he retained his position and then, later in the war, was further advanced. This seems to show that he made powerful friends in the wartime Politburo and impressed Stalin himself. And his next appointment from Stalin bears out this supposition.

During the course of the war, Stalin made Bulganin a member of the State Committee of Defense, an omnipotent body which made military and state decisions without recourse to normal executive and legislative procedure. The members of that "Little Politburo" included Molotov, Beria, Malenkov and Anastas Mikoyan, in addition to Stalin.

There has been some indication that Mikoyan and Malenkov metimes disagreed with the majority on the committee — especially in the matter of consumer goods. Mikoyan and Malenkov are reported to have believed, even during the war, that more industry ought to be diverted to manufacture of civilian goods, especially clothing.

They apparently kept their prejudice after the war — and Mikoyan, it should be noted, lost his job as Trades Council Minister less than a month ago — within days of Malenkov's resignation yesterday with the admission of his "lack of experience . . . in national economy."

Back To Privation?

Does the choice of Bulganin mean, then, a turning away from the more relaxed economic policy of Malenkov and a return to the heavy industry and privation dicta of Stalin? Authorities in Washington were guessing "yes" yesterday — while adding the belief that Bulganin is a front man for a new ruling junta, that his election signifies a "spreading out" of Soviet multiple leadership is less likely to take radical warlike ,actio nthan a dictator might.

This, of course, is nothing more than speculation. For the other side of the picture, there is the testimony of a Swiss business man who had extensive dealings with Bulganin during the decade before World War II. "His ways of doing business and directing subordinates were as correct as those of any well-mannered Western executive. He knew exactly what he wanted and from his aides accepted nothing but strictest discipline. . . He never paid the slightest attention to the always present party watchdogs who had to sit meekly in a corner of the conference room."

If that particular independence of Bulganin is still with him, there may be more to the present Soviet change than meets the eye. To this question, as to so many, only time can supply an answer.

This much is certain: While Bulganin has never been very popular with the generals and admirals in the Soviet Union, he has been, since before Stalin's death, in command of the Red Army and Malenkov's victory over Beria in 1952 was accomplished with the help of Bulganin's army. Bulganin's position in the brief Malenkov-Beria skirmish was never in doubt; he was on the winning side from the first.

A New Boss

So it was these jobs and fortunes nad these characteristics — administrative competence, a cer- brought Nikolai Bulganin from telligence — which have now brought Nicholas Bulganin from Politburo director of armed forces policy to chairman of the Council of Ministers.

They'll be changing the face on the posters in the public squares today, and in the neat frames on local party headquarters walls from Vladivostok to East Berlin. The deeper, more significant changes may come ltaer; and later too, a clearer focus will emerge on Bulganin, the latest holder of the toughest and most precarious job in the world.

NIKOLAI BULGANIN
. . . the new face on the Vladivostok posters.

'Hey!'

Reaction Piece

YDC, YRC, DTH, Forum Estes & Kerr

David Mundy

I would venture that some editorial conspiracy or prejudice exists, but since people who dare intimate the existence of such things are now quickly labeled schizoids I will leave a full treatment of the matter to later.

Anyway, last week's Reaction Piece was halved, closely edited, and almost bounced off the page by Heard, the Hoss, Fleeson, fig newtons, and a Herblock that intimated that all the ex-communists who have dared to testify about their former associates are "racketeers" and perjurers.

Aside from assorted, strategically placed typographical errors, you might be interested in a second paragraph that did not make the DTH.

"The DTH editorship race will be nothing compared to last year, when candidate Peacock received and failed to survive the complete smear treatment. He was, you may recall, (typed as) 'An unqualified know-nothing do-nothing illiterate political adventurer who was plotting to turn the DTH into an organ of the big-time sports interests of Woollen Gym'."

And the reactionary, anti-liberal education forces of the School of Business Administration too, I might have added.

★

For general information, you might note a new DTH gag rule. Editor Kuralt, 'writer' Mundy, and the two candidates for editor just aren't to write about one another. Editor Kuralt does grant that I can continue to disagree with Yoder and Kraar. I hereby give notice of just that.

You may note that both will steer a journalistic course a good distance from controversial issues for the next several weeks. One does admit, however, that he can't stand Lenoir Hall food.

I am quite delighted to see that the Carolina Forum has finally (?) turned over to the Young Democrats Club the function of inviting liberal Democrats to speak on campus.

My worry with the Forum was that it was being unrepresentative in its presentation of speakers. The few conservative members of the YDC may likewise find a straight slate of left-wing New and Fair Deal Democrats appearing under their auspices.

But that is their own worry: YDC dues aren't as forcefully collected as are the funds that support the Forum. They might recall that the only outright conservative—he terms it "libertarian" Democrat — to appear on campus last year was under the auspices of the Young Republican Club.

Now how about that? The partisan Young Republicans sponsoring a Democrat while the non-partisan Forum sponsors no Republican, but a succession of liberal Democrats and/or socialist(s).

Admittedly, the YDC must be complimented on surpassing the Carolina Forum in the quality of its speakers. Comparing the YDC's Soapy Gov. Williams to the Forum's meandering Gov. Meyner is like comparing Demothenes and the Haw River roadbuilder, Kerr Scott.

Williams, conservative Democrats may recall, was one of the northern liberals who at the last national convention was unwilling to seat assorted southern delegations unless they took an oath to support the party's candidates and platform entirely.

I would venture a suggestion, however, that the YDC try inviting some of the South's homegrown boy demagogues. How about ham-faced Estes, who came to national attention on televised Senate committee hearings, hearings in which he and Sen. Tobey berated recalcitrant witnesses, indeed even tried to intimidate them?

Then there is boy-senator Gore, who likes to imagine that Messrs. Dixon and Yates are planning to destroy the multi-billion dollar TVA with their 107 million dollar steam power plant in Arkansas. He also imagines all sorts of evil goings-on, especially with those Wall Street interests.

Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things minimizing others.—Hipporotis circa 500 B.C.

THE HORSE was slurping coffee at the Y-Book-X when I heard him. I hoped it tasted as good as it sounded?

"It is almost potable," The Horse stated, treating me to a Coffee Mist which I would just as soon have. Missed, that is. . . "The management changes the motorman's mitt each month."

Was this really true?

"It is de rigeur to criticize all and sundry, and this goes for Monday as well. If we have one dependable universal, it is the commonplace of derogatory statement, and nowhere is it so evident as in these more or less United States."

The Horse viewed this penchant for the curdling comment as a mark of civilization and cultoor?

"It can be pinpointed closer than that," The Horse pontificated. "It is the hallmark of Christianity, one might say. The land that raises most crosses on high lets the boom down indiscriminately on high and low alike. Nothing is too mean to escape notice nothing so good it could not be better."

Well, wasn't this, in effect, a service?

"It is, indeed," The Horse affirmed. "It is a free service, and worth just what it costs."

Waaaaaadaminnit, waaaaadaminit! How did this tie in with The Horse's own pronunciamento that inventions were the fruits of Freedom?

"What I said," The Horse stated, his distaff eye crossing his muzzle to watch Pan's priestess pad theromorphically past again, "was that Freedom made for a superabundance, a plethora if you will, and shaddup if you won't, of inventions, of contrivances, because people were free to invent, to devise; and equally free to criticize that which had been contrived, invented."

Exactly! So, now The Horse complained?

"Constructive criticism and just plain, earthworm-type bellyaching are not quite synonymous," The Horse cudgled me with a hoof when my gaze circumambiented with the gyroscopic progress of the theromorphic creature. "This business of every-man-his-own-expert-appraiser is well and good until it is perverted to an everything-stinks attitude. It is this latter habit that touches me."

Torches him?

"Burns me up," The Horse translated. "Howsoever, it is useful as an indicant. Many exhaustive researches by Darwin, Huxley and Ball conclusively prove that researches can be exhausting. With an eye to preserving my energies for the more important things of life—eating, drinking, talking without interruption, fighting, contradicting, drinking —"

The Horse had said that twice.

"Well, I was thirsty," The Horse shrugged. "As I was saying, I have set up a number of indicants which I consult when I McCurdy something, animate or dependable."

When he McCurdied something?

"Subject it to my cool, impersonal analysis," The Horse elucidated. "My indicants are a set of cards covering all sorts of factual conditions. When I am confronted with a puzzling phenomenon living or trustworthy, I shuffle the indicants, select one a random for application to the McCurdied subject, and — there we are! It saves endless inquiry and research."

Yes-s; but . . . it was only pure happenstance when the indicant related to the subject.

"Exactly," The Horse beamed, "and in this way also my indicant-system resembles the scientific approach; ;for what the researcher thinks he or she sees may not be factual perception, but merely what the researcher thinks is the case. Thus. The Horse Indicant System does away with all guesswork: you don't wonder if maybe is this guesswork, you know it is! Er . . . I say, old boy!"

I felt unreal, and my slack jaws and glazed eyes must have revealed my torpor. I pinched myself . . . or at any rate tried to . . . and a coo-ed standing next to me slapped me perfunctorially after noticing I had platinum hair.

"Of course, you are acquainted with my Tri-Class Theory," The Horse rattled on, "or. are you? Humans, if you will humor this questionable classification, are divided into three classes: Those who can orginate; those who cannot originate, but who can copy; and—those who can do neither. It is my observation that those who can neither originate nor copy fall into the category of the greatest criticizers and complainers."

Was there anything to be done for them or with them? Or wasn't this important? Were they of no moment?

"Oddly," The Horse pronounced, his eyes narrowing to pingpong-ball size, "they are most important. For with the Originators howling that the Copycats have copied them, and with the Copycats shouting back that they didn't, things are bad enough; but add to this accusatory din the vocal disparagements of the Can't-Do-Nuffin's, and — as sportswriters used to write when they meant the place was jumping — Pandemonium reigns."

Or, Miltonically speaking, all Hell cuts loose?

"Yes, the Can't-Do-Nuffins can render the world a service far beyond their mean means," The Horse saw it — and Somethng In Purple — simultaneously. "They should start now and try to cultivate a 38-23-36 —"

What, What was this?

"—I mean," The Horse corrected himself and adjusted his vision swiftly, "the Can't-Do-Nuffins should try to say pleasant things about whatever they encounter, or experience; and the world would be a pleasanter place to love in. I mean, live in. They should try saying, 'Say. This isn't bad, at all, at all. At any rate, it is better than I can make.' Boy, would that, in time, work wonders."

I was silent, speculating on this with immediate application to the, ugh, coffee. I asked the very nice brewer thereof to dip her finger into the cup, I liked more sugar . . . I heard The Horse say:

"This isn't bad at all, at all "

I also heard a loud, resounding slap. And the Something In Purple was trampolining out of there again. I heard The Horse add, true to his theory:

"At any rate, it is better than I can make "

Sometimes, The Horse is downright philosophic!

Athletes of the Week!

Krepp, Baker, Drake Swim Fastest College Medley Relay

By BOB COLBERT

Charlie Krepp, Phil Drake, and Dick Baker, national collegiate and AAU 300-yard medley relay record holders, have been chosen by The Daily Tar Heel sports staff as "Athletes of the Week."

The event marks the first time this year that more than one person has gained the honor.

This relay team has swum the fastest 300-yard medley relay that has been recorded by any college team in the nation going the distance in 2:45.9. In the medley relay, the first 100 yards are swum backstroke, the second 100 yards breaststroke, and the final leg is freestyle.

Krep, DTH "Athlete of the Week" after he set a new ACC record in the 200-yard backstroke, is a sophomore from Baltimore, Maryland. He is probably the best UNC backstroker since Jimmy Thomas, once recognized as one of the best backstrokers in the world. He attended Baltimore City College and swam for the Widebrook Swim Club in Baltimore.

In the National AAU's he placed in three events. In the indoor meet he placed fourth in the 150-yard backstroke and sixth in the 100-yard backstroke. He was third in the 200-yard backstroke in the outdoor event.

His time in the 200-yard backstroke against Michigan, after setting the record for the medley relay, was the fastest time turned in by a collegiate swimmer in the past two years, 2:07.4.

Drake, from Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., attended Ft. Lauderdale High where he was placed on the high school All-American team in the breast stroke and individual medley. He like Krepp, is a sophomore and is majoring in Economics. Last summer he won the 100-meter butterfly breaststroke in the Junior National AAU meet.

Just last week, it was announced that Drake was credited with two United States pool records. He recorded his record-breaking times last year in going the 100-yard course butterfly in 58.2 and the long course butterfly in 60.2.

Baker, anchor man on the relay, is from Greensboro, N. C. He attended Groton Prep in Massachusetts before entering UNC. He had no swimming experience before going out for the frosh team two years ago, however he was named the "Outstanding Freshman Swimmer" on the squad. A steadily improving freestyler, he recorded his best time in breaking the relay-record, 51.2. Dick is a junior majoring in history. In addition to swimming he has also lettered in lacrosse.

All three will be back next year and will be trying to better their own record.

Also in contention for the honor this week was the track medley relay team of Bill Booth, Boyd Newnam, Bobby Barden, and Jimmy Beatty, which set a record in the VMI Relays

TOWN & CAMPUS

CUFF NOTES

By BERNIE WEISS

The word comes from Town and Campus that Al Lifson, co-captain and guard on the Carolina basketball team, denied to pick up his gift which the T & C awards to the athletes this department selects weekly as outstanding.

Lifson repeated his action of a year ago when he was again selected as "Athlete of the Week" recently. He turned over the price of the gift to the March of Dimes.

Bob Young, center of the Tar Heels, has been called a number of flattering things because he is handsome. One local sportswriter even went so far as to peg him as the "Clark Gable of Carolina."

Young, however, suffered a stroke to his captivating features one night last weekend when he rolled out of bed in the middle of the night and landed on a bar-bell someone had left lying on the floor.

Four stitches were required to close a gap over his left eye. Despite the injury, he will be ready to play Friday night when the Tar Heels meet Virginia in the Greensboro High School gym.

Virginia's Buzz Wilkinson continues to lead the Atlantic Coast Conference in scoring with his 31.9 average. Buzz scored 37 against State College and 33 against Wake Forest to slightly improve his average last week, and his total now reads 607 for 19 games.

Dickie Hemric, of the Deacs, has second in the ACC. Clemson's Bill Yarborough is third and Carolina's Len Rosenbluth ranks fourth. Rosie has a 25.9 average for 15 games.

Eddie Cameron, Duke Athletic Director who is also chairman of the ACC Basketball Committee, recently explained the procedure which will be followed in the event there is a tie for any of the eight places for the tourney to be held in Raleigh March 3-4-5.

Cameron quoted the following ruling: "If there is a tie for any of the eight places, the place position will be decided by draw unless one of the tied teams is the champion of the year before. In that case, they would get the advantage by right of defending their championship."

Wildcats Drop To 2nd; G. Washington Gets 6th; N. C. State Ranked 7th

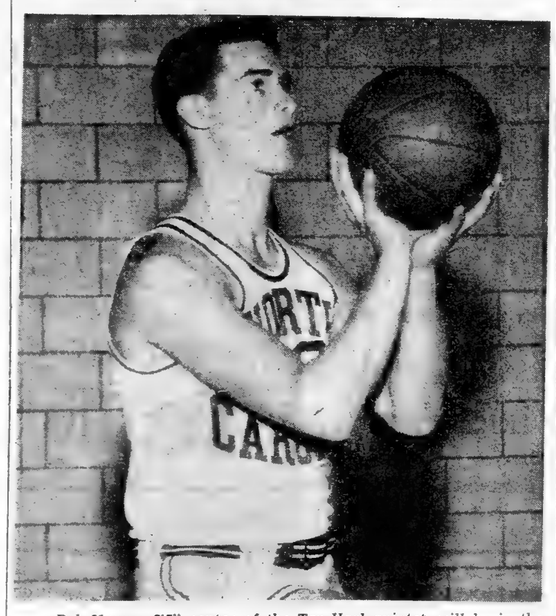
The Associated Press

The San Francisco Dons, who want to prove they're the best college basketball team in the nation, already have done a pretty good job of convincing the sports writers and broadcasters.

That was seen today when San Francisco was voted the No. 1 team by a big margin in the ninth weekly Associated Press ranking poll. The Dons were named first by 68 of 126 voters and polled a total of 1,107 points.

Kentucky, the leader ever since the second week of this season's poll, dropped to second place with only 19 first place votes and 867 points. Points are scored on the basis of 10 for each first place vote, nine for second, etc.

San Francisco, a ball control team with the nation's best defensive record this season, made the top without the benefit of any advance ballyhoo. The Dons weren't listed in the pre-season poll, when La Salle was picked as the team most likely to succeed.



The top 10 teams with first place votes and seasons records through Saturday's games in parentheses; points on 10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 basis:

1. San Francisco (68)	(16-1)	1,107
2. Kentucky (19)	(14-2)	867
3. La Salle (3)	(16-4)	633
4. Duquesne (12-3)		614
5. Utah (3)	(17-2)	559
6. G. Washington (9)	(15-3)	393
7. N. C. State (18-4)		389
8. UCLA (1)	(14-4)	330
9. Marquette (6)	(16-1)	319
10. Illinois (11-3)		198

Littler Likes Trailer

TUCSON, Ariz., Feb. 8 (AP)—Gene Littler is convinced living in a trailer has helped him become leading money winner in the pro winter golf circuit.

So far this year he has picked up $8,409. Regardless of how much more he wins, he is going to keep on pulling the 25-foot trailer. It isn't a good luck charm. He likes it.

LUCKY DROODLES! WE'VE GOT 'EM!
WHAT'S THIS? For solution see paragraph below.

IT'S EASY TO SEE that the Droodle above is titled: Tired anthropologist relaxing with better-tasting Lucky behind freshly dug-up fossil. No bones about it, Luckies taste better to all sorts of people. College smokers, for instance, prefer Luckies to all other brands, according to the latest, greatest coast-to-coastest college survey. Again, the No. 1 reason for Luckies' wide lead: Luckies taste better. They taste better, first of all, because Lucky Strike means fine tobacco. Then, that tobacco is toasted to taste better. "It's Toasted"—the famous Lucky Strike process—tones up Luckies' light, good-tasting tobacco to make it taste even better... cleaner, fresher, smoother. So, enjoy the better-tasting cigarette ... Legislation Is Introduced To Revamp State's School Laws

Segregation Decision Is Cause Of Changes

RALEIGH, Feb. 8. (AP)—Legislation to revise North Carolina school laws, including some changes resulting from the U. S. Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision, was placed before the General Assmbly today.

House and Senate Education committees gave the bills top priority and agreed to study them thoroughly before other education measures are considered.

A joint meeting of the committees was set for Friday morning to hear an explanation from the commission which drafted the revision of school laws. The commission, authorized by the 1953 Legislature, was headed by Fred Folger of Mount Airy.

For the most part, the revision does not materially change present laws. It eliminates obsolete and conflicting provisions and recodifies school laws to make them more accessible.

One of the changes recommended as a result of the segregation decision would eliminate the provision of present law for segregation in the schools. Another would take out the requirement for continuing contracts for teachers and place their employment on a year-to-year basis.

Other committees cranked up for action today and scheduled public hearings or briefings on proposed legislation.

House Judiciary Committee 2 set for Feb. 17 a public hearing on a bill to establish a new system for investigating deaths which occur under mysterious circumstances. The measure was introduced last week by Reps. Addison Hewlett of New Hanover and E. K. Fowe of Durham.

Senate Judiciary Committee 1 scheduled for Wednesday and Thursday explanations of bulky measures rewriting the state's corporation laws. The bills, the first through revision of corporate laws in more than 50 years, will be explained by law professors who helped in drafting them.

House Judiciary Committee 1 handed to a subcommittee the problem of studying a bill designed to provide treatment along with confinement for sex offenders. Officials of the state's mental hospitals objected the bill would give the hospitals more than they could handle.

Meanwhile, Sen. Ralph Scott of Alamance said hearings will be postponed on a controversial bill to give the State Milk Commission authority to fix minimum retail and wholesale milk prices. Scott, who introduced the bill, said it will be held up until other amendments to the milk law which he expects will be introduced are before the Senate Agriculture Committee.

Traveler Talks On Formosa

By WOODY SEARS

Yesterday afternoon in the Lounge of Graham Memorial a small group heard a world traveler, lecturer and author talk about his travels.

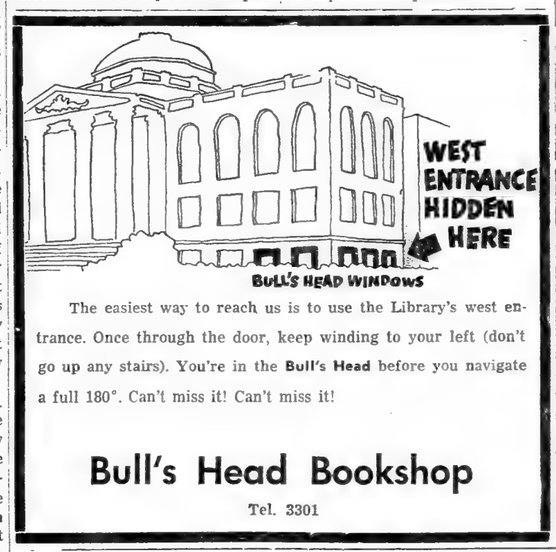
Dr. and Mrs. Sherwood Eddy were here speaking under the auspices of the YMCA and the YWCA. They are making a speaking tour of colleges, universities and churches.

Dr. Eddy, who is 84 years old, told of the Indian Christian who was so dedicated to his beliefs that he went into the wilds of India to work among Asia's most uncivilized remaining tribe. Dr. Eddy said that he pleaded with the man not to sacrifice himself by placing himself in the hands of those "devil-worshipping, carrion-eating savages." Several years later, Dr. Eddy said the man returned and found thousands of those same savages baptized and converts to Christianity.

He told of his acquaintance with Nehru and Gandhi, and told of the vast crowds who thronged to see and hear Gandhi; and of the mothers who would hold their children over their heads so that they might see this man, as though he were a god. Dr. Eddy said "I saw in Gandhi the most Christlike man I have seen in my 84 years."

On the subject of Formosa, Dr. Eddy said that in his opinion the U. S., as a nation, should stay out of the Formosan picture. He said it is essentially the same situation as would develop if some foreign power tried to meddle in Long Island. Eddy also said that he did not think that Chiang Kai-shek would ever recover the confidence of he Chinese people, for when in power, he was hated by the peasants, the little people of the Chinese nation who comprise almost the whole of the population. At any rate, it is a problem for the UN, not for the U. S. as an individual he added.

Answering a question on Red Chinese recognition, Dr. Eddy said that to recognize is not to approve necessarily. "Only by recognizing them (Red China) will we ever be able to carry on successful diplomatic relations with them", said Dr. Eddy.



When asked his opinion of the eventual outcome of armored state of the world, Dr. Eddy replied that surely the God who was adequate to create hundreds of millions of stars and untold thousands of universes similar to ours was equal to this situation. "God will not let naughty children blow up His world", he added.

Dr. Eddy said that when he was a young man all the Christian student had to do was to convert the world, for America was already a Christian nation. Today the Christian student must start his crusade at home, to recover those who have strayed off the path of Christianity. Everyone would have a job to do in this effort to "re-Christianize" America, he said.

"Only about 1 percent of the people of this country are dedicated to crime and violence", he said' "Give us 1 percent of the people who want to build . . . we can change the world".

Dr. Eddy said that he has no fear for the fate of the world, for he knows that our God will defend and protect us.

He said that he and Mrs. Eddy have been very happy through the years, and concluded that the secret of that happiness lay in the discovery of God as a source of hope and inspiration.

Valentino Movie Set In Carroll

By PAT McBANE

Graham Memorial Activities Board Film Series ticket holders will have an opportunity to see the "Great Lover of the silent screen" tonight when the second movie of the spring slate is presented in Carroll Hall at 8 o'clock.

The film is the 1926 production "Son of the Sheik." Its star is Rudolph Valentino.

A sequel to "The Sheik," which established Valentino as one of the most popular matinee idols of his day, tonight's movie attempted to recapture the glamour of the earlier picture. Though not as successful, the importance of "Son of the Sheik" lies in the fact that it was Valentino's last film. A few weeks after its release, the star died unexpectedly, following an emergency operation.

Valentino's death was an occasion of nation-wide mourning among his female admirers. Thanks to a skillful press agent, his funeral attracted world-wide attention. Newspapers were supplied with photographs which were distributed in advance of the chamber where the actor's body would lie in state. Posed shots of the cortege appeared in many newspapers an hour before the funeral began.

The actual services in New York caused a riot. Scores of peopel were injured, and Campbell's Funeral Parlor, where the body lay, was almost wrecked by hysterical fans. Thousands of women gathered at stations across the country as the funeral train made its way to Los Angeles.

A highlight of the burial rites was the appearance of an unidentified woman, heavily veiled and dressed in black, who placed a single red rose on the grave and then departed as mysteriously as she had come. Legend has it that each year on the anniversary of Valentino's death she again visits his tomb to leave a rose in his memory.

The actor's gravestone was paid for by a scenario writer. Its price was $600. The only other tangible evidence that the Great Lover actually existed stands today in a park in Hollywood. It is a small bronze monument in his honor, paid for by contributions from his sorrowing fans.

Lucy Purser To Sing At Germans

Pretty Lucy Purser, above, who's singing with Tony Pastor and his orchestra these days, will sing here when Pastor and crew play here tomorrow night. The dance, sponsored by the Carolina Germans Club, will be held from 9 p.m. until 1 a.m. Earl Bostic and orchestra will play at a concert 4 to 6 p.m. Saturday.

Ed Borden Is Appointed To Entertainment Post

Ed Borden, Goldsboro, has been appointed chairman of the Student Entertainment Committee for 1955-56.

Appointments are subject to the approval of the student Legislature tonight.

In making the appointments Creasy said, "I am very pleased with the committee. I think it's a very well-rounded group".

The committee was appointed earlier this year to allow members to begin work on securing the "best talent available." Many artists have to be signed up early in the spring. Usually, the retiring committee picks the celebreties who are to appear, and the incoming committee carries out the program. With the earlier appointments, one committee will be able to perform both these functions.

Former committee appointments were made in May.

Madry Termed 'Doing Nicely'

R. W. Madry, director of the University News Bureau who is a patient at Memorial Hospital, is "doing nicely" and seems to be improving, said a hospital attache yesterday.

Madry, who went to the hospital for a check-up last Jan. 17 and was kept there, has had his illness diagnosed as kidney trouble and hypertension.

State Host At CU Day Saturday

State College will be host Saturday for Consolidated University Day.

Three times each year representatives from Woman's College, State College and UNC meet to discuss common problems and to maintain an organization to represent the Consolidated University.

Each school is responsible for one session a year. The first was held here last fall, and the last this year will be held at WC.

Larry Ford, chairman of the Carolina delegation, announced yesterday names of UNC's council members, who were chosen by student government.

A complete day is planned starting at 2 p. m. and concluding with a dance beginning at 9 p. m. in the State College Union Ballroom.

Baptists' New Addition Will Start Tonight

Training Union, latest addition to the local Baptist Student Union, will begin at 7 p.m. today after the weekly family night supper at 6:15.

Dr. I. G. Greer, former director of North Carolina Baptist orphanages, will begin a weekly seminar on Baptist doctrine, and Student Chaplain James Cansler will lead a group in the study of the life and work of Christ.

A Baptist Young People's Union, using denominational literature, will be directed by Miss Carol King, literature chairman of BSU.

The two seminar groups will include 30 minutes of lecture and 15 minutes of discussion, while the Baptist Young People's Union will be entirely conducted by students.

Supper in the church cafeteria will cost 50 cents.

Premeds' Discussion Scheduled

Pre-medical students here and at other colleges in the state have been invited to participate in a discussion of medical school requirements to be held here next Tuesday.

Dr. Edward Hedgpeth, university physician, clinical associate professor of medicine and chairman of the admissions committee of the School of Medicine, will conduct the meeting in room 207 of Venable Hall at 8 p.m.

The local chapter of Alpha Epsilon Delta, national pre-medical honor society, headed by George T. Strickland, Nashville, is sponsor of the meeting.

Student advisors and pre-medical students of Wake Forest, Davidson and Guilford have been invited to attend.

Student Solons To Decide Fate Of Much Legislation

By NEIL BASS

The convening of the student Legislature tonight at 7:30 in the Philanthrophic Assembly Hall will mean the debate and fate of numerous legislation, plus the fact that the session will be witness to the deliverance of President Tom Creasy's State of the Campus address.

The raising of legislator's hands will also determine the radification or rejection of the Interdormitory Council's revised bylaws, which have never been approved by the solons.

It is likely that the leaders of the Student Party will be the most interested in the outcome of the voting, however, because three of the SP campaign platform planks out of the original four that were proposed will be decided upon.

The University Party has several bills that will be thumbed down or passed by the legislators too. One of these, a bill concerning the choosing of candidates for the editorships of The Daily Tar Heel and the Yackety Yack, has aroused a lot of interest on the part of a couple of the possible candidates, and especially on the part of the SP. It is rumored that the SP solons will vigorously oppose the measure for what Dave Reid, SP floor leader called, "fear that such a bi-partisan board created for the selection of candidates would not be entirely bi-partisan."

Creasy has said that his address will deal with "discussion of the action that I took in vetoing the University Band appropriations bill; discussion of the action that I took in appearing before the Faculty Council to appeal the measure taken by the University with regard to the limitation of class cuts; and discussion of possible opposition to the fee raise that is being proposed by the state Legislature."

The message, according to Creasy, will also deal with 'the' general gist of things that student government is working on."

"Satchmo" will be whooping it up in Memorial Hall tonight, but it is likely that the legislative session will be just as full of surprises.

Satchmo Plays For Charity In Memorial Hall, 8 Tonight

By MORT COOPER

Tonight Louis Armstrong and his All-Stars will give a polio benefit concert in Memorial Hall to one of his most appreciative audiences, namely the Chapel Hill Jazz Club, composed of college students, faculty members and townspeople.

"No more tickets are available" to the Louis Armstrong concert to be held tonight at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall, said R. B. Fitch, president of ATO, last night.

Those attending the concert will see one of the greatest jazz musicians of all time in action. Armstrong will give out with some of the strongest and most beautiful jazz trumpet, and some of his famous "scat singing" during the concert. There will be the serious Armstrong playing singing such haunting tunes as "Black and Blue"; there will be the joking, laughnig Armstrong as he plays the role of the entertainer, singing and just horsing around; and there will be the true New Orleans Armstrong, playing such old jazz favorites as "Tiger Rag," "When the Saints Go Marching In" and "Muskat Ramble."

Armstrong will certainly be the feature attraction during this soiree of jazz, but his All-Stars that back him up are not to be underrated. The All-Stars are probably the finest aggregation that old Satchmo has played with since his stints with King Oliver, 30 years ago in Chicago.

On the clarinet, Armstrong features Barney Bigard, who is steeped in the New Orleans tradition, and who has played with King Oliver and Duke Ellington. He has been with Armstrong since the late 40s. Trummy Young, famed for his powerful "gut bucket" technique, is the trombonist. Formerly Young played with Coleman Hawkins and the Benny Goodman band. The pianist is Billy Kyle, a fine jazz musician, who has even played on the legitimate stage in the Broadway musical show, "Guys and Dolls."

Arvell Shaw is the bass player who has studied classical work in Europe and is perhaps the most musically talented of the group, outside of Armstrong. On the drums is an up-and-coming young drummer named Barret Deems. His playing with the All-Stars marks his first jump into bigtime jazz.

Yaas, Lawd: Plays For Polio Fund

Louis Armstrong and trumpet, both above, will play tonight from 8 to 10 o'clock in Memorial Hall. Sponsored by Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity, the jazzman's appearance is being staged for the 1955 polio drive.

Morehead Art Gallery Shows Bible Lithos

Through the courtesy of Maurice Saunders of Chapel Hill, the Morehead Art Gallery is now showing in the north exhibit room 47 lithographs by Abel Pann, based on the first five books of the Old Testament.

The artist, of Lithuanian birth felt that the Old Testament of the Bible had not been illustrated in a way which correctly portrayed the Jewish people as they were. To capture the atmosphere and to portray the Jews of Biblical times as he felt they should be, Pann lived in Jerusalem for many years. The lithographs are hand drawn on stone, pand printed and autographed for Saunders, the owner.

Now a resident of the Carolina Inn here, Saunders loaned the lithographs to the Morehead Gallery, because they tie closely with the current Planetarium show, "Billions of Years Ago." The show itself is the story of the creation as taken from the Old Testament and as conceived by scientists.

Pann's lithograph illustrations of the Five Books of Moses have been exhibited in Berlin, Brussels, London, Boston and New York.

Dr. Graham Keynoting UN Conference Today

By ED MYERS

Dr. Frank P. Graham, who will speak here this afternoon as part of a world affairs conference, is a former president of the University of North Carolina and present special mediator for the United Nations.

Dr. Graham will speak at 3:45 p. m. in Carroll Hall on "Role of the United Nations in Building World Peace."

The Fifth Annual Conference on World Affairs arranged by the American Association for the United Nations and the University Extension Division, will begin with the morning session at 10:30. Three discussion groups; International Development and Control of Atomic Energy", "Food, Health and Technical Assistance" and "World Trade," constitute the afternoon program from 2 until 3:30 o'clock, with the finale being Dr. Graham's speech, which is the theme for the entire conference.

Dr. Graham, who has also served in the United States Senate, is known all over the world. At one time, when he was mediating demilitarization of Kashmir, the Russians called him a "secret agent of the United States." At other times Kremlin headquarters has referred to him as "Secret agent of Wall Street" and other similar titles.

The Fayetteville Observer printed an editorial some time ago, pointing to what Dr. Graham did in Indonesia: "Hundreds of thousands of people are living today who quite possibly would be dead were it not for Dr. Graham's quiet, human understanding and tact, his deep grasp of global historical trends, his complete abhorrence of power politics."

At today's fifth annual conference many internationally-known leaders will deliver addresses.

For Membership, Publicity and Party Spirit:

UP Amends Bylaws To Provide For Steering Group 'Nucleus'

By CHARLES JOHNSON

Tuesday night the University Party passed an amendment to its constitution which shall provide for a steering committee, which is to be used as a coordinating nucleus of the party.

The name of the committee is to be the "The University Party Steering Committee." Its purpose is to sponsor membership drives, assist with the publicity of the party and to stimulate interest in the party. Members of this committee are to be appointed by party chairman. There are to be three members from three separate men's dorm districts, three members from three separate men's town districts, one member from the women's dorm district and one member from the women's town district. The vice-chairman of the UP is to serve as chairman of this committee.

Some members of the party felt that existence of this committee might create dissention within the party itself. But the amendment was passed after a lengthy discussion. Interpreters of the amendment emphasized the fact that the committee is not to run the party indirectly. Its purpose shall be to promote cooperation in the party, and it shall be composed of a good representation of the students of the University, they said.

A discussion was held to "stimulate interest and cooperation" in the forthcoming elections. Rollie Tillman said "I believe that the name of the University Party surely represents to all concerned what we feel campus politics should be concerned with—in other words, the University as a whole; and it has long been a tradition of our members to do not what we feel is right for a segment of the campus, but rather that which will benefit the University as a whole. The students have shown that they recognize the value of such an interest, and I believe that the move begun in the fall will continue in the spring elections to send those to the legislature who represent all the University and its best interests."

Charles Ackerman, publicity chairman, said he felt, "At present the University of North Carolina is in a state of flux. Ideas are changing, and because we have the leaders who can best interpret these changes, it is our responsibility to get them elected."

Charles Yarborough, party chairman, announced that the date for spring elections has not been definitely set. As soon as a date is decided upon, he said, the UP will then set a time for nominations.

Ervin Gives Advice

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9. (AP)—This advice of a North Carolina philosopher was passed on to Congress today by Sen. Ervin (D-NC):

"Pass no more laws, and 'peal half of them we've already got."

Ervin said in a statement that nearly 5,000 bills and resolutions were proposed in the first month of the 84th Congress. He commented:

"The vast number of legislative proposals presented to the Congress at each session emphasizes the wisdom of my departed friend, Lum Garrison, who was Morganton's philosopher in the days of my youth."

"When I was elected at the age of 26 to represent my native county of Burke in the North Carolina Legislature, Lum Garrison came to me with this advice."

'. . .We Have Dug Into . . . Surplus . . .'

Student Party Fills Vacancies; Discusses Band Money Bill Veto

The Student Party in a lengthy session Monday night elected representatives to take over seats made vacant by resignations in Dormitory Men's II, III and IV Districts.

Resigning from their legislative posts were SP solons Charlie Dean, Dorm Men's II; Bill Maready, Dorm Men's III, and Tommy Bennett, Dorm Men's IV.

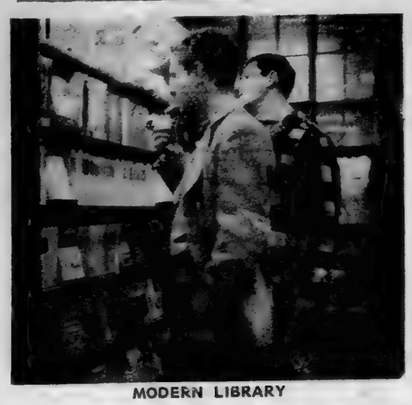
Elected to replace there were: John Heath in Dorm Men's II; Ray Long in Dorm Men's III, and Harold Downing, in Dorm Men's IV.

In a report given on the procedures of the Student Legislature, David Reid, said the bill recently passed by the solons which would have given $1,100 to the University Band if President Tom Creasy had not vetoed it was "obviously an attempt of the University Party to get in on the tail end of the apending." Reid went on to say that "UP Legislators have accused us (the SP) of a free-spending program. We do not deny that we have dug into the appropriations surplus, but while we have spent a good deal of money, we were only putting to tangible use the money which had been lying idle for nigh on 10 years without benefiting the student body.

"The bill was very inopportune, but the band is a highly deserving group and I sincerely hope that something can be worked out for their benefit at a later date," the SP floor leader said.

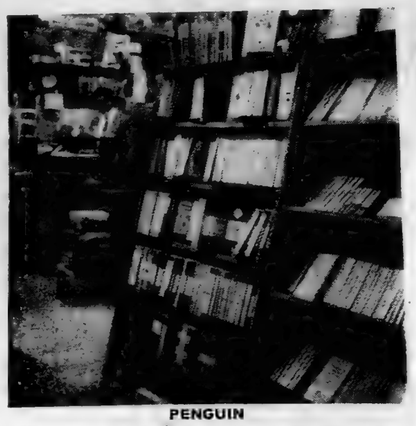
Concerning the economy measures that the student Legislature has taken, such as the placing of The Daily Tar Heel on a five-day week, Reid said "I hope and I'm sure the party hopes that The Daily Tar Heel can soon resume its six-day week, but I do not note the student body holding its breath with anticipation."

Amy Cook, SP Advisory Board chairman, called for action of the party on "several pressing issues." Some of these were the election of a person "to round up the SP legislators before legislative sessions and the publication of a weekly column expressing the party's views in The Daily Tar Heel."



The session was concluded with Don Geiger, party chairman, announcing that "the nominations of party candidates will begin Feb. 28."

Statement Upcoming On Negroes' Intelligence



The Board of Education, meeting in executive session here, has appointed a committee to prepare a statement concerning the board's policy on special intelligence tests given to white and Negro students here.

Last week, School Superintendent C. W. Davis said the tests proved Negro high school students of Chapel Hill are mentally unfit to meet standards for white students.

The tests, given last spring, were said to be state standard.

MODERN LIBRARY

PENGUIN

ANCHOR

The Paperbacks

The inexpensive, well-bound and printed Modern Library books that have ministered for so long to the needs of literate but penny-shy college students, are now coming available in even less expensive paperback editions.

It's a new paperback series for Modern Library (though titles are old) and the first ten releases are big guns aimed at all the competition in the field. Among the new releases (which stand exactly 7¼ inches tall and 4 and seven-sixteenths inches wide and cost 95 cents) are Crime and Punishment, The Divine Comedy, The Republic, Gulliver's Travels and comparable giants.

We stopped by the Intimate Bookshop the other day and listened to Paul Smith tick off the list of paperback publishers with whom the new Modern Library books will have to deal.

"The English started it all," he said. "The Penguin series is the oldest of the paperbacks we carry. Simon and Schuster probably rates as the father of the American paperback business. Oh, there are others—Rinehart has a series and Doubleday (Anchor), Knopf (Vintage), Meridian, Evergreen, Viking and Dover."

What this means to book buyers is that almost every great work of literature is available in the best translations for less than a dollar. Paperback titles numbering in the hundreds range from Homer to Faulkner and include Dumas and Darwin and Randall Jarrell.

The paperbacks seem to make everybody happy. The one dollar Unpopular Essays of Bertrand Russell have sold 269 copies in a year and a half at the Intimate—a record not approached, of course, by any hard cover in the house.

The rest of the stock likewise goes like hotcakes. The age of the paperbacks is on us full steam; college students never had it so good.

A Sad Story Of Fraternities & Hard Times

Louis Kraar

THIS IS one for the fraternities, a sad story at a time when Carolina Greeks are singing the blues.

Although it's not a tale of fraternities here on campus, the story is one which will grieve them. But it needs to be told.

Last spring, in an historic decision, the U. S. District Court for Northern New York ruled that a Board of Trustees of a state university may constitutionally ban local branches of fraternities from the college campuses under its control.

New York State University had banned fraternities and sororities. The Board of Trustees also declared that no social organization permitted on any one of the campuses of the State University of New York may in policy or practice "operate under any rule which bars students on account of race, color, religion, national origin or other artificial criteria."

The Greek letter groups contended that the Trustees had violated the requirements of due process. That means, they said, that no notification or opportunity for a hearing was given the national fraternities or sororities before the Trustees acted.

The fraternities said that the ban enroached on their freedom of assembly, denied them equal protection under the laws, and adversely affected existing contracts.

Fraternities from the New York school pointed out the beneficial aspects of national fraternity and sorority affiliations and the absence of discriminatory clauses in their constitutions.

But in the end the District Court turned them down—and the suit was dismissed.

THE FINAL chapter in this sad saga of sororities and fraternities was written recently when the U. S. Supreme Court refused to hear an appeal on the case.

This reporter believes that individuals have a right to select their associates in any organization. On the other hand, I believe that this can be accomplished without having discriminatory clauses in a group's constitution.

It would seem that the fraternities and sororities at New York State University were given a raw deal. Unfortunately, as students under a school's administration, their rights were limited.

"A state may adopt such measures, including the outlawing of certain social organizations, as it deems necessary to its duty of supervision and control of its educational institutions . . ." declared the U. S. District Court.

NEWS OF THE New York abolition comes to campus now, I know, when local chapters are oppressed. I said my story wasn't a pleasant one, but that it needed to be told.

Last year fraternities here began to feel the vise. First it was the town of Chapel Hill that insisted upon fire escapes. They were necessary, but—at the same time—the town never enforced their fire escape ruling against townspeople who house students.

Then came spring and the visiting agreement, a set-back for fraternities.

Latest hardship has been in the form of garbage houses that each house has had to build.

That's why I know news of the New York court case comes at a bad time. But, after all, it should be told.

A Hat For The '56 Ring?

Ed Yoder

Gov. Mennen Williams of Michigan who spoke in Memorial Hall Tuesday night, makes no secret of his want for the White House toga.

During the question and answer period which followed his speech, he met the vital question full in the face. He's on record, he said, as believing that anyone who says he wouldn't like to be President is telling a falsehood.

After observing the Governor's demeanor and listening to his ideas, I think he's a man to keep your eye on for the 1956 vice-presidential nomination.

There would be one hitch involved: If Adlai Stevenson again gets the Presidential nomination and runs on the same ticket the people will be confronted with the improbable situation of having their votes solicited by two Princeton men.

Mr. Williams is a man of huge stature. He talks, like many midwesterners, with a flat, nasal drawl, with the vowels sharpened by an Eastern education.

When he spoke, the slanting lights trained on the lectern, accentuated his heavy jaws. The beginning of his speech was enough to make anyone who'd come expecting to hear something said get up and leave.

He opened with a long string of words like "happy," "happiness," "inspire," "inspiration," and used most of them in reference to the usual North Carolina figures.

The long series of prefatory remarks was somewhat trying, for it had taken the Y. D. C. chain of command about 20 minutes to introduce him.

The Governor was introduced by former Nicaraguan Ambassador Capus Waynick who was introduced by Larry McElroy, who was introduced by Bob Windsor.

No one introduced Bob Windsor. But he had the honor of standing at the lectern after the speech with Governor Williams' huge hand lying on his shoulder.

Governor Williams was noticeably pleased to get a standing ovation by the Democrats. This may have been the tip that prompted him to be forthright about his Presidential aspirations.

The speech delivery was fair to good. (Why don't frequent orators like Senator Kefauver and Gov. Williams learn to use their hands naturally when they speak?)

Governor Williams made a speech whose contents, once discerned, were sound and good. He spoke out, which was a good thing, against turtle-shell campaigning. He didn't like the motto, "Don't let 'em take it away," as it was almost exclusively applied. He wants the Democratic Party to take the initiative in political affairs.

His position as a pre-election politician marked off certain limits for him: He tip-toed over segregation (he wants to see "justice" done) and made some unclear remarks about the Democratic Convention loyalty oath.

But Governor Williams is one of the few who dares to speak candidly against the "creeping socialism charge" against TVA. As Norman Thomas pointed out in his speech here last fall, the tendency is to apologize for TV A and like institutions. Mr. Williams didn't apologize. He'd paraphrase Patrick Henry, he said: "If this (TVA) be socialism, make the most of it."

The Governor was a little shocked to be asked about his nickname "Soapy." He became doubly candid in reply to the question. His mother was a member of the Mennen family of shave-cream fame; his father was a Williams of pickle fame. "But, he continued, "We do some farming."

GOV. WILLIAMS
. . . keep an eye on Soapy

The Governor's final shock of the evening came when he stepped through the door into the Graham Memorial Main Lounge. He looked about for a second before crossing the carpet. Perhaps thinking of the bleak atmosphere of Memorial Hall, he whispered to the attractive Mrs. Williams,

"This is nice."

Another hat for the 1956 ring? It's been tossed in the air and it's headed that way.

Blast!

Paul T. Chase

This is a voice of dissent, a futile cry of protest; its attitude will reflect three basic assumptions: that there are a great many things wrong with the world in general and with this university in particular; that nothing will ever be done about most of them; that something must nevertheless be said of all of them.

A solitary voice, powerless to effect physical change, can only cry out in anger and dismay. This is one such cry. To most it will be of little or no interest, to others it will be a source of anger and embarrassment, to some few it will seem important as their own voice. To You, Administrative Powers, it will be only a slight thorn, noticeable perhaps, but easily ignored. It will decry ideas and institutions that you either hold dear or do not give a damn about. Nor does it hold dear or give a damn about you. The harm you do, the baseness you spread, the intellectual havoc you wreck among receptive minds is deplorable but inevitable.

A tired and lonely voice, it will not purport to speak for others. It will emphasizt ideas, opinions, convictions; not facts. It will say many things that have been said before, that will be said again, that will always have to be said again. It may occasionally say something that will be new to someone, or from an approach that had not been considered by someone. It will probably not be read.

MORAL FIBRE

What's happened to Free Enterprise and Moral Fibre?

Some of the Southern states are going all-out in their "handouts" along the lines of the welfare state, creeping socialism, and all that stuff. The result will be that we will raise a whole generation of Southern manufacturers without moral fibre. Some of these states are spending fortunes to bring in new industry; they are handing out free land sites, new roads, sewers, free wiring and no taxes. I can see these manufacturers shivering for the lack of moral fibre every time they go out to make a bank deposit. O where are the men who chopped down the trees and carved a civilization out of a wilderness? O where are the snows of Yesteryear? What happen to Free Enterprise?—Harry Golden in Carolina Israelite.

MISSING VIRTUE

McTavish was violently opposed to his daughter marrying her boy friend Hugo. He ranted and raved a long time before breaking down and giving his consent. Doing so he said to her, "Marry him if you will, Lassie, though I fear happiness will be hard to find since he has not the virtue of thrift. Why just the other day I saw him drive out of a parking space with 12 minutes left on the meter.

Wold Concert 'Skillful, Exact'

John Ludwig

Tuesday night, promptly at eight, Miss Bonnie-Jean Wold began the first recital of this semester's Tuesday Night Series. The audience was sparse; much smaller than a singer of Miss Wold's calibre deserves.

The first group of songs were by Hugo Wolf, and they left this philistine quite cold, as did the following three "Chansons de Bilitis" by Debussy. Miss Wold, however, performed them with notable skill and exactness. She sang the notes as they are no doubt written, and she pronounced the French and German tonguetwisters convincingly. Concerning her interpretation of these songs I have nothing to say; they are all above my head.

The last group of the first half of the program was on my level of appreciation, and was quite enjoyable.

An artist faces two problems when singing opera on the concert stage: the obvious vocal difficulties, and the often overlooked dramatic requirements. Miss Wold is an instructor; she is perhaps too concerned with the technical side of the music she sings so meticulously. Her rendition of the three Puccini arias was so carefully done that some of the pathos integrally a part of them was lost.

I sat down after the intermission to look at my program and was surprised to notice two very modern names completing the performance. The first was the controversial Leonard Bernstein. Miss Wold chose his song-cycle "I Hate Music!", which I have heard was written originally for Jennie Tourel. If there was any emotion lacking in the previous part of her program, Miss Wold's convincing manner with these five songs more than made up for it. She seemed to enjoy singing them, and I enjoyed watching her.

Miss Wold concluded with Samuel Barber's long musical poem "Knoxville: Summer of 1915." The text to this very difficult work is taken from a blank verse composition of James Agee. It is forbiddingly complex, being in the form of a lengthy recitative. Barber wished to create a mood with his music, just as Agee did with words. Both have succeeded, and the combination is "Knoxville."

Had Miss Would simply sung the poem without a mistake I would have been pleased; but she surprised me by not only rendering it flawlessly, but with the warmth that Barber and Agee intended that it should have.

The audience, though small, provided three healthy curtain calls. I was sorry that there were no encores scheduled.

—YOU Said It—

A Question From The Y Court Club: Ain't Y'all For Us?

Editor:

Since you have taken it upon yourself to tell the state of North Carolina by he medium of Tee Video that the Tar Heel is not for the students but for the university, we would like for you to explain in an editorial just how this so-called newspaper (and we use this term loosely) is subsidized. We have been of the opnion that we have been paying your salary, but since you have said that this "Comedy of Errors" is for George, the administration, and the faculty (another loose term) we wonder if they wouldn't like to help share the expense of this campus counterpart of the News and Observer otherwise known as "The Oracle of God" or "Scott's Tissue."

While we are on the subject of editorials, you said in your February 8 column that the so-called crip courses are filled with Business Administration majors. We wonder how a person can justifiably classify a course as a crip unless he had taken that course. It seems that you as an industrious history major have found time to sit in on a few of these crip courses (and probably for credit, too).

And another thing, the way you cover up your inadequacies with Thomas Wolfe's intellectualism is disgraceful. Oscar Wilde once said, "The difference between journalism and literature is that journalism is unreadable and literature is unread." You can derive from this just how much of your editorial page is read by the students.

(To correct some misconceptions in the Breakfast Club's letter: (1) Nobody on the staff has said The Daily Tar Heel is "not for the students." It is, of course. What the editor said on WUNC-TV was that The Daily Tar Heel does not attempt to represent student opinion in its editorial column—quite a different thing. We believe student opinion to be so diverse in its nature that it cannot be represented by an editor or even a whole staff. The next best thing, we believe, (and a principle followed by all self-respecting newspapers, is for the editor to represent his own opinions and to open his page for disagreement, both in letters and in columns. David Mundy's column is an example of this idea; and The Daily Tar Heel prints all signed letters. (2) The courses in question were specifically referred to as courses of value. The editorial listed seven or eight courses and said "only one or two of them are crips." Anyone who has been four years in the University knows there are few "crip" courses, and knows which ones those few are reported to be.—Editor.)

Editor:

I was extremely disappointed to read Dr. Sherwood Eddy's statement in The Daily Tar Heel today. I trust the intelligent readers will not be so easily misled. But I would appreciate a chance to express my disagreement with him as a Chinese on the following grounds:

1. Dr. Eddy's opinion about Chiang Kai-shek is not true. For Ciang, after the Nationalists moved to Formosa, becomes a quite different person from the one that Dr. Eddy knew years ago. Can a man, once in his lifetime, make a mistake and learn a bitter lesson and become better?

Chiang very efficiently reorganized his Armed Forces. They are well-disciplined and ready for combat, as stated in many American reports. The Nationalist government in Formosa is manned by a new group of honest, capable and younger men. They are the backbone of the government. The life of the ordinary people is much better. I have lived there six years.

Please compare dispassionately Chiang Kai-shek with all other leaders of the U. S. allies in the Far East. Please read the reports made about Formosa by independent U. S. government and civilian leaders. You will find out whether my statement is justified.

I wonder if Dr. Eddy had any first-hand facts about the Nationalist government during the last six years when he made his statement.

2. Dr. Eddy, obviously and very unfortunately, identified Chiang, an individual person, though the present Nationalist leader, with the cause of free China. Chiang repeatedly said that he is not indispensable. Any anticommunist who is able to lead the country is welcome to take over his office. For example, the vice-president Chen Cheng is popular with the people of Formosa, and will probably succeed Chiang.

The U. S. support of Formosa is not a personal favor but helps friendly organized anti-communist forces against the Red agression and therefore helps to preserve world peace and freedom. To be more practical, judging from the American point of view, the U. S. is defending her military and political interests. In a word, the very survival of the U. S. is at stake.

3. Certainly, Formosa and other ancient islands, including Hong Kong, belong to China. But they are definitely not the China controlled by the government of Russian origin, model and purpose.

Chiang Kai-shek and his followers have every right to resist any proletarian dictatorship. Freedom-loving Chinese, not under the Red control, should have the chance to choose their own government as advocated in any American textbooks of political science.

4 Dr. Eddy said that the Communist government in China has aided the peasants and hinted that he liked their methods. I doubt if he knows how they have oppressed the people, and how they have afflicted them with unspeakable miseries. He advocated that Formosa deserves no U. S. support. Well, the Communists want the whole world under their control, would Dr. Eddy agree with the Communist revolutionary plan and would he like to experience the benefits of the Red Saviours?

UNC Coaches Hopeful Of Getting 17th Win

By RAY LINKER

When the 26th annual Indoor Games roll around on February 26, the University of North Carolina will be seeking its seventeenth indoor track crown. The Tar Heels have not won the conference title since Maryland broke a six-year winning streak in 1952, but Carolina has been rebuilding, coming up with some fine material in the last two years, until it now appears that this year's meet will be the closest in many seasons.

Last year Maryland's Terps took the championship by some 20 points over Carolina and Duke, who were in a tight battle for second place which saw the Tar Heels over the Devils by less than two points.

Carolina Coaches Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton feel that their club is considerably stronger than teams of the past few seasons, and can point to almost every event to prove their point. Therefore, they contend that the Tar Heels should finish ahead of the field, even if by only three or four points.

Ranson considers sophomore Richard Waters to be the best pole vaulter Carolina has ever had, and when he teams with Charlie Yarborough, UNC can rightly claim two of the best vaulters in the conference.

Hilton maintains that Carolina has the best distance men in the league in Jimmy Beatty, Bobby Barden, and Boyd Newnam. Beatty, another sophomore who is the conference individual cross country champ, will carry the Tar Heel colors in the mile run, expected to be the most tightly contested event of the meet and the fastest in a number of years.

Barden, who finished in second place in the mile last year and copped third in the two-mile, will stick to the longer race this time. Barden has improved greatly since a year ago, and he has been knocking out near-record runs with considerable ease recently.

Newnam is the conference outdoor 880-yard run champion, and has hopes of bettering his last year's third place indoors.

Duke's Durham Lawshe had to set a new record in the shot put last year to beat Tar Heel Roger Morris, who will be out for a revenge victory this year with assistance from Larry Maslow. With Morris and Maslow on their roster, the UNC coaches can easily claim the best weight men in the league.

Although Duke's Joel Shankle won both hurdle events a year ago and will attempt to repeat that feat this season, he may well find himself in a battle royal, especially in the low hurdles where UNC's Claude Rhule and Waters are expected to make it rough going for Shankle. The Blue Devil appears to have a slight edge over the same two Carolinians in the high hurdles, but he may well find himself pushed to a new record before the Tar Heels have admitted defeat.

The loss of Jeff Newton and Harry Brown makes the dashes appear to be a weak spot for the team, although there is still a good opportunity that the Tar Heel team will make a good showing in these events. Jay Zimmerman, Jim Bynum and Don Mitchell will give UNC some strength in the 60-yard dash. Richard MacFaddin and Don Wright are the Tar Heels' best 440-yard dash men. Defending champ Maryland, incidentally, took all four places in the 440 last year, and the top three runners are back again for a try at a repeat performance. Tommy Woodlee, South Carolina's outdoor champion in the 100-and 220-yard dashes, who didn't run indoors last February, is the likely winner in the 60-yard event.

Versatile Shankle is the co-defender of the high jump crown also. This is another good event to watch, mainly because of the fact that Maryland's Hogan won the freshman division jump last year with a height that equalled Shankle's varsity performance—6'1". Ray Quillen, of Virginia, who tied Shankle last year, and Tar Heel Ken Bryant, a sophomore who jumped 5'11½ for the freshman outdoor squad, are expected to be leading contenders.

It's Shankle again in the broad jump. Although the Blue Devil ace topped UNC's Yarborough last year, the Tar Heel has to his credit a win over Shankle in this event that came later, in the spring season. This, too, should be one of the many interesting battles of the evening.

With an array of trackman such as these, plus strong team depth in such men as Glenn Nanney in the two-mile, Bill Booth in the 880, and utility man Bob Wilson (high and broad jump, hurdles, and relay), the Tar Heels are planning on coming away from the Indoor Game with the conference championship trophy in their possession.

And even if the Carolina team is unable to finish first, the spectators still will have seen the meet labeled "The Indoor Track Classic of the South" and one of the greatest unrehearsed shows anywhere.

Frosh Swimmers Seek Fifth Win Against Greensboro High Today

Coach Dick Jamerson's undefeated freshman swimmers will meet Greensboro High School this afternoon at 5:15 in Bowman-Gray indoor pool.

The freshmen are sporting a 4-0 record, having beaten High Point High School twice, Richmond YMCA, and this same Greensboro team. However, since their last meeting with UNC, Greensboro has won the South-Eastern scholastic championships.

In the previous meet with Greensboro, the Tar Heels won seven out of the nine events, winning by a score of 48-26.

Probable swimmers this afternoon are Bill Roth, Jim Goad, Walt Rose and Kelly Maness in the sprints; Mac Mahaffey and Tom Maury in the breaststroke; Parker Ward and Bill Zickgraff in the backstroke; Ned Meekins and Glenn Pickard, diving; Jake Smith and Bob Lynch in the distance events; Rose and Ed Shawley in the individual medley; Zickgraff, Mahaffey and Holmwood in the medley relay; and Shelf, Goad, West and Roth in the freestyle relay.

Kearns And Brennan Set Pace For Win

Victory Is Number 15 For Freeman's Squad

By RAY LINKER

Carolina's freshman basketballers easily chalked up their fifteenth win of the season by drubbing the Campbell College J.V.'s, 88-73, in Woollen gym last night.

Sharp-shooting UNC guard Tommy Kearns and center Pete Brennan set a fast pace for the Tar Babies with 24 and 21 points, respectively. Kearns made 11 of 20 floor shots, a nice 55% for the night, and grabbed 11 rebounds. Brennan pulled down 23 rebounds and tossed in nine field goals.

Guard Bob Vernon, who collected 22 points, and Bozo Yountz with 20 were the high scorers for the visiting jayvees.

The Babies have lost only once, while this was the Buies Creek boys' third setback. They had previously lost to the Carolina squad, 105-79, and to the Wake Forest frosh.

It took the Campbell team four minutes to hit the scoring column, as the Tar Babies ran up a 10-0 lead. The lead stretched to 18 points midway the first half before the Campbellites were able to regroup their forces and cut the lead to 44-34 by halftime.

Vernon's jump shot from the center of the foul circle with 12 minutes to go in the game brought Campbell within nine points, but it was never less as the Babies built up another 18-point margin within six minutes. Tar Baby Coach Buck Freeman sent in his reserves with four minutes to go, and they carried it from there.

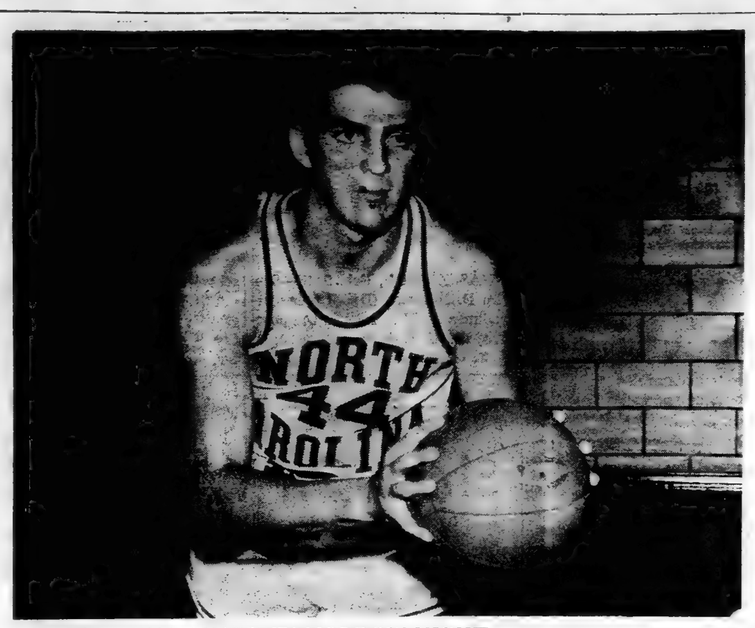
Gymnastics Team vs. Tech Here Saturday



The North Carolina gymnastics team, after evening its season record at the .500 level with a win over the Navy Pier Branch of the University of Illinois last week, swings back into action Saturday with a match here with Georgia Tech.

It will be the first meeting of the season between the two teams.

The Tar Heels, under the coaching of Bill Made, have now claimed wins over the Jersey City, N. J., Recreation Department and the Navy Pier Branch, while suffering losses at the hands of Army and Navy.

Cagers Resume Action, Tackle Virginia, Terps In Succession

A prolonged mid-year lay-off, interrupted only by a crushing defeat at the hands of Duke last Friday night, abruptly comes to a halt this weekend for the Carolina Tar Heels.

Coach Frank McGuire and his men travel to Greensboro tomorrow night where they take on the Virginia Cavaliers. Saturday morning they will fly to College Park, Md. to meet the Terrapins that night. Both games are ACC contests.

The Tar Heels will be seeking to get back on the road which carried them to a brief stay atop the Conference before the Duke loss dropped them into a second-place tie. The long lull in the N. C. schedule came after an 84-80 upset of N. C. State and lasted until the Duke defeat.

Thus tomorrow's encounter with the Blue Devils will be the Tar Heel's second game in three weeks.

The four-way race for first in the ACC is due for at least a slight shake-up by the end of the week and a couple of upsets could throw the entire loop into confusion. Maryland's 8-2 mark is currently tops in the loop, with the Tar Heels, Duke and State all tied at 7-2. Duke and State were both favored in games earlier this week, and if they win and the Tar Heels take Virginia, the game Saturday night will see four teams tied for first place, as the Terps are idle until Saturday. When North Carolina and Maryland hit, something will have to give in the four-way deadlock. State takes on South Carolina Saturday night.

The game will pit North Carolina's scoring star Lennie Rosenbluth against Virginia's deadeye Buzz Wilkinson. Wilkinson was third in the nation with a 31.6 average and Rosenbluth fourteenth at 25.8 at the last official report.

THE TREEHOUSE OF THE AUGUST MOON

Spring is just around the corner, and with spring, as always, will come tree-sitting contests. This I applaud. Tree-sitting is healthful and jolly and as American as apple pie. Also it keeps you off the streets.

Tree-sitting is not, however, without its hazards, as you will presently see when I tell you the dread and chilling tale of Manuel Sigafoos and Ed Pancreas.

Manuel and Ed, friends and room-mates, were walking one day past the folk music room in the School of Dentistry and Fine Arts. Suddenly they stopped, for coming through the door of the folk music room was a clear and thrilling alto voice singing the lovely folk tune, I Strangled My True-Love with Her Own Yellow Braids, and I'll Never Eat Her Sorghum Any More.

When the last shimmering notes of the ballad had died away, Manuel and Ed rushed into the room, and there they thought their swelling hearts must burst asunder. For the singer was as beautiful as the song! Fair as the morn she was, doe-eyed and curvilinear.

"My name is Manuel Sigafoos," cried Manuel Sigafoos, "and I love you madly, wildly, tempestuously!"

"My name is Ed Pancreas," cried Ed Pancreas, "and I love you more than Manuel Sigafoos."

"My name is Ursula Thing," cried the girl, "and I've got a jim-dandy idea. Why don't you two have a contest, and I will go steady with the winner?"

"What kind of contest?" cried Manuel and Ed.

"A tree-sitting contest," cried Ursula Thing. "Natch!"

"Done and done," cried Manuel and Ed, and they clambered up adjoining aspens, taking with them the following necessaries: food, water, clothing, medicaments, bedding, reading matter, and — most essential of all — plenty of Philip Morris cigarettes.

We who live on the ground, with all the attendant advantages, know how important Philip Morris cigarettes are. Think, then, how much more important they must be to the lonely tree dweller — how much more welcome their vintage tobaccos, how much more soothing their mild pure flavor, how much more comforting to know as one sits in leafy solitude that come wind or weather, come light or dark, Philip Morris will always remain the same dependable, reliable, flavorful friend.

Well supplied with Philip Morris, our heroes began their contest — Manuel with good heart, Ed with evil cunning. The shocking fact is that Ed intended to win the contest with a Machiavellian ruse. It seems that Ed, quite unbeknownst to Manuel, was one of three identical triplets. Each night while Manuel dozed on his bough, one of Ed's brothers — Fred or Jed — would sneak up the tree and replace him. Thus Ed was spending only one-third as much time in the tree as Manuel. "How can I lose?" said Ed with a crafty giggle to his brother Fred or Jed.

But Ed had a surprise coming. For Manuel, though he did not know it himself, was a druid! He had been abandoned as an infant at the hut of a poor and humble woodcutter named Winthrop Mayhew Sigafoos, who had raised the child as his own. So when Manuel got into the tree, he found to his surprise that he'd never felt so at home and happy in his life, and he had absolutely no intention of ever leaving.

After four or five years Ed and his brothers wearied of the contest and conceded. Ursula Thing came to Manuel's tree and called him to come down and pin her. He declined. Instead he asked her to join him in the tree. This she could not do, being subject to acromegaly (a morbid allergy to woodpeckers) so she ended up with Ed after all.

Only she made a mistake — a very natural mistake. It was Jed she ended up with, not Ed.

Crime does not pay.

Bill Drafted To Create Board Of Higher Education

9-Member Board Would Be Formed

RALEIGH, Feb. 9 (AP)—Legislation to create a state board of higher education and to arm it with broad authority to coordinate the work of state-supported colleges and the University was introduced in the House today.

The bill, which has the backing of Gov. Hodges, would create a new nine-member board recommended by a commission which made a study of the state's institutions of higher education. It would be charged with the duty of eliminating duplications and overlapping in the work of the schools and make plans for the future of higher education in the state.

Reps. Barker, O'Hanlon, Rodenbough and E. K. Powe of Durham introduced the bill to create the higher education board.

Barker said the measure carries out recommendations of the higher education study commission which said in a report made public two weeks ago that the state is not getting the results from its institutions of higher education which "might be expected from the amount of money being spent."

The board would be named by the governor with the approval of both houses of the Legislature. It would have offices in Raleigh headed by an executive secretary

The board would have authority to (1) "determine the general functions and activities" of the institutions, (2) determine what type of degrees they shall grant, (3) recommend budgets for the institutions to the Advisory Budget, (4) "prescribe uniform practices and policies to be followed by the institutions, and (5) make plans "for the development of a system of higher education" and the "power to require such institutions to conform to such plans."

Other developments in a busy legislative day include:

(1) A bill by Rep. B. T. Falls Jr., of Cleveland to levy a 3 per cent tax on the gross receipts received by hotels, inns, tourist courts and the like for furnishing lodgings to transient guests—those staying 90 days or less. Falls said the State Department of Tax Research estimated his bill would enrich the state's coffers by about one million dollars a year.

(2) Six bills to carry out recommendations of a commission which studied reorganization of state government. The gills would abolish some minor state boards which have been inactive and would create a state library to take over functions now performed by both the State Library and the State Library Commission.

ONE OUT OF SIX

It's true, according to the National Safety Council, that in one out of six fatal accidents last year the weather was rainy, snowy or foggy. But, says the North Carolina Department of Motor Vehicles the blame for those mishaps rightfully belongs to the drivers and pedestrians involved. Our behavior in traffic must be governed by the changing weather and road conditions.

Congress Gets Measure To Null Supreme Court Power

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9. (AP)—Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D-SC) today introduced a bill to remove the power of the U. S. Supreme Court and U. S. courts of appeal to pass on school cases involving segregation

The bill, he explained, is an outgrowth of last year's Supreme Court decision banning segregation in public schools.

Johnston said the measure he was offering had been requested by South Carolina's new governor, George Bell Timmerman Jr., and that state's legislature.

He said some might question its constitutionality, but that he himself was satisfied on the point.

The bill states the appellate jurisdiction of the two high courts shall not apply to state laws or regulations "relating in any manner to the establishment, maintenance or operation of the public schools" except where the cases involve 'substantial inequality of physical facilities and other tangible factors."

Johnston told a reporter the bill could not touch the decision on the segregation cases already made by the high court, but could prevent any future rulings relating to it.

The bill would leave jurisdiction in most school cases in the federal district courts. Johnston said federal district judges come from the states where they serve, and are familiar with local problems.

The 1954 segregation decision "shows without reservation that the nine Supreme Court justices in Washington have very little knowledge of the schools in South Carolina," Johnston said.

"The future of the American schools is much too vital to the welfare of each individual American as well as to the nation as a whole to allow any court other than one located in the same section of the nation to pass on matters involving our schools."

The senator serves on the Senate Judiciary Committee to which the bill was referred. He said introduction of the matter should lead to a study of the problem by that group.

Murrow's Popular TV Show On WUNC-TV

By BIFF ROBERTS

WUNC-TV, channel 4, the University of North Carolina's educational station which opened last month, has adapted the show to television and is presenting the series twice each weekday and once a day on Saturday and Sunday.

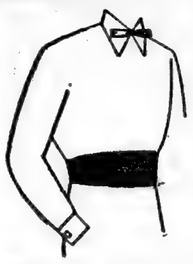
Each presentation is a five minute talk by some of the world's greatest statesmen, educators, poets, writers and athletes alike during which time the speaker tells of his beliefs—thus the title, "This I Believe."

On weekdays the program is presented as part of "Almanac," the station's "variety" program which is on the air from 6:30 to 7:30 at night. Every night of the week, on Saturdays and Sundays as well as weekdays, another in the series is shown immediately before sign-off time at 10 o'clock. None of the programs are repeated.

Although "This I Believe" is a copyrighted radio show, Murrow and his associates bent over backwards when Richard Burdick, executive producer of WUNC-TV, asked for permission to produce the series. Murrow helped supply pictures of the speakers which are used, along with other slides for the video part of the production.

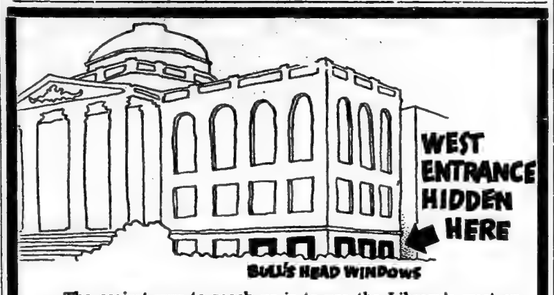
EDWARD R. MURROW
. . . on WUNC-TV now

"Almanac," the program on which "This I Believe" appears, with Bill O'Sullivan the moderating role as "Poor Richard," presents a little bit of everything—from news to weather to historical quizzing.



"The show all started,' says Burdick, "when we found that we had so many 'spot' programs—those lasting only five minutes or so.

"Rather than spread them all through the programming schedule, we decided to collect them together into one program. 'Almanac' was the result."



"Almanac" will present the news, weather and sports news everyday along with such other productions as "Take A Word," a discussion of the history and significance of words in the English language, and "Mystery Program" which seeks the identification of famous historical characters through various clues.

Burdick refers to "Almanac" as a "family program." For that reason the show is on the air from 6:30 to 7:30 every weekday night, a time when most families are together for their television viewing.

'3 Cuts Hard On Faculty-Student Relations'

Creasy Against Rule

"The matter of cuts allowed in class should be an issue between student and instructor, moreover, the faculty are in extreme discord regarding the proposal and I fear that a permanent loss of respect may result from the new system," spoke Tom Creasy, student body president in his semesterly State of the Campus address last night.

He proceeded then to elaborate on the various issues in this order:

(1) "There has been a good deal of work throughout the year devoted to the foreign exchange program. Under capable leadership we have made arrangements to pay all the expenses of a student from Gottinger University in Germany. I hope that this will be the beginning of a long and successful program."

(2) "With the help of University officials, we have set aside the weekend of the Georgia game next year as Caravan Weekend and there will be no classes. I hope that this is to be an annual affair.

(3) "Our high school honor system program has progressed by leaps and bounds. The committee will have visited 60 schools by the end of the year.

(4) "The Student Entertainment Committee has done an excellent job. In order to provide top rate entertainment next year, I have already appointed next year's group."

(5) "The new orientation chairman is Bert Vrazy. Last year's group under Rollie Tillman did a good job and I am sure that this year will mean good work also."

(6) "The committee to study the possibilities to establish a collective health insurance plan for the campus made the final selection of the company to deal with today. Beginning next fall, students will have available a cheap and fine insurance plan.

(7) "The Consolidated University Student Council has approved a resolution which will give, if final approval is granted by university officials, 25% of the funds in profit from campus stores to the Student Governments of the institutions."

(8) "I am sorry that I had to veto the band bill, but we just didn't have the money."

(9) "I reported to the Faculty Council that I opposed the limit of class cuts below 20%. I will fight to that end."

(10) "I am also opposed to any raise in room rents. I have appointed a committe to study the situation and I am confident that something can be worked out."

Schoolmen Say Tests Will Remain Confidential

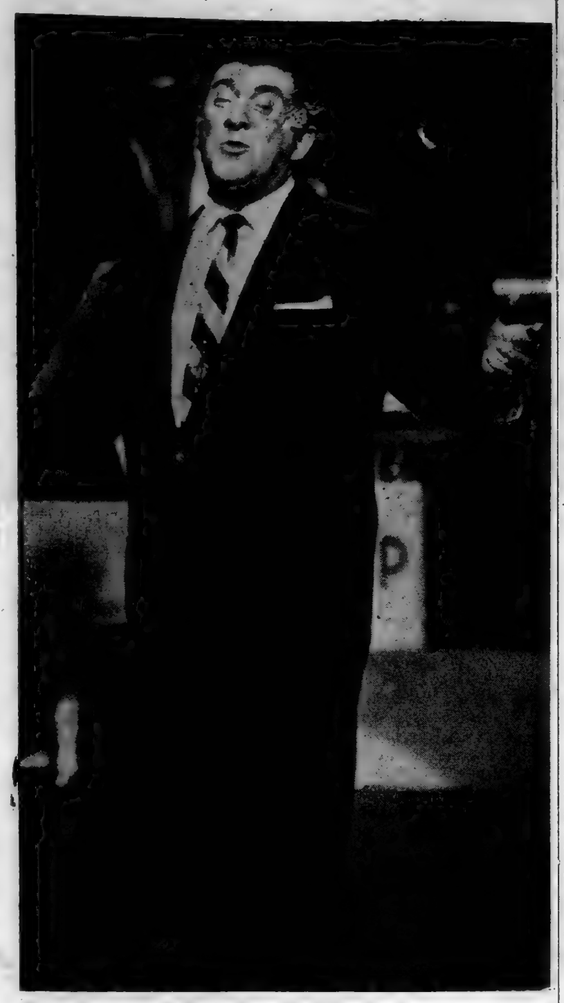
In an official statement on the recent intelligence tests controversy the Chapel Hill School Board yesterday re-emphasized its stand that results of these tests are to be kept confidential and that they cannot be evaluated purely by a pupil's grade on them.

School Board Chairman Carl Smith issued the 500-word statement as an outgrowth of a story in The Durham Herald last week in which reporter Hank Messick quoted Schools Superintendent C. W. Davis as saying that Negro students, on the basis of recent intelligence tests given in the local schools, were mentally unfit to meet standards set for white students here.

The detailed explanatory statement was drawn up by Mr. Smith as chairman of the board, board member Gordon Blackwell and Superintendent Davis, on authorization of the entire board during a closed session Monday evening. Members of the board privately expressed extreme displeasure over the writing of the original story on the matter. However the official statement noted in particular reference to it simply that "the recent unfortunate publicity concerning the results of tests administered last spring should in no way alter the Board's policy in respect to use of special tests."

REPEAT POLICY

"To repeat, that policy has been: (1) To regard such test results as helpful diagnostic aids and not as statistical data for research purposes, and (2) to keep the results of such tests confidential in the permanent record of individual pupils."



In preliminary paragraphs of its statement the board reviewed why it gave the tests ("in keeping with sound educational methods") and noted that the results were placed in the permanent record of each pupil, to be available to principals and teachers of the pupil.

The purpose of the tests, according to the board statement, "is primarily for individual pupil diagnosis by the teachers," and the standing policy has been that the results of special tests were not to be given in terms of scores. "The scores must be carefully evaluated and understood. They cannot be assumed to be exact measures secured under carefully controlled conditions. Misunderstanding and misuse of scores, even by well-meaning parents, could be harmful to the educational and emotional development of the children."

UNIVERSITY COOPERATES

The tests have generally been given in cooperation with the University faculty, the board stated, but aren't given by trained psychologists under carefully controlled conditions. Thus the results obtained "may not be reliable for use in comparing groups of pupils in different classes and different schools."

The particular tests in question, the board statement declared, was given in the spring of 1954 before the May 17 integration decision by the Supreme Court, "and with absolutely no relation to the question of school integration."

Pastor's Cats Here Tonight

Tony Pastor, above, will be on hand tonight in Woollen Gym for the Carolina Germans Club's annual winter dance. The dance will be held from 9 p.m. until 1 a.m. Earl Bostic and orchestra will play tomorrow at a concert from 4 to 6 p. m.

Armstrong, Bostic And Pastor Beating Cupid

By ELEANOR SAUNDERS

The King of Hearts won't have a ghost of a chance over the weekend because he will be completely over shadowed by the visiting Kings of Music. Cupid, with his gold-tipped arrows and honorable intentions, will be forced into the wild and woolly background by golden tones from the magical instruments of Satchmo, Earl Bostic and Tony Pastor.

Once again, Germans have descended upon the entirely prepared Carolina student body, and as the weekend approaches, more and more elaborate parties to quiet, recuperative get-togethers have been offered as possible solutions from the how-not-to-settle-down dilemma. Regardless of the how's and where's of the weekend activities, it's a safe bet that fine party spirit will be riding high.

At one extreme, the Phi Gams are laying plans for a suppressed desire party, to be held tomorrow night at the schoolhouse. And St. As, also at the bizarre end of the social ladder, will celebrate with a tramp party tomorrow night at Crabtree Creek.

SPEs, after last weekend's extensive pledge activities, will spend a quiet weekend at home to recuperate and refinance.

A cabin party is slated for Phi Delts this weekend; and, PiKA will celebrate at a Smith's lake party, complete with combo, tomorrow night.

Many of the Pi Kappa Phi brothers will be leaving town this weekend to attend wedding festivities in Washington. At the Pi Lam house plans are being made for a cabin party Saturday night at Turnage's.

Sigma Nus have adopted a new phrase: "When in Chapel Hill, do as the Romans do." They will have a Roman toga party tomorrow night at Hoenig's cabin, followed by a breakfast at the house.

Returning alumni were welcomed home last weekend by Zeta Beta Taus. Brothers will party at the house this weekend.

ATOs, more than proud of their sell-out for the Louis Armstrong concert, will be celebrating in rare form this weekend. They plan for a party Saturday night at the Robin Hood in Durham.

At the Beta house, rumor claims that a party will be held at the Elbow Room tonight. And Phi Kaps will take advantage of the hospitality of brother Bobby Jones for a party Saturday night at his home in Durham.

Kappa Sigmas' Pledges Feted With Weekend

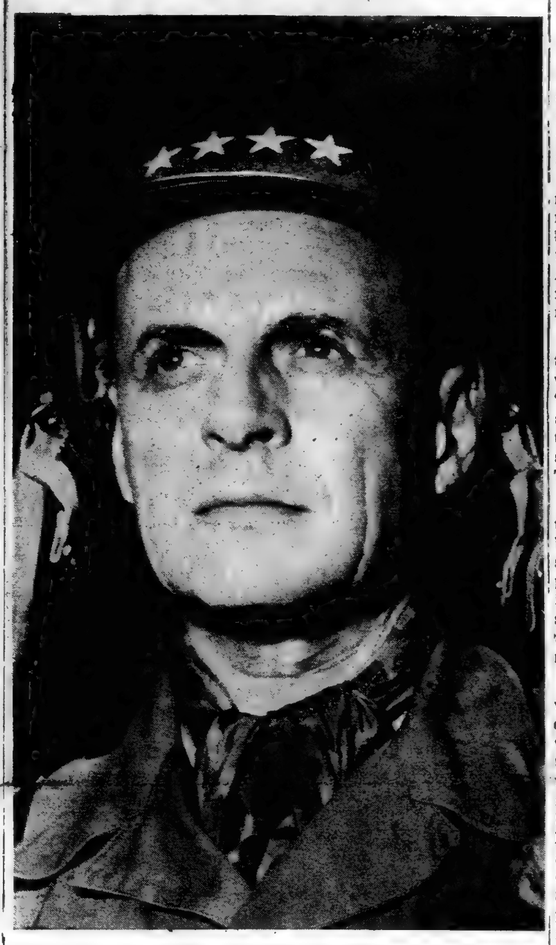
Festivities got underway Friday night with a banquet dinner at the chapter house. An elaborate meal was served buffet style to members and their dates.

A katinka party at the schoolhouse on the Greensboro Highway was featured on Friday night's program. Music was furnished by Frank Eatmon and his combo.

The Ranch House was the scene for Saturday afternoon's champagne party. And the weekend was climaxed by a formal concert held Saturday night at the Carolina Hotel in Raleigh. Pledges and their dates were presented at this time. Favors of jewelry boxes, bearing the Greek letters Kappa Sigma, were given to dates.

Breakfast was served late Saturday night at the fraternity house. And the finale of the weekend was a Sunday morning and afternoon party held at the house.



Wellman Speaks On Murders

The stories of 10 famous and infamous murders which cover an eventful period in North Carolina history were related by Manly Wade Wellman, Chapel Hill author, speaking at a Bull's Head Bookshop tea held Wednesday afternoon in the Library.

Wellman has incorporated these cases in his latest book, Dead and Gone, recently published by the UNC Press.

"There's more to a murder and the trial of a murderer than simple sensation," Wellman said, "I often wonder if they don't cast a very clear light on the time and place and people—help us know how much folks lived and died and why."

Wellman described such cases, covering the era 1808-1914, as those of Ida Ball Warren, "the veritable Lady Macbeth of Forsyth County;" Kenneth Beasley, kidnapped near the Lost Colony site; the arsenic poisoner of old Fayetteville, and the first woman hanged in the state.

Gen. Matthew Ridgway Slated Here Feb. 24

Both General Ridgeway's talk at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall, and the following reception in the Lounge of Graham Memorial are open. He will also be honored at a tea at the home of University President Gordon Gray, and at a banquet in the Pine Room of the Carolina Inn.

General Ridgeway was promoted to the rank of general in May, 1951, following his appointment, in April of that year, as supreme commander for the Allied Powers, commander-in-chief of the United Nations Command in the Far East and commander-in-chief of the Far East Command in Japan, succeeding Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

In May 1952, he was named to succeed Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, as supreme commander Allied Powers, Europe, and in August, 1953 he was appointed chief of staff, United States Army.

General Ridgeway has received decorations from 16 foreign nations, including France's Legion of Honor, Grand Cross and Croix de Guerre with Palm, and Russia's Order of the Red Banner.

The subject of his speech has not been announced.

Sugar: $37 Per Bowl

RALEIGH, Feb. 10. (AP) A bowl of sugar cost William Nowell, 26, Negro, about $37 yesterday.

Nowell was hurrying out of a Raleigh cafe when he brushed against Policeman John Baker and a sugar bowl fell out of his overcoat pocket.

Charged with Larceny, Nowell was given a six-month road term, suspended on payment of $25 and costs. He was also charged with resisting arrest.

Vote Dorms Coke Money

By NEIL BASS

The student Legislature in a session made long by much debate last night passed a resolution favoring the establishments of two class free Saturdays per semester. The measure was sponsored by the Student Party and was passed without an opposing vote.

In other action of the meeting, the group also passed unanimously a resolution "urging the return of 50% of the profits made by vending machines in the dormitories to the dorm's social fund. At the present, the dormitories receive none of these profits. This measure was also SP introduced.

By far the most debated issue of the evening, however, was a University Party introduced bill which "called for the establishment of a bi-partisan board for the selection of candidates for the editorships of The Daily Tar Heel and The Yackety Yack."

Jack Stevens (UP) who brought the measure before the solons to begin with started the debate by saying that "because of the importance of The Daily Tar Heel in influencing student opinion, it should be removed from all political affiliation, and not be committed to any particular segment."

This led into a discussion of "just what is the place of politics on the college and university campus anyway?" David Reid (SP) attempted to answer this question by saying that "student government needs more politicians to advise them because the parties represent the larger segment of the student body and thus prevent the concentration of the rule in the hands of a few. Such groups cannot be denied the privilege of nominating candidates for a position of importance like the editorships."

After a lengthy analysis, the body thumbed down the creation of a bi-partisan board by a vote of 1-13.

Other legislation of the evening, which was passed or turned down with little or no debate, involved the passage of an SP proposed resolution which "asked for the establishment of a centrally located infirmary on campus with the authority to issue class cut excuses."

The Legislature, operating "in a low financial status," shunned the passage of any measures which involved the appropriation of money. In turn, they voted down a SP sponsored bill "to give money so that The Daily Tar Heel might resume operation on a six day week," and a UP bill to "give $150 to the Faculty Evaluation Committee."

Colleges To Debate Red China

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., Feb. 10. (AP)—The question of whether the United States should extend diplomatic recognition to Red China, a subject banned for student discussion at several schools, will be debated at William and Mary tomorrow and Saturday by teams from 26 colleges and universities.

The guest speaker and moderator of a special forum program Friday evening will be Sir Percy Claude Spender, Australian ambassador to the United States. His appearance will be one of the highlights of the two-day Marthall-Wythe debate tournament, expected to attract 150 participants.

Each team will meet six other teams in the debate with the results for determining the winner to be worked out by a point system.

UN Should Tie World Together —Dr. Frank

The present emergency responsibility of the United Nations is "to help hold together the divided world without either appeasement of tyranny and aggression or drifting into a third world war with its annihilation of people and civilization, east and west," Dr. Frank P. Graham told the fifth annual Conference of World Affairs here yesterday afternoon.

Former president of UNC and former U. S. Senator, Dr. Graham, who is now special mediator for the United Nations, talked on America's role in the UN organization.

The day's sessions, which began early yesterday morning, drew representatives of civic and educational organizations, women's clubs and religious groups from all parts of North Carolina.

Pointing out that the UN was made necessary by the evolution of states in the last several thousand years, Dr. Graham said that "thermonuclear power in the hands of man in the absolute national state is the greatest threat which has come to the existence of man since the glaciers' extinguished much of the life of the planet.

'IMPERATIVE NEED'

"The imperative need is to help make more likely that the human species in the providence of God will not now perish from the earth under the impact of forces more lethal than the long gone, roaming dynosaurs and the once devastating glaciad power," he continued. "This makes necessary for his survival the UN working for the mastery of this power and its humane use by the better nature of man."

The UN, he said, was also made necessary by the commercial, industrial and atomic revolutions of the last 100 years.

"In the last 500 years, he said, "three revolutions have accelerated the development of the interdependence of peoples, east and west."

May Day Fete Will Be Ended By WRC Vote

"The Women's Residence Council, acting upon the recommendation of the Leadership Council, voted at a regular meeting, to discontinue the annual May Day program," said Miss Ruth Jones, chairman of the Women's Residence Council, yesterday.

"The Leadership Council, consisting of the chairman of Honor Council, Residence Council, Orientation, president of the Independent Women's Council, WAA, Panhellenic and YW," said Miss Jones, "meets to discuss common problems from their organizations and on the campus. The recommendation came after a thorough investigation of various possibilities or a May Day program," she said.

The Fruit Of Liberal Learning

It has been our contention, in a discussion of the Business School curriculum that the quality of one's citizenship far transcends in importance the manner in which he seeks to earn his daily bread. We believe the B.A. School's requirement that its students take no more than six liberal arts courses during their last two years of school to be leaning too far the other way.

President Henry W. Wriston of Brown University, in a recent speech at Philadelphia, said it well:

> Effective democracy requires a citizenry who will promote our distinctive way of life. Every competent American should have not only training in skills and a growing mastery over nature; in addition he ought to cultivate even more intensively the disciplines of the humanities and the social studies.
> Vocational overconcentration cuts down the awareness of other values. The wider one makes his area of informed interest, the more competent he is to meet any problem with courage and clarity of mind. If we are to have peace for example, it will come from the application of knowledge, not alone the specialist's knowledge, but that humane, that wise, that temperate outlook which is the fruit of liberal learning. . . .

Those who regard such things as frills, as merely decorations, as something with which to while away an hour are impoverishing themselves. Students have no more right to squander their intellectual inheritance than to throw money into the streets.

We do not, of course, accuse the Business School's faculty and administration of regarding liberal education as a frill. It is true that the school is among the most liberal arts-minded of the nation's business schools, some of which introduce students to business courses immediately upon entrance as freshmen. And many business professors are themselves concerned with the extreme specialization of juniors and seniors in Carolina's Business School.

But that being true does not erase the other truth: that no business student in the University is exposed as a student to the heights of liberal education that alone can produce the fully cultivated and responsible citizen.

No Frat Is An Island—II

Carolina fraternities and sororities, long looked upon askance by many for their lack of interest in the campus community and the world outside the "house," are mending some bridges.

Item: Last night's Louis Armstrong concert: the sponsoring ATO's could have made a killing for their own pockets from the full house. But all the proceeds went to the polio drive.

Item: The recent Delta Delta Delta spaghetti supper, an annual affair to raise money for University scholarships.

Item: The upcoming Panhellenic workshop, whose keynote speaker has taken as a topic: "Your Responsibility to Your Campus —Chapter and National."

This movement toward group action probably had its beginnings several years ago when campus fraternities transformed their "Hell Week" to "Greek Week"—a mass operation "Help" on community projects.

Campus fraternities and sororities are in for commendation. Their potentiality for good knows no bounds and we hope they'll show even more willingness to accept their fledgling role of altruists to the campus.

Cuff Notes On Spaghetti, Campaigning

Louis Kraar

HEARING THAT campus politicians gather at such august affairs as spaghetti suppers, I found myself paying a buck to a smiling Tri-Delt last Sunday night and strolling through the crowded green living room.

My notes for the affair seem to run like this:

"Greeted few Delta Delta Delta's who smiled and said they were glad we had come. Imagined they were since it meant another dollar.

"People, boys in coats and ties and girls in sweaters and other things, sitting, standing, leaning all over everything. Big fire in fireplace, but no one noticed it.

"Passed Ed McCurry on way to get food. Asked him if prospective candidates come to such events. He murmured something about not knowing, then spent ten minutes pointing to his khaki pants. Said he was only one in the whole plush place with khaki pants.

"Noticed McCurry's tie was one of few in the place with pattern instead of stripes though. Didn't say anything because he insisted that he wasn't running for anything and was hungry.

"Ate two plates of spaghetti and drank coffee. Both good, but hard to balance on knee while sitting in living room.

"Said good-bye to pleasant Tri-Delt at door counting money. On way down street remembered seeing patterned tie like McCurry's in Milton's window. Stopped and studied window on way to Dairy Bar."

THE EDITORSHIP of the Yackety-Yack has become an increasingly technical job.

Thinkers in the field have argued for years that the editor of the annual shouldn't be elected. Latest, and perhaps the best, plan for picking a Yackety-Yack editor that I've heard about came up the other day.

Bob Colbert and present co-editor Cornell Wright suggested a selection board to pick editor of the annual. The board would be composed of the current Yack editor, two of the elected Publication Board members, and the chairman of the two campus political parties.

This plan seems to merit some discussion and thought, which is why it is presented here.

KEMP'S RECORD Shop vibrated to the progressive strains of Shearing, Kenton, and Brubeck the other afternoon as students crowded in to listen to jazz.

A distinguished-looking gentleman with a beard and cane walked in, looking about at the students listening to music. A salesman approached him, the expectant hope of selling an expensive classical album showing in his eyes.

"Can I help you " the salesman asked as salesmen always do.

"Yes, do you have a record called . . uh, I think it's called 'Shake, Rattle, and Roll?' "

The salesman promptly filled the request, and the distinguished old gentleman strolled from the shop.

'Ever Listen To The Radio, Comrade?'

Honors For Creative Writers

By Sue Quinn

By next September, if all goes well, Carolina students who are pretty good at creative writing may have a chance to get more hours credit for the writing they do during the school year, have their work criticized by a board of professors, and graduate with honors in the field.

This is all part of a program being formulated by a "Creative Writing Steering Committee," which was appointed last fall by Chancellor Robert B. House. The committee, composed of faculty representatives from the English, Dramatic Arts and Radio, Television and Motion Pictures departments, has been meeting since December, and expects to complete its work by the end of the month.

The plan will then have to be approved by the three departments, the Division of the Humanities and the Board of the College of Arts and Sciences before it can go into effect. Dr. Clifford P. Lyons of the English department, chairman of the committee, seems to think its chances are good. The idea behind the program is to give help and encouragement to undergraduate students who are interested in creative writing, and who can show some proof of ability along this line.

Seniors and possibly juniors who are judged eligible by the board administering the program would then enter an honors course, in which they would take creative writing courses under at least two different professors. These classes, and the special honors course which would be taken in the student's senior year, could be counted as allied courses, but would not take the place of required major subjects.

'Quarterly' Comment

Instead of taking the written and oral examinations required for honors in other fields, participants in this program would meet regularly with the board to discuss their work, and would submit a writing project.

If members of the Carolina Quarterly staff are at all typical of the creative writers on campus, the plan should be successful among students. As Jim Dunn, editor of the magazine, puts it finding time to do any writing while you're in school. This way, students could get credit for the time they put in.

As usual, there are some questions that immediately come to mind. For instance, would students in the program be likely to register for too many writing courses (there are six, at the present time), and exclude other courses which they ought to have to give them a broad background? Dr. Lyons believes this can be avoided by limiting the number of such courses the student can get credit for in any one semester.

DR. CLIFFORD P. LYONS
. . . chairman of Creating Writing Steering Committee

Do Sales Count?

Another problem involves the standards by which work should be judged. Should a student have to sell his stuff before he can receive honors? There seems to be two schools of thought. One is that the public's taste is no valid criterion, and some of the greatest writers weren't even read until after they died.

The other theory is that, no matter how well you write, your material isn't going to do anyone any good until it's bought and printed, and posthumous fame isn't common enough to count on.

There are good arguments for both points of view. Maybe any student participating in the program could write with the understanding that he must try to sell work, but the committee could still have the final say-so in conferring the honors, even if all the aspiring writer got for his masterpiece was a pile of rejection slips. Certainly whether or not a student can sell his material shouldn't have anything to do with his getting hours credit for the courses.

More Creation

Finally the question of whether or not such a program is really needed arises. Some students feel that a person can get as many writing courses as he wants anyway, that the criticism of a board wouldn't be any more helpful than the comments of the class and one or two professors that are available in a course such as English 54; that the person who earns honors doesn't really have much anyway, except something new to brag about.

But faculty conferences in the three departments concerned (where the whole idea was born) have suggested that a faculty committee can give the students more thorough and more constructive criticism than can a classroom full of students.

So, barring snags along the route, there will soon be a stimulus to students to do more than their normal quota of creative writing. It should bring results in the form of better student writing and more of it.

Quote, Unquote

State's Wrong & Washington

Every time we hear somebody say:

"There's too much Federal government . . . We favor state's right . . . Why don't we get Washington out of our affairs and end big government . . ."

. . . We want to ask a question. The question is:

"Will you help foot the bill—pay more local taxes in order to cut federal taxes?"

Let's face it.

The Federal government all too often takes over "states rights" because of "state's wrong," as Adlai Stevenson said. What he meant is that where a job needs to be done and if the people of the state refuse to do it ,sooner or later the government moves into the picture and puts its finger in the dyke. That's something to remember.—Mexico (Missouri) Evening Ledger.

Reaction Piece

Mundy To The Defense Of B. A. School

David Mundy

I am gradually developing an allergy to criticism of the School of Business Administration. It isn't that I have any high regard for the school or any great interest in it: Its mere physical proximity to the chemistry "department" even gives me a pain when I think of it. The "anti-liberal education" charge is nonsensical and rapidly becoming even more trite.

Those of the faculty who most frequently levy the charge are, interestingly enough, in the "humanities" and social sciences, or more specifically, in the history and English departments. (Most of the students who take courses in those departments are there for a very simple reason: they are required to take English and history courses. Only two economics and B.A. courses, Ec. 31, 32, are required of any considerable number of under graduates.)

Were the B.A. school to trim its staff a bit, and surrender one of its buildings to an above department, they could fairly effectively bring a halt to such criticisms.

The students from whom the criticisms come present an even more interesting case. Almost to a soul they are majors in one of the humanities, English and history. Desirous of being some sort of educational arbiters, they vow that the B.A. majors are being harmed by being allowed so few free electives. ((They do have to satisfy all the G.C. requirements.)

These poor little B.A. majors, they say, should have a well-rounded education. They should take a large number of courses in the humanities, in the English and history departments. But how many B.A. courses do the liberal arts majors take? Very few if any.

You will find even fewer of these B.A.-critic majors taking courses in the sciences, once they fulfill their requirements for laboratory courses. They grimace at the thought, say, of a calculus course. Their intellectual capabilities ended with college algebra. Their interests lie in literature or history, just as the B.A. majors' interests lie in the field of business Administration.

According to the theory, every graduate should have a well-rounded education. The usual critics protest that the B.A. majors are getting no such education; but their criterion of such an education is taking courses in their own departments, English and history. Such a criterion is not only invalid; when pressed it is dishonest. As "Farmer Bob" Marlon puts it, "I'm real ma-ad."

It is of course desirous that that everyone receive a fairly well-rounded education. There should be a large number of humanities, yes, and perhaps even some B.A. courses, in every one's schedule.

And these semi-pro liberal arts critics of the B.A. school should be given some courses to "round out" their liberal education, a full dosage of math, chemistry, and physics. Professional crip-hunters that they are, they wouldn't be around next fall. Most of them wouldn't even last a semester.

The same goes to those critics of what they term the "creeping anti-intellectual trend." Never before in history have the members of the academic world, the intellectuals, been better treated by the society that supports them. Not since the days of Greece have they been allowed to play such a role in politics and government.

Yet from a multitude of sources there comes a continuous stream of dire worrries about the anti-intellectual trend. If you bother to identify the sources, you will find that they are the proponents of the all-powerful state. Under the label of "liberalism" they propose more government in business, and in private will even advocate nationalization of such industries as public utilities. The anti-intellectuals, of course, are those who oppose the self-labeled liberals on any issue.

I deplored his lack of good English, I said.

"I have ever deplored it, also," The Horse shrugged, "but whatcha gonna do when they ain't no good English?"

Why, this was terrible. What sort of view was this. Not that I had meant the English people . . .

"Well, I do mean them." The Horse said, his port forelege continuing to twitch spasmodically. "And it is an Erse view of the English. Wasn't it Poor Fitz-Richard who said, 'Shure an' the only good Englishman is a dead Englishman'? Or was that McRichard No . . . 't was O'Richard, Oi moind me histhory, th' same which I l'arned at the knee o' me great-great-grandmither."

Well, The Horse hadn't learned much.

"Aye, it is thrue," The Horse continued in his best Seventeenth of Ireland broguing. "But bad cess to yez if ye blame great-great-grandmither McChree, she who had but wan knee bein' she lost the other foightin' th' Black an' Tans. Slantha vallege!"

The English might hear what his views were!

"Bedad, an' inny Redcoat is welcome to me Erse view on request," The Horst stated firmly. "I'll meet wid dem, come one, come all, innyplace, mark an exciption: Boyne's Waters. Poor O'Richard said, 'Kape your mouth wet an' your feet dry.' Slantha wallage!"

Well, I thought The Horse had something: I knew his mouth would never be damped around water, at all, and doubtless he had scores of forebears yet bleaching their bones under Boyne's Waters!

"Leave us change the subject," The Horse lost interest and brogue with an alacrity which would have amazed Shakespearian professors. "Mr. Wump may have a mild fever. He has been working too hard."

Well, where was Wump, The Horse's specialist on the low-level view of things? And what had Wump to do with The Horse's twitching left foreleg?

"He's under it," The Horse stated, lifting the twitching hoof to reveal his Amphibian colleague all but squashed flat. "See? Looks bad, huh?"

And why not, with The Horse standing on him!

"I'm taking his pulse," The Horse stated loftily. "Mr. Wump, being a cold-blooded creature, very sensibly restricts his heart-beats to a minimal amount calculated to sustain life, otherwise he would freeze to death. Catch? The faster his heart beats, the more cold blood he pumps through his body, and the colder he gets. Right now, his pulse rate is—six!"

What was normal, for Wump.

"I don't know, because he is not a normal Frog," The Horse shrugged. "Not at all normal."

Well then, why take his pulse at all? Besides, was standing on him s.o.p. in Frog Therapy?

"It is one of the unnecessary services I render, being a modern Horse and wishing to keep abreast of Cultoor and Civilization," The Horse said. "And if standing on a Frog is not standard operational procedure, it should be: just where or how would you take a Frog's pulse? He has no wrist."

How about a leg, then,

"And bruise it, and lessen his market-value as Frog's Legs!" The Horse snapped. "Little wonder you are small potatoes in the money-marts, Roger me bhoy: you just haven't acquired the civilized and cultoored knack of using your friends to the utmost."

Ohhh! Well, how did The Horse plan to use Mr. Neckley, the Giraffe, when he no longer was useful, then he no longer could wag his tale of High-Level Views?

"I am somewhat of a fringe-case in the Necking world," The Horse understated magnificently, "but as some philosopher said—shure an' was it Poor McRichard now?—'You're never to old to yearn.' Had I been blessed with even a modicum of self-interest, I would have done away with Wump and Neckley long ago, when I was in my youth. Man, oh, man!"

How was this?

"Well, can you imagine, if I had possessed myself of my camelopard friend's necking possibilities, and Wump's springy legs to get me around and about? I'd make Rubirosa look like Fauntleroy at an Epworth League ice-cream saturnalia!"

Yes; but—

"Aw, you and your Yes-buts!" The Horse sighed. "Can't a guy dream? Must you always be so sobmatic?"

*Sob*matic? Didn't he mean, *dog*matic?

"Being s.o.b.-matic, since you have to have things spelled out for you," The Horse chittered (I hate him when he chitters-), "is being dogmatic in Spades. Really can you imagine me with Neckley's neck and Wump's legs? Can you?"

Not without recourse to Old Stepfather, or something equally deadly, I couldn't! Further, just how Don Juanish would he be, with Wump's cold blood and with Neckley's rubber lips? Ugh!

"True, true." The Horse mused, his eight-balls of eyes clicking thoughtfully. "What would people say of me as I passed? I mean, what would they say that would make me think they were speaking of me, of the real me?"

Well . . . they'd perhaps perhaps comment on that horse's tail that was going by? And what was Horsie doing outside Caldwell-X?

"Oh, I'm showing the lads and lasses how to set up the scenery for Show Boat, our forthcoming Musical to be held in March in Memorial Hall in loudly. "We are the first collegiate group to be allowed to stage the famous Broadway and Hollywood smash-hit, and to make certain it is sensational, I have been requested to supervise the important part of scene-building. I—"

"Wump!" said Mr. Wump, as The Horse clattered into the Scene Shop.

The Amphibian's low-level view of things was unimpaired, for all of The Horse. . .

Carolina Win Tonight Will Put ACC Into Four-Way Tie

Virginia Foe In Greensboro

Rosenbluth-Wilkinson Scoring Duel In Order

A victory for the Tar Heels would match the 8-2 conference shared by Maryland, Duke and North Carolina State.

The four teams are battling for the No. 1 seeding going into the conference tournament opening at Raleigh three weeks from today.

Frank McGuire's Tar Heels held the top rung for more than two weeks following their 84-80 upset of North Carolina State Jan. 18. Duke knocked North Carolina out of first place with a 9-68 drubbing last Friday night, allowing idle Maryland to slip into first place.

Then, North Carolina State, on a three-game century mark rampage came along to tie Maryland by trimming Clemson and Virginia. Duke muscled into a three-way tie for the lead last night by shading Wake Forest, 75-73.

Although the tournament decides the conference title, there is much to be gained by finishing first over the regular season. The No. 1 team draws the last place club in the tournament's first round. Clemson, loser of all 10 conference games, appears doomed to that fate.

MARYLAND HAS games remaining with North Carolina, Clemson, North Carolina State and Wake Forest.

North Carolina State has South Carolina, Duke, Maryland and North Carolina still ahead.

Virginia, with a 90.1 average is the third highest scoring team in the nation. Buzz Wilkinson of he Cavaliers is among the scoring leaders with a 32-point average in 20 games. Sophomore Len Rosenbluth of North Carolina has a 25.9 mark for 15 games. A month ago at Chapel Hill the Tar Heels -- t Virginia, 96-87, with Wilkinson outscoring Rosenbluth by one point, 33-32.

The return game will be played in the new 4,000-seat Greensboro Senior High gymnasium.

Dayton and Duquesne To Play In NIT Meet

NEW YORK, Feb. 10 (AP)—The University of Dayton today accepted a bid to play in the National Basketball Tournament and the NIT gained its second nationally-ranked team in the annual tussle for post-season drawing cards. The tourney starts March 12.

Walter T. McLaughlin, chairman of the NIT basketball committee, said Dayton had joined Duquesne in the New York tourney rather than wait for a possible "at large" invitation to the NCAA championships. Duquesne, ranked fourth in the weekly Associated Press poll chose the NIT yesterday.

45 TOPS

The highest number of points ever scored by an individual in one basketball game for the University of North Carolina is 45. That total was run up by George Glamack in 1941 against Clemson 26, and is a junior.

Gymnasts Try To Better .500 Mark Against Tech

Coach Bill Meade's gymnastics team will try and push its record over the .500 mark when it meets Georgia Tech Saturday at 2 o'clock. This will be the first meeting of these teams this season.

Wins over the Navy Pier Branch of the University of Illinois and the Jersey City, N. J., Recreation Department evened the losses the team suffered against Army and Navy.

UNC Grapplers In Blacksburg Against VPI

Undefeated Gobblers Are Heavy Favorites

By AL KORSCHUN

Co-Captains Pete McGehee and Miles Gregory will lead the UNC varsity wrestling team into action against powerful VPI tonight in Blacksburg as the Tar Heels swing into the last half of their 10-match schedule.

The grapplers' season hasn't been too successful so far this season as they have yet to win a match, but an upset over VPI would send the Tar Heel stock soaring. The Gobblers will prove a formidable opponent as they are undefeated this season and are strong contenders for the Southern Conference wrestling crown.

In their last match the Virginians defeated West Virginia, the defending conference champion and will go into tonight's match heavily favored to keep their perfect record unmarred.

COACH SAM BARNES concluded the weekly tryouts Thursday and the Tar Heel lineup will be essentially the same as the one that took the mat against Virginia last week except for several changes in the lower weights. Don Gray and Hugh Cowan will replace Bob Thornton and Bob Wagner at the 123 and 130 pound classes, respectively, and Wagner will move up to the 137 lb. class replacing Broadus Thompson, who is out of the lineup with a shoulder injury.

In a preliminary match, the UNC freshmen, seeking their second win in three starts, will tackle the VPI frosh. Coach Harry Pawlik's team has steadily improved since its victory over Washington & Lee and have a very good chance to make it two in a row with a win over the Tech frosh.

The starting varsity lineup for Carolina:

123 lb.—Don Gray
130 lb.—Hugh Cowan
137 lb.—Bob Wagner
147 lb.—Pete McGehee
157 lb.—Arthur Gregory
167 lb.—Hugh Barwick
177 lb.—Miles Gregory
HW.—Roger Dalehite

Top Prep Swimmers Here Feb. 19

Some of the south's finest high school and prep school swimming talent will be on hand here February 19 for the ninth annual Southern Interscholastic Swimming Championships in Bowman-Gray Pool.

More than 125 individual entries are expected, officials have said. Last year, the event attracted 17 teams, including over 100 performers. An increase in the number of teams and participants is expected this year, according to North Carolina swim coach Dick Jamerson, who is directing the event.

Jamerson has already mailed entry blanks, but has announced that schools seeking additional information should contact him either by letter or phone at Woollen Gym. February 17 is the deadline for entries.

AT LEAST three individual champs will be back to defend record-making marks established last year. Included in the high school list are Greensboro's Schiffman, who went the 200-yard freestyle in the record-breaking time of 2:10 last year, and Plymale of Norfolk's Granby, who finished the 100-yard breaststroke in 1:07 for a new record in the one-day affair last year.

Staunton Military Academy's Zwicker, winner of the 150-yard individual medley in the record time of 1:39 last year, is also expected to compete in this year's championships.

Greensboro's winning freestyle relay team and Granby's victorious medley team are also expected to compete, though slightly different personnel.

Stauton and Granby will be the defending team champs in the respective prep and high school divisions.

Floyd's Average Drops But Still Leads All

NEW YORK, Feb. 10 (AP)—Although his average dropped for the third straight week, Furman's Darrell Floyd still leads the nation's major college basketball sharp-shooters with a mark of 35.2 points a game.

The Furman junior popped in 77 points in three games during the week ending Feb 5. Once around the 40 point mark, Floyd had a 37.1 point average through games of Jan. 29. His average thus dropped 1.9 in the week.

Andrews 8-5 Favorite To Trim Johnson In Video Bout Tonight

NEW YORK, Feb. 10. (AP)—Paul Andrews, who lost to Harold Johnson at Chicago last St. Patrick's Day, is an 8-5 favorite to reverse the score tomorrow night when the two high-ranking light heavyweight contenders meet again at Madison Square Garden.

The 10-round match will be carried on network radio and television (NBC) starting at 10 p.m. EST.

Since they met almost a year ago, Andrews has been on the upgrade while Johnson has slipped since he was knocked out by Archie Moore in a title fight. The latest rankings show Andrews No. 2 and Johnson No. 3 as challengers to Moore, behind Joey Maxim.

Andrews, a 25-year-old protege of Joe Louis, now calls Buffalo, N. Y. his home. He floored Johnson at Chicago last year with a left hook in the first round. Johnson scrambled up and closed strong to win the votes of two officials. The third official called it a draw.

OFF THEIR comparative showings against Boardwalk Billy Smith Andrews has all the better of it. Smith knocked out Johnson in two rounds Oct. 8 and Andrews flattened Smith in six rounds at Miami Dec. 29, his most recent start.

After the Moore and Smith disasters, Johnson took a two-month vacation before he whipped Julio Mederos and Marty Marshall in a pair of December bouts. He handled Marshall, knockout conqueror of Bob Satterfield, with ease.

Andrews is almost a novice in comparison with Johnson for he's been fighting pro only since 1950 and has a 29-4 record for 33 bounts. Johnson, active since 1946, has won 50 of 57 starts.

Manager Ray New explains the importance of good service to one of his assistants

His "individual training" paid off

When Ray New—Business Administration, Buffalo, '51—started with New York Telephone Company, he never suspected his work would face him with problems of this sort—

"My job as business office manager is to see that the customer gets the best possible service. One of my assignments took me into a section of Manhattan that had a large Puerto Rican population.

"Frequently our people would get somebody on the line who couldn't speak a word of English. So I saw to it that each of my representatives learned a few standard Spanish phrases—enough to get somebody to the telephone who could speak English.

"There are no two days alike in this work, with new problems coming up all the time. The best part of it is that the training program here is tailor-made to the job. First you get a general background in the business, then you go into what I call 'individual training.' That's where your own special abilities are developed and you're encouraged to think out new ways to solve everyday problems—like the one I just described.

"Right now I'm Business Manager in charge of an office doing $250,000 worth of business a month."

You'll find these things true of college men, like Ray New, who go into telephone work. They've been well trained, they enjoy their present jobs, and they're headed for responsibilities and greater rewards. If you'd be interested in a similar opportunity with a Bell telephone operating company, or with Sandia Corporation, Bell Telephone Laboratories or Western Electric, see your Placement Officer for full details.

IDC Passes 'Brigadoons' Plans For Dance

"The programs within the individual dormitories have been very successful throughout the fall semester," said Manning Muntzing, Interdormitory Council president in his semesterly address given at a session held Tuesday night. The meeting also witnessed the passing of the "Brigadoons," dance-per-semester plan sponsored by the dormitory men.

Muntzing also commended the chairmen of the various IDC committees for what he called "doing a tremendous job. The council has come a long way in these past months, but we all can do more than we have and certainly should do more in the coming semester," he went on to say.

The talk was concluded with Muntzing calling for a long range program that would "benefit not only the people already here, but the students who will be coming to Carolina three, four and five years from now."

The proposal which calls for the "contracting of a name band to play for a dance every semester sponsored by the dormitory men but open to anyone on campus," was passed again by the council in a revised form. The "Brigadoons" idea was killed by virue of five dormiories refusing to subscribe to by-laws which called for "the unanimous consent of all dorms," in its first try.

The chairman of the committee working on the proposal said that "the parts that certain dorms objected to the first time have been changed." The by-laws have also beenchanged to read that the "proposal can pass if dormitories representing 80 percent of the entire residents vote for it instead of the original idea uninimity.

The council also approved at its two hours session the by-laws which will create "a summer school IDC." The council will be a continuation of the regular IDC but will consist of "only dorm presidents" instead of the present arrangement which is based on an "IDC representative and the president of each dorm to be on the group."

Coats with the Carolina seal on them, which the Council is to sponsor, have arived on campus, it was announced at the meeting.

Councilors also brought out that "certain of the merchants of Chapel Hill have complained to University officials about the sale."

A resolution which reiterated "the stand of the Executive Committee of the Trustees of the Consolidated University" in 1948, calling for the "elimination of canvassing, soliciting and selling in the dormitories" was also passed by the group. Raymond Taylor, president of Old West Dormitory introduced the resolution for what he called "the disturbing of dorm residents by insurance salesmen and the like."

SAYS FEDERALIST CHIEF:

'Disarmament' For Peace

"Secure world peace will come only when we provide world law and achieve universal disarmament," Max Stanley of Muscatine, Iowa, national president of the World Federalists, told a group of faculty members and students Wednesday at a luncheon meeting in Lenoir Hall.

The first step toward achieving the goal, Stanley said, is to strengthen the United Nations by amending its present charter to provide for world law and disarmament.

"The question of holding a review conference comes on the agenda of the United Nations this fall," he added, "and this gives us a chance to show that we have a substitute for the present arms race. We cannot say now that the Soviet Union would fail to ratify the proposed changes.

"War has outlived its usefulness and has become so costly and so destructive that even preparation for war impedes the social progress of the world," he said. "Too many people do not seem to realize that we are living in the atomic age and not in the 1890's. American citizens are trying to slough off the hydrogen bomb and guided missiles. Business men are talking about getting taxes lowered without recognizing the fact that the greatest part of our national budget goes to pay for wars, past, present and future. We cannot improve the moral and spiritual status of man, the economic situation or our efforts to create a better society as long as we are engaged in the arms race."

Stanley said that there are two ways suggested to eliminate war. "The slower, evolutionary approach is to keep up our armed strength for 50 years or so and to develop a world community through greater understanding of other people, hoping to slide into a peaceful world sometime in the future. The other method, and the one advocated by the United World Federalists," said Stanley, "is to provide world law and world disarmament simultaneously by amending the charter of the United Nations. This is not a panacea for the ills of the world but a prerequisite for world peace."

viewed in the perspctive of millions of years or recent decades," Dr. Graham added.

"It is fortunate for man that the coimng of the UN coincided with the coming of atomic power into the turbulent stream of history now loaded with either doom or hope for the people on this planet.

THE FREE WORLD

"Approximately three quarters of a billion people live in what is called 'the free world,' and approximately three quarter billion live in 'the totalitarian world,' and approximately the same number more live in the world between," Dr. Graham said. "It is more suicidal for one group to attempt to blast the other group off this planet, for there is no other planet to which they can now conveniently repair.

"Coexistence, or living together on the same planet as the alternative to a third world war, must in the clear words of the World Council of Churches be without submission to, engulfment by or appeasement of totalitarian tyranny.

"But anti-totalitarianism, anti-fascism and anti-communism are not enough," he added. "Too often they are an overcoating of political chauvinism, economic exploitation and spiritual and social escape. The present crisis of freedom and peace in the world makes imperative more democratic programs for a freer and fairer America as a partner and leader of the free people and a more dynamic international program for a more effective United Nations as the chief hope of freedom and peace in the world," concluded Dr. Graham.

Solon Hits Douglas' Statement

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11 (AP)—The House heard a ringing defense of the Southland yesterday as Rep. Rivers (D-SC) shouted a denunciation of actor Paul Douglas.

Rivers said the Philadelphia-born Douglas, star of a traveling troupe of the "Caine Mutiny Court-Martial", had throught "intemperate" and "untrue" words about the South causing the disbanding of the company at Greensboro, N.C.

At that time 70 percent of the company's appearances remained "to take place in the land of fable, song, tradition, hospitality and prosperity, known as the South," the white-haired Rivers said in a House speech.

Rivers did not specify what Douglas remarks he was objecting to, except to say that "Douglas was schooled in his dislike for my land and my people."

He said the remaining performances of the road show has been cancelled because Southerners, offended by Douglas' statements were staying away from the box office.

Rain, Rain, Rain

The deluge which drenched the campus yesterday morning and early afternoon was caused by a "strong cold front" which passed over the area, said a spokesman of the U. S. Weather Bureau at the Raleigh-Durham Airport yesterday.

Today, the spokesman said, a cold air mass will cover the area, with an expected high 30.

Who's Got Pan-American Key? Profs & Students, Says Grad

By ED MYERS

Alfredo Casey, a former UNC student from Argentina and presently touring American universities, says "Students, professors and writers, not 'big-shot' businessmen, hold the key to better North - American-South American relationship."

Casey, who is here under the auspices of the U. S. State Department, will speak to the Cosmopolitan Club tomorrow afternoon at 4:30. The illustrated lecture on Argentina is one of many he is to give while touring the United States.

Casey, who was a grant-student here in 1949 and '50, believes that there should be more such grants given to foreign students.

"Argentina is, at present, planning a program for giving aid to American students who wish to study there," said the lawyer-writer. "Much misunderstanding has developed between the two nations (U. S. and Argentina), mainly because of big businessmen interested only in matters of material wealth.

"Argentina, the largest country in South America, and The United States, largest in North America, are countries which must understand and get along with one another. And the only way to do this effectively is by exchanging students and culture-minded people so that by talking to those who we don't fully understand, many problems will be cleared up."

CULTURE IS PROMINENT

Casey pointed out that culture and aesthetics hold a prominent position in the life of the average Argentinian.

"Argentina is the only South American country that stands up and demands equality," he said.

"There are three main principles upon which we base our future: political sovereignty, social justice and economic independence."

One of Casey's jobs (which he prefers to call a hobby) is translating American literature for Spanish-speaking South Americans. His first book was Two centuries of American Literature. The second, History of American Literature, will be on the market in May.

Many Argentine students have studied here and University professors have studied and lectured in Argentina. Gilbert Chase, a graduate of UNC, is presently cultural attache for the US Embassy in Argentina.

"How can 'big shots' see things down there when they are blind in their own country?" Casey asked.

"Send students."

Can Cut All He Wants:

Gray's Back In Class; Just Auditing, Though

By ARCHER NEAL

Gordon Gray has gone back to the classroom. After 25 years the president of the University has again assumed the role of a student.

Gray says he "finds it interesting and stimulating. I'm pleased to have this kind of association with students."

The UNC president majored in psychology as an undergraduate, and was an honor student. A lot of things have happened in the science since he was a student; and, as he puts it, "There are a lot of facts that I have forgotten." Gray has been asked by the Psychology Department to consider teaching a course next year, and it is in connection with this request that he's auditing the course.

It's probably a good thing that he's just auditing the course, for with the new cut system in effect he might be "dropped from the course with a grade of 'F'" for missing classes. Needless to say, the president is a busy man, and can't be in class every time it meets. He's already missed a couple of them.

Gray sits unobtrusively at the back of the classroom, quietly taking notes. It's a rather large class, and the students don't seem to take any notice of him. Instructor Garmezy says "he's a good listener," and finds it enjoyable to have him in class. The professor says "His presence makes me improve the quality of my jokes, if not the quantity," and added, "he laughs at them. I find it stimuating to have him. Every instructor ought to have a college president in his class."

One of Gray's fellow students remarked that he was "rather surprised to have him in the class," and was interested to know of Gray's interest in psychology. Another summed it up simply, "We all gotta get an education somehow."

Marionettes Coming

The Chapel Hill Concert Series will present the Salzburg Marionettes here Tuesday in Memorial Hall.

Jim Wallace, director of Graham Memorial and secretary of the Chapel Hill Concert Series, announced yesterday that regular $2 student tickets will be sold at the special rate of $1 for the marionette concert.

"The Salzburg Marionette Theatre will be an excellent performance, definitely something different," according to Wallace. "This is a rare opportunity to see such a famous group."

MARIONETTE

. . . 'Concert at Schoenbrunn'

A concert for the children, "Snow White and The Seven Dwarfs", will be given at 3:30 in the afternoon.

The Salzburg show has its own stage, which is 27 feet wide, 17 feet deep and 15 feet high. The marionettes themselves are three and on half feet tall. All are hand carved and ". . . possess a personality of their own," said Wallace.

The small Australian village of Salzburg has two claims to fame — it has been long noted as the home of puppetry and is famous as Mozart's birthplace. Tuesday night's program consists of "Bastien, Bastienne," "Ein Kleine Nachtmusik," "Concert in Schoenbrunn" and "Dying Swan (Pavlova)." Mozart's music will be reproduced on high-fidelity equipment.

Violin, too.

The next presentation of the Chapel Hill Concert Series will be pianist Walter Gieseking.

Freshman Arrested

RALEIGH, Feb. 11 (AP)— A North Carolina State College freshman admitted yesterday, police said, that he broke into three stores from which almost $2,000 in cash and merchandise were stolen.

Police reported that all but $11 in cash was recovered from the dormitory room of John Sherrill Proctor Jr., 18, of Charlotte. He was bound over for trial in Wake Superior Court after a preliminary hearing before city court Judge Albert Doub.

GMAB Slates National Bridge Contests Here

The tournament is an annual contest in duplicate contract bridge in which men and women undergraduates in colleges and universities throughout the country compete for national and campus championship titles and trophies.

Trophies are awarded by the National Intercollegiate Bridge Tournament Committee.

Official Says Solons' Bill Would Cause More School Days

Possibility Of Two Free Days, Though

"The provision of two class-free Saturdays each semester may mean that additional days will have to be added to the spring term,' was the reply that Roy Holsten, assistant dean of student affairs, gave yesterday to an inquiry regarding the passage of a resolution by the student Legislature calling for such holidays.

"There is, however, a possibility that the two holidays may be squeezed into the curriculum of the spring semester without involving more days' being added to the total," he added. Holsten was the only University official who could be reached for comment.

Holsten said that he was encouraging the administration's Calendar Committee, the body working on the idea, to "give the proposal serious consideration and to work out the best solution possible. There are numerous factors which figure into the establishment of holidays, including the fact that the University has a certain quota of class days to meet," he said.

Holsten said "the whole matter is simply the fitting of an available date into our calendar."

The original resolution passed by the solons, with no opposition, had an amendment tacked on to it which said that "A report will be given back to the Legislature within two weeks after its passage." In this manner, the group called for quick action on the proposal by the administration.

Roundup: The Debate Came Over DTH Bill

By NEIL BASS

The student Legislature ran through all bills and resolutions in its two and a half hour long assembly Thursday night with no debate, except for the bill which wanted "a bi-partisan board to select candidates for the editorships of The Daily Tar Heel and the Yackety Yack created." This was surprising in that the Student Party rammed through three of the planks out of an original four in its platform without a University Party man cracking a word of dissention.

But when the session got around to voting on the big bill that the UP wanted to see slide through, the bi-partisan board bill, a continous stream of SP and UP solons assumed and left the rostrum for a full hour and a half. During the course of this debate, only one SP man joined sides with the UP on the issue, and that was Tom Lambeth.

As far as the speech that Tom Creasy gave to the group is concerned, the Legislators apparently received it favorably for when the student body president ended, he got a standing ovation.

The address by Creasy hit hard on a subject close to all students, and that is the matter of class cuts. He said "the faculty just isn't together on this idea of three cuts limitation. They, or some of them, have told me that they resent being turned into clerks which must devote a lot of time to keeping up with excuses."

Regarding the decision which decides on the legitimacy of various types of excuses, Creasy said that "the faculty can't decide which are the proper excuses and which are not. They have been haggling for some time on whether or not it is all right to excuse a student to go to a wedding."

One Thing To Love

How long ago was it that the President told us that war was farther away than at any time since the end of World War II? Well, it seems like a very long time ago; there doesn't seem to be much doubt that war is nearer today than at any time since the end of World War II and the President, if he could speak candidly on that, would probably agree.

This should be chalked up, it seems to us, not to any grim hypocrisy in Washington, but, to a 90-mile-an-hour world, where things that are perfectly true in December become pipe dreams by February.

Those who purport to know see the gathering storm at every hand. The Alsops are glummer than ever. The Washington mood, if the pundits are reporting it accurately, is a sort of mass breath-holding.

All this may pass away—for a while. These crises have arisen many times in the past few years; they have always been followed by a momentary relaxation, and then another crisis.

Rare is the college student who does not see—however faint—the handwriting on the wall. If war comes, and the chances do not seem heavily against it, we will fight in it.

The remedy for a future great war was presented on the campus Thursday by Dr. Frank Graham.

"The imperative need," he said, "is to help make more likely that the human species in the providence of God will not now perish from the earth under the impact of forces more lethal than the long gone, roaming dynosaurs and the once-devastating glacial power. This makes necessary for his survial the United Nations, working for the mastery of power and its humane use by the better nature of man."

Few will dispute the logic or importance of that. But all men are not made of the great stuff of a Dr. Frank Graham. And if the better nature of man does not triumph through the United Nations, what then? What preparation can be made for the uncertainties, for life under ominous clouds? What is now the direction of the pursuit of happiness? What can one do in a time when plowshares are being beaten into swords?

We can, for one thing, look to ourselves; to be sure we are not actuated by the evils we may be called upon to fight in war against—the hatred, fear and envy that so often become a part of us without our conscious consent. We call the totalitarianism we oppose "primitive." But there are, as Elmer Davis has pointed out, white primitives. We must not belong to that rank.

We must look to other men, too. There remains no hope if we continue to see Burmese or Egyptians or Indians — or Negro Americans—as somehow interior; or if we continue to make nonconformity with the accepted creed a mark of disaffection.

The advice of Dr. Robert Oppenheimer is at hand: "To find one thing to love"—meaning, for us, to find beauty in February's rain; to find truth in the classroom; to live life as well as we know how. An old path, a tree, a line of verse, a person, a leaf —all qualify as things to love. And this we can do, in the darkest of years.

Soul & Wallet Searching At Card Counters

Louis Kraar

SINCE MONDAY is the day when you're supposed to wear your heart in the mailbox of the one you care for, I made an expedition to the chief dispensaries of Valentines in Chapel Hill to study those hearts of lace and paper.

Miss Pearl Cole, keeper of the Valentine counter in Rose's, smiled over a pile of the two-for-five cents variety cards and allowed that Valentines were going as fast as ever.

She had on display everything from the eight-for-a-nickel comic cards to extravagant 25-cent ones, and the crowd of pensive young faces about the counter studied the stock with the care of African slave buyers.

DOWN THE street at Ledbetter-Pickard Stationary Store there were more people than boxes of stationary, and each person seemed to have a Valentine at his price. They ranged from a nickel to $2.50.

The expensive jobs — costing more than a steak in town—are full of fancy quilting, sequins, and everything else. A $2.50 Valentine, it seems to me, is an awfully expensive way of saying something that has been said many times. At least, that's what I thought at first.

Later, I pushed my way through the crowd around the card counter and caught a glimpse at one of the more inexpensive cards. It said: "You've got long wavy hair. Don't you wish it grew on your head." A picture of an ape-like male appeared on the inside. The price: 15 cents.

★

PERHAPS THE most literary Valentines in town are at the Intimate Bookshop though, where you can find cards to ask your girlfriend all the old questions in every language except Sanskrit.

Besides at the Intimate there are books of poetry for the occasion.

How about the books of love poetry? I wanted to know whether many of those were sold.

"The books are always bought last. We sell a lot of them okay, but it takes a little more soul searching before they buy a book," he explained.

And with that, I stepped out on Franklin Street to give my soul (and wallet) a thorough searching.

★

THIS STORY about the University's stand before the Joint Appropriations Committee in Raleigh this week has drifted back to the Hill:

Senator Clarence Stone asked University officials why there was only one North Carolinian among the 25 graduate students at State College working on Ph. D's.

Comptroller Billy Carmichael replied, "Knowing Mr. Stone's interest in tobacco, just let me say this. The basic work that conquered the dread diseases of tobacco, Granville wilt and blackshank, was done at State College by out-of-state students."

Stone said. "That's enough," and he sat down.

MAYBE AN award should be given to the givers of sorority coffee breaks for such realism. The so-called coffee breaks always are scheduled for at least two hours—the average length of most such recesses on campus.

★

MANNING MUNTZING bet a Kappa Delta a nickel the first question she would be asked by a newcomer to the sorority's coffee break was: "Where are you from?" He won.

There must be a better way to start conversations among persons who haven't met before, but the old standby — "Where are you from?"—lingers like old coffee cups left in the Y Court.

Khrushchev & The New Soviet Policy

Stewart Alsop

WASHINGTON — The ruling faction in the Kremlin has concluded that even a partial settlement with the West is out of the question; and hot war is probable is not inevitable. Soviet policy is henceforth to be based on these grim assumptions.

This is the majority view of those best qualified to interpret the meaning of the events surrounding the downfall of Georgi M. Malenkov. There is all sorts of evidence to support this interpretation.

In the first place, there is the nature of the difference between Malenkov and N. S. Khrushchev. Their well-advertised disagreement about the degree of emphasis on arms production has been only a symptom of a more basic difference—whether war with the West or "co-existence," and a long period of stalemate, is more probable.

There is no doubt where each has stood on this question. There was, for example, the extremely belligerent speech which Khrushchev made in Prague, in June last year. When this speech was published in the Soviet press, much of its belligerent tone was carefully edited out—this at a time, of course, when Malenkov was in the ascendant.

Or there was the conversation not too long ago between Malenkov, Khrushchev, and the Moscow diplomatic representative of one of the neutral powers. Khrushchev announced in his blunt way that if the Paris agreement to rearm Germany were ratified, then "there was nothing more to be done." The clear implication was that there was no hope of avoiding war if West Germany were rearmed. But Malenkov hastily interposed that there was always hope, that "there was always something to be done," to avoid war.

Crucial Difference

This is not to suggest that Malenkov was in any sense a pacific idealist or a friend of the West. The difference is one of emphasis. But this difference could be crucial. How crucial is suggested by the decision sharply to increase arms spending, announced some days before Malenkov's downfall was made public, but when Khrushchev was certainly already in the driver's seat.

This decision is compared by the experts to Josef Stalin's decision to rearm at all costs after Munich—it is a sign that the Kremlin now, as then, expects war. Similarly, Molotov's tough speech after Malenkov's resignation is compared to Stalin's speech immediately after the end of the war, in which Stalin clearly forshadowed the "hard" policy towards the Soviet Union's war-time allies.

For what consolation it may be worth, this switch to a "hard" policy based on the expectation of war comes as no great surprise to the American government. As noted in this space early last January. "When Ambassadbr Charles E. Bohlen returned to Moscow recently, he reported back that the sense of tension had measurably increased there in the few days since he had left."

Thereafter, Bohlen reported that the "sense of tension" derived from a power struggle which was centered on a basic policy disagreement; and that Khrushchev, the proponent of a tough policy, appeared to be winning this struggle. The evidence suggests that the power struggle began to come to a head in the late autumn, soon after Khrushchev returned from his trip to Communist China.

This trip, it is believed, convinced Khrushchev that the Chinese Communists were prepared to take major risks of war. On his return, he took the position that the Soviet Union had no alternative but to support China if it came to a showdown, and that the Russian arms industry must therefore be greatly expanded at all costs.

How Hard Is 'Hard'?

Khrushchev had been fighting for more arms production and a tougher policy even before he left, of course; but the beginnings of the China crisis strengthened his hand. So did the German rearmament pact. The army finally sided with Khrushchev, it is believed, and the issue was actually settled in his favor in late December or early January.

The triumph of Khrushchev does not mean that the Kremlin is getting ready to start a world war tomorrow. On the contrary, there is solid evidence that, even since Khrushchev became the real power in the Kremlin, Moscow has tried to restrain Peking from going too far in the Formosa crisis. Bohlen and other experts are still convinced that the Kremlin does not want a war.

Yet all-out rearmament, and a "hard" policy based on the assumption that war is probable, obviously in itself increases the danger of war. According to one experienced policy-maker, what has happened in Moscow has multiplied the risk of world war by a factor of about four. In the circumstances it is strange—but true—that there is apparently no disposition whatsoever in the administration to have a hard new look at the state of our own defenses.

'Glad To Help — Here's Some Swimming Lessons'

Ike's 'Condolences' To Education

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON.—President Eisenhower's school aid program does not represent a serious attempt to deal with the national emergency in education.

It is little more than a letter of condolence to the localities and school authorities which are struggling against an enormous and growing shortage of classrooms.

The President's own Commissioner of Education, Samuel Brownell, has placed the current need at 370,000 classrooms. Federal cost estimates indicate that the job well done would cost more than $12 billions.

The President has suggested only $200 million in direct aid over three years which is about $65 million a year. Even if all went well and exactly as planned, it would build only a few thousand of the missing classrooms.

School authorities are equally skeptical about the proposed plans to help school districts and states. Twenty states are said to have constitutional debt limits which will prevent any new borrowing. In both Maine and Wisconsin, the courts have declared school construction authorities unconstitutional.

The school experts say also that it would be at least a year before any results would show from the Eisenhower plan. Meanwhile, school enrollment is going up at a rate of more than a million a year. This year it is 30.8 million—up 22 percent, over 1950.

The President's philosophical approach provokes as much gloom in school circles as his practical suggestions. As they see it he has dealt with what they regard as the gravest internal crisis in this democracy in the spirit of a Lady Bountiful who restricts her gifts to the worthy poor.

The reference is to the President's restriction of outright grants to communities too poor to build their own schools. There will be no states and few communities willing to take the pauper's oath on this or any other proposition. Actually many of the wealthiest states which spend proportionately the largest share of their revenues on education are among the most hard-pressed.

Alcibiades (Knowland) Versus Nicias (Ike): An Old Story

Gerald Johnson

In The New Republic

There are times when a superficial knowledge of history is unpleasant.

For instance, when Senator Knowland and some military men call for action to eliminate the menace of Red China the student who has read Grote sudders.

They sound too much like Alcibiades urging the Athenians to undertake the expendition against Syracuse.

In 416 B.C. Athens had Sparta pretty nearly where the United States has Germany in 1955 A.D. and the Dwight Eisenhower of the time, a General Nicias, said, "Hold it!" His idea was that Athens' great need was rest and recuperation after 15 years of war.

But while Sparta was down, Syracuse, like Red China today, remained undefeated. Syracuse was on the perimeter of the Athenian sphere of influence, as China is on the perimeter of ours; but Alcibiades was as certain that the task remained unfinished while the Syracusan power remained unbroken as Senator Knowland is that we cannot rest as long as Red China stands.....

It is the end of the ancient story that makes the student shiver. Athens learned the hard way that military power is effective in inverse ratio to the distance at which it is applied... The Athenian armies landed, bogged down and were frittered away; so when a revised Sparta rose again Athens had no power and was crushed.

One hopes, of course, that the common sense of the American people will revolt before the process has been carried too far. The Greeks were intelligent enough to recognize and to name the threat that hung over them —they called it hubris, that pride of power that ruins men and nations by undermining their judgment in moments of triumph.

Most Americans are still sane enough not to advocate imposing our rule upon the world by the power of the sword, but Senator Knowland does not hesitate to talk of using economic power for that purpose; and pride of power is still hubris, even when it is based on the power of the dollar.

Party Line

(A new series, to run weekly on this page. The University Party has been invited to submit a similar column, setting forth UP policies. The following column was written by the Student Party Advisory Board.—Editor.)

With this article begins a series of columns about what the Student Party is doing in relation to student government. It is our purpose to let you know what goes on in our party meetings, caucusses, committees, and the advisory board through the pages of the Tar Heel. That is to say we have thrown open the windows of the smoke-filled rooms in Graham Memorial.

If you are one of those people who take two or three hours off daily to read all the columns in the DTH it would be well to keep the following things in mind:

1. These columns will try not to use the words "honestly" "sincerely" "Carolina Way of Life" to the point of becoming mushy. We promise to call a spade a spade.

2 The SP is a political party. We shall try to justify our existence. We do not pretend to be unbiased.

3 The Student Party is a group of people on this campus from Cobb to the Chi Psi Lodge, from the ADPi house to Victory Village, who have taken the responsibility to perpetuate the high standard of student government here. Carolina probably has the best student government organization in the country. We have had two presidents of the National Student Association.

4. Student government is a highly technical and integrated business. Our people know it backwards and forwards and spend most of their time working and thinking about what can be done. The word politician is generally not looked up to on this campus. But we wonder what would happen if you woke up some morning to find no Daily Tar Heel, no Yack, no free student entertainment, no student dances, no Graham Memorial, no dormitory activities, no organized fraternity rushing program, no outstanding speakers. This is what "those politicians" are concerned with. We'll tell you more about it next week.

Shorty—In The Count's Clothing

Tom Spain

Shorty Rogers is courting the Count, and the Count doesn't seem to mind. A not so new Victor album featuring the big Shorty Rogers band has been called one of the best jazz buys of the year.

Count Basie has made an everlasting mark on big-band jazz ever since the thirties when JUMPIN' AT THE WOODSIDE was the popular rage. Now as with Ellington, Miller, Waller, and other all-time winners, Basie and his style, compositions and rhythm are being copied, imitated and capitalized on.

But not unjustly so. In his new album, Shorty Rogers, the West Coast's leading big band arranger and organizer, has declared that he is not trying to "carve" the Count, but to court him.

The imitation is good; almost too good for it to be anyone but Count Basie. And indeed, it is a tribute to the Basie band as the music is interpreted strictly in the once inimitable Basie fashion. Rogers has written three of the numbers included, and these too, are not out of the Basie line.

It may seem odd that a band made up of West Coasters such as Rogers, Maynard Ferguson, Zoot Sims, Bud Shank, Milt Bernhardt, and Shelly Mann could even come close to presenting an authentic all-Basie program. But one almost has to look to the label to determine the artist.

The opening side, which is a later-years tune by Eddie Durham and Edgar Battle, no longer with the Basie group, is called TOPSY. Though the number never became a big time favorite, the California group proves its initial goal in presenting Basie music as the Count would have told them. The easy swing, a controlled and muted trumpet section, and a blue tint, all in front of a quiet and subtle piano, prove Rogers intentions as noble.

BASIE EYES, one of Rogers compositions, might be an opening number in a present-day Basie concert. It swings with the same easy beat that accompanies so many of the Count arrangements.

IT'S SAND, MAN follows quickly and swings equally as much. A notable brush-cymbal performance by Shelly Mann indicates that the former Kentonite is not quite the eccentric that so many think him to be.

And the opening piano solo by Marty Paich on DOGGIN' AROUND is still further indication that the strict progressive characteristics of Rogers did not color the original material too much. Here they are allowed to cut loose on the frantic beat of DOGGIN AROUND, and though the modern element comes through with a roar, it is no more modern than the interpretation gives it.

Of course, SHORTY COURTS THE COUNT is a swinging album. Anything with the slightest indication of Basie influence is bound to swing in the best fashion. And that is precisely what the Rogers band has done with their tribute. Most any devotee of the smiling old Count should prize the Rogers interpretations (or imitations).

Norman Granz, who might be called the Flo Zeigfield of modern jazz, has been releasing a great many records under the Norgran label, which now includes Clef and Mercury jazz artists.

As with his jazz at the Philharmonic ventures all the converted bopsters and young progressives are recording for the new label. Stan Getz, Oscar Peterson, Charlie Parker, Lionel Hampton, and even Count Basie are only a few of the favorites, and their recordings appear in all three speeds.

One really fine single that's been featured on some of the better jazz radio shows is the Getz version of BODY AND SOUL. The quiet mood ballad is subject to no wild experimenting as are so many of the former Granz releases.

Getz gives the ballad a warm and delicate treatment, due in part to the pleasant piano accompaniment by Duke Jordan. Getz's blue and sentimental interpretations have made him a favorite of many who normally would not lean in the direction of modern jazz. A similar rendition is given to the almost forgotten, YOU TURNED THE TABLES ON ME.

Quite different, we find the two sides by Charlie Parker, who, though he has been known to play in a rather tender mood, often reaches for the realms not yet reached by many jazz fans. It might be said that Parker does with his saxaphone just what Oscar Peterson does with his righ hand on the piano. KIM is a high speed swing side which does show the highly talented Parker as one of jazzdom's best artists.

One of the most exciting wizards of any instrument is Lionel Hampton, and Norgran has released the Hampton theme and classic, FLYIN' HOME backed up with IT'S A BLUE WORLD. Here is a small group made up of big people. Oscar Peterson, Buddy Rich and Ray Brown form the remainder of the quartet, and their performance is worthy of their reputations.

The signs of centralization of the scattered jazz recording companies may be in sight. The little-known labels hold contracts with many of the best jazz artists and it is only on occasions that they are heard, due to the limited distribution and promotion means. Norgran has a fine line-up, and if the records continue to sell as they have been, the artists will share glory with the performers of the bigtime companies.

Vayda's 25 Leads UNC; Rosenbluth Sinks 22

Loss Drops Tar Heels To 4th Place In ACC

GREENSBORO, Feb. 11 (AP)—Virginia's Buzz Wilkinson pumped in 34 points here tonight as the Cavaliers upset favored North Carolina 98-73 in an Atlantic Coast Conference basketball game. His night's work put Wilkinson over the 2,000-point career mark.

The defeat halted North Carolina's attempt to throw the ACC leadership into a four-way tie, dropping the Tar Heels instead a full game behind North Carolina State, Duke and Maryland.

Wilkinson played an outstanding game. He started slow, scoring his first points when the game was nearly 10 minutes old. He had 10 points at the half. With six minutes and 32 seconds remaining, the Cavalier ace scored his 24th point.

The game was close in the early minutes with shooting by Lennie Rosenbluth and Jerry Vayda giving the Tar Heels a 16-8 lead in the first seven minutes.

Virginia then got hot and two free throws by Wilkinson, his first points, tied things at 18-all. Wilkinson followed up with a field goal and the Cavaliers never were headed afterward.

Virginia continued its bombardment of the Tar Heel basket in the second half, shooting to a 23- point lead at one point. Wilkinson and forward Bob McCarty, who got 19 points for the night, led this surge.

The Tar Heels were forced into a full court press and with Vayda hitting free throws and two straight baskets by Tony Radovich, they lowered the margin to 11 points.

Vayda had 25 points to lead the Tar Heels and Rosenbluth followed with 22.

North Carolina now is 7-3 in the conference while Virginia is 4-8.

'Pack Seeks 21st Win Against S. C. Tonight

RALEIGH—N. C State will be after its 136th win under the banner of Coach Everett Case when his Wolfpack faces South Carolina's Gamecocks tonight at the Reynolds Coliseum.

The Wolfpack notched its 20th win on Wednesday night when it outscored William and Mary 126-99 to set a new Atlantic Coast Conference mark. It was the ninth straight time that State had hit the 20 win mark or better under the greying little man from Indiana. Case's nine-year mark is currently 235 wins and 56 losses. His current team has dropped four games.

Carolina's varsity and freshman track teams will meet the Duke varsity and freshmen today at 2:30 in the Tin Can.

ACC Accepts Mail Orders For Second Annual Tourney Monday; Ducats $9 and $6 Per Set

RALEIGH — Thousands of basketball fans all over the Atlantic Coast Conference area will be mailing orders for the 2nd annual Atlantic Coast Conference basketball tournament this weekend as the acceptance of mail orders begins Monday.

Willis R. Casey, assistant athletic director at North Carolina State College, said today that the machinery is ready and waiting to handle the expected 9,000 orders that will probably start to pour into the Coliseum ticket office Monday morning.

Tickets for the three-day playoffs, which will decide the champion of the Atlantic Coast Conference, are priced at $9.00 and $6.00. Orders should be addressed to the Coliseum Box Office, Box 5905, Raleigh, N. C. and no order should request more than four tickets. Twenty-five cents should be added to the total cost of each order for insured mailing and handling. Only checks or money orders made payable to the Atlantic Coast Conference will be accepted.

Roger Morris, Tar Heel shot putter who finished second to Duke's Lawshe in the Indoor Games last year, will be out to avenge that setback in this year's meet here on February 26. Lawshe established a new record in topping Morris, who has since shown considerable improvement. The Tar Heel ace threw the 16-pound ball 50 feet, four inches in practice recently, his best in four years here.

CUFF NOTES

By

BERNIE WEISS

"With the help of University officials, we have set aside the weekend of the Georgia game next year as Caravan Weekend and there will be no classes. I hope that this is to be an annual affair."

So said student body President Tom Creasy in his State of the Campus address Thursday night.

This, of course, is a pretty good idea, especially the part about no classes on that particular Saturday.

But I believe that the weekend of the Georgia game is not the proper time for such a thing.

We would do better by making the Caravan Weekend coincide with the Oyster Bowl game in Norfolk, Va. November 5. Carolina meets South Carolina at the Tidewater port in a game sponsored annually by the Khedive Temple of the Shrine for the benefit of crippled children.

This is Norfolk's only college game of the year (although city officials are always trying to line up another) and the city turns out for the contest dressed in its finest clothes.

The pageantry and parade of the Oyster Bowl annually turns out to be the event of the football season in the state. Indeed, the game itself is usually one of the most colorful of the mid-season bowl games throughout the country.

The Oyster Bowl always draws top teams. It is no rinky-dink affair. As an example I will point to last season's Bowl game in which Navy defeated Dook.

The South Carolina-North Carolina rivalry is one which always is at its best on the gridiron. The most exciting Carolina game this past season, in fact, was played between USC and UNC and nobody knew what the final score was going to be until the gun popped to announce that the fray was over. USC scored with two minutes left to take a 19-14 lead, but with just a little more than a minute remaining, the Tar Heels drove for a score to win, 21-19.

Unless this weekend is made a Caravan Weekend, I fear that not too many students will be on hand for the affair.

Diamonders Open Practice Monday At Emerson Field

By BOB DILLARD

The return of UNC baseballers to action, following a short fall practice session, will begin Monday afternoon as the Tar Heels open Spring practice at Emerson Field.

Prior to the opening session, which will consist mostly of conditioning practice for the first few days, there will be a meeting of all varsity candidates in room 304 Woollen gymnasium at 3 o'clock. For those unable to be at the meeting, Coach Walter Rabb announced a similar gathering would take place at the Emerson Field dressing room at 4.

The aforementioned conditioning practice, organization, and the issuing of equipment will take up most of the first few days practice, but with weather co-operation, Coach Rabb hopes to have the candidates on the practice field by the end of the week. Batterymen have all ready taken the field, to enable batting practice to begin as soon as possible.

COACH RABB cites returning lettermen in the following positions; catchers Jack Maultsby and alternate first baseman Will Frye; second baseman Harry Lee Lloyd; and outfielders Ken Keller, Connie Cravitte, Albert Long, Bob Pallar and Glenn Harding. The only returning letterman at pitcher is Tom Maultsby.

Also announced yesterday was the opening of freshman baseball schedule, slated for the 28th of this month, with the first meeting set for 3 o'clock in room 304 Woollen Gym. Pitchers and catchers are slated to report on February 21.

SEX APPEAL IN MOTION

Show Boat, Like Texas, Is Big

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is first in a series of articles dealing with the Carolina Playmakers' present production, Show Boat. Others will follow.

By CHAL SCHLEY

"Too much competition," complained one of 120 talented students who showed up to try out for Show Boat during the afternoon and evening of Thursday, Feb. 3.

She was right. Stage Director Kai Jurgensen, who said that this group offered "the best possibilities for a musical in 14 years," had to select a cast of 60 from the crowd.

Assisting him in the selection were Music Director Wilton Mason and Choreographer Harry Coble.

As the try-outs progressed, most of the hopefuls were sitting out in the audience of Memorial Hall. Conversations were buzzing as they discussed each other's chances. The air turned blue with cigarette smoke. Several people tensely flipped through magazines.

BALLET OR BALI?

Meanwhile, out in the lobby, Harry Coble was putting 20 prospective dancers through a workout. From this group, he had to choose six girls, three males.

For an hour the dancers tried to follow Coble's twisting and sinewy but always smooth routines. Hips and shoulders rolled, because sex appeal in motion is a must for a dancer in a modern production.

Back on the stage, the principals were through, and the chorus was trying out. Scales up, scales down, alone and in groups they sang.

The next evening, only 75 people came back. Dancers were finally chosen, and the chorus was filled. But they were still having trouble with the part of Julie. Competition lasted until Saturday afternoon, so difficult was the choice.

With the casting job finally complete, the various groups separated to practice their own roles. The principals, nine of them, took over the stage, the chorus moved to Hill Hall, and the dancers set to work in the lobby.

ROUTINE SETS IN

After the week-end, everyone's nerves had settled down and the real work began.

On the stage, principals sat around a jug of coffee while they went through the script. Then Kai Jurgenson began on stage directions using a cork model of the set with pins for people.

In one lobby, Harry Coble was listening to a tape recording of the score as played by Wilton Mason. Coble listened, then devised the steps for several bars of music at a time. Fifteen minutes after the steps were made up, the dancers were executing them with a fair degree of precision.

BEHIND THE SCENES

Work had begun on the technical side of the production late in January. James Riley, technical director for the Playmakers, and a stage crew of six volunteers were busy building the eight sets required for the show.

Twelve students taking Dramatic Art 69 serve as a part-time stage crew.

At present, two-thirds of the construction is finished, and the painting hasn't even begun. In two weeks, the set must be up.

On the floor above the scene shop, Mrs. Irene Rains, the costume director, and the students in Dramatic Art 67 have been fitting students ever since the try-outs were over.

Mrs. Rains said that in all productions of this size, extra help must be hired. She is faced with the problem of producing 50 new costumes in two weeks.

Four table-model and two portable sewing machines will be kept busy between now and opening night.

Next week, in this series the several parts of the show will be put together for the first time, and some of the cast will be asked to voice their views.

High School Musicians Arrive For Band Clinic

Approximately 100 high school students were scheduled to arrive here yesterday for the annua East Central Division of the All-State High School Band Clinic which will continue through today.

The young musicians and their schools, are spending the two days here as guests of the music department. Prof. Earl Slocum of the department of music is in charge of the clinic.

The clinic program will consist of practice sessions in which the participants rehearsed numbers to be presented at their concert in Hill Hall tonight at 8 o'clock.

The concert will include "The Liberty Bell March," Sousa; "Komm Susser Tod," Back-Leidzen; "Ballet Parisien," Offenbach-Isaac; "Fantasy on American Sailing Songs," Grundman, and "Skyline Overture," Morrissey.

Petite Musicals

Miss Marjory Still will be presented in a piano recital by the Petites Musicales tomorrow night at 8 o'clock in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial.

Village Board Election Postponed To Feb. 14

By DAN WALLACE

THE ELECTION of new board members, scheduled to end last night, has been extended to Monday night, Feb. 14, by action of the board of directors.

THIS ACTION was taken at a special meeting held Thursday night at the community center. This meeting, which was also attended by all the nominees (two were represented by proxy), was held to reconsider a decision of the board declaring the present election invalid. This decision was based on a constitutional provision, previously overlooked, which held that elections must take place on March 1.

AT THE THURSDAY night meeting, a question was raised by one of the nominees as to whether the Village constitution, which had been revised last year, had been ratified by the Villagers. Since the board had no record of the ratification, it acted upon the unanimous opinion of the nominees to declare the present election valid, and also extended the voting deadline to Monday night.

A BINGO PARTY, sponsored by the former and present members of the Village board, will be held at the community center Saturday, March 12 at 7:30 p. m. Varied prizes will be awarded the winners. Cost will be 10 cents per card or two for 15 cents. The public is invited. Proceeds of the party will be used to purchase teaching materials for the nursery.

THE NEXT regular meeting of the board of directors will be held next Friday night, Feb. 18, at 7:30 in the community center.

Race Relations Sunday To Be Held Locally

A community service of worship in observance of Race Relations Sunday will be held tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Presbyterian Church of Chapel Hill.

The Rev. Vance Barron, Presbyterian Church minister, will be the host minister.

The choir for the service will consist of about 45 children from Chapel Hill under the leadership of Mrs. Oscar Rice. Their selections will include "O Give Thanks" and "Dona Nobis Pacem," the composers of which are unknown and "Allelujah," a hymn of St. Francis of Assisi.

Race Relations Sunday was set aside as an observance by the Federal Council of Churches in 1922 and continues to be observed by the member churches of its successor, the National Council of Churches.

Archaeologist Slated For Lecture Tuesday

Professor Machteld J. Mellink, asistant professor of classical archaeology at Bryn Mawr College, will deliver a public lecture in Carroll Hall Tuesday at 8 p. m.

Sponsored by the North Carolina Society of the Archaeological Institute of America, the lecture will be heard in Room 206, Dr. J. P. Harland, president of the society and professor of archaeology here, announced. The lecture will be illustrated with films, Dr. Harland said.

Miss Mellink was born in Amsterdam, Holland, and received her B. A. at Amsterdam. She acquired her M. A. and Ph. D. at Utrecht and was field assistant in excavation work at Tarsus from 1947-49.

She has attended Princeton University's Institute of Advanced Study and has published several articles on studies in Anatolian Archaeology.

A collection of 100 publications of medieval materials is currently being featured in the Library's main lobby.

Among these publications are the works of 25 University professors covering medieval literature, history, music and art.

Another recently assembled display, showing photographs from George Bernard Shaw's plays, which are now being produced in Czechoslovakia, is located on the second floor with the Archibald Henderson collection of Shaw material.

University officials said in announcing the displays that the UNC Library ranks first among state universities in library materials on medieval culture.

The displays will continue for several weeks.

Deaconettes Hand UNC Coeds First Loss, 61-49

The Wake Forest Deaconettes handed the UNC women's basketball team an opening season loss Thursday afternoon in the women's gymnasium, as they downed the Carolina team, 61-49.

Sharp ball handling by the Wake Forest forwards in the first half, plus an inability on the part of the Carolina coeds to score, enabled the Deaconettes to build up a safe lead before the intermission.

A revamped Carolina team took the floor in the second half, but the Wake Forest lead was too much for the Coeds to overcome and the Deaconettes went from the floor victorious.

High scorer for Carolina was Lou Jones, with 14 points, closely followed by Pat Corbett with 13. Other Carolina scorers were Sara Cashwell and Jackie McCarthy, with seven points each.

Miss House will present a group of American songs by Bacon and Hageman.

Churchill will be heard in the opening group of Italian songs by Legrenzi and Caldara, an aria from Gounod's "Faust" and the concluding group of European folk songs.

Adult Learning 'Essential,' Says Speaker

"An adult education program has been recognized as an essential element in the development of a good elementary and secondary educational system," Dr. Paul Essert, professor of education at Columbia University Teachers College, said Wednesday at a state-wide Adult Education Meeting held here.

Dr. Essert, who heads the Adult Education Association of the United States, explained that his organization is "trying to build in the country's consciousness a feeling of the significance of the continual value of education.

Around 200 leaders in adult education programs from all sections of the state participated in the meeting. Mrs. Frances S. McConnell, Chapel Hill, was program chairman.

School Bill Discussion Continues

RALEIGH, Feb. 11 (AP)—Possibility school districts will be realigned as a result of the Supreme Court decision banning school segregation was raised at a meeting of the Joint Education Committee today.

The committee was told this is the reason a commission which studied school law revision has recommended that continuing contracts for school teachers be eliminated and they be given one-year contracts only.

L. Stacy Weaver, commission secretary and superintendent of Durham city schools, explained to the joint committee school law revisions proposed by the commission after its study of the school law.

Weaver said the commission was "not a segregation study group," but the "segregation decision of the Supreme Court necessarily was reflected in our work."

Should new school districts be established Weaver continued, school boards in the new districts would be the teacher employing agencies. If the law on continuing contracts were not changed, teachers would have contracts with the old boards.

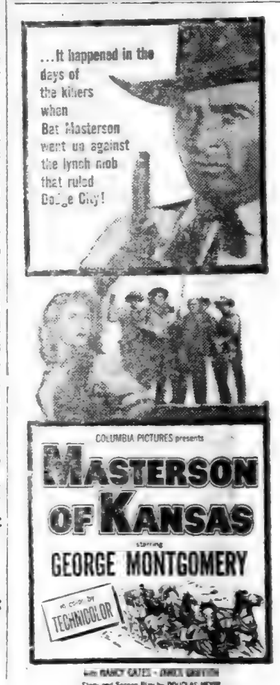
"This could leave 30,000 lawsuits against somebody," he said. He added elimination of continuing contracts creates a situation "admittedly not to our liking" but "we saw nothing else to do." He pointed out the continuing contract law could be restored after new districts are created.

He explained that some of the present school districts overlap because in some cases separate districts were set up for whites and Negroes and these might be held to be unconstitutional. He added the commission felt redistricting in the future would not be done on a bi-racial basis as a result of the Supreme Court decision.

Another provision of legislation recommended by the commission would let city and county boards divide counties into school "attendance areas" without regard for district lines.

The bills proposed by the commission was left blank so as to include any legislation the General Assembly might adopt on assignment of pupils. Bills proposed by a segregation study group and recommended by Gov. Hodges would place full power over the assignment and enrollment of pupils in the hands of local school boards.

The bill prepared by the Commission on Revision of the Public School Laws, Weaver said, will "improve the administration of public schools, and do it without increasing the tax burden."



Much of the revision involved codifying the school law, and simplifying the language, he said.

'...REASONABLE PLAN...'

Petition To Uphold Integration Opinion Now In Circulation

A petition calling for "appropriate legislative action" by the state Legislature to uphold the Supreme Court's decision regarding segregation will be put into circulation this morning, according to the petition's sponsor.

The petition, calling for "the Legislature of the State of North Carolina to implement a reasonable plan that will uphold this decision (the Supreme Court's decision against racial segregation in public schools) by appropriate legislative action," will begin circulation on the UNC campus today, said sponsor Ron Levin, senior from Williamston, yesterday.

LEVIN

In announcing his petition, Levin said, "I urge all those students who are in favor of this petition and wish to circulate it in their particular dorm, sorority or fraternity to contact me in Y Court this morning or as soon as possible. Only through a successful unity of effort and purpose can we hope to meet with any significant student body," he added.

The complete petition reads as follows:

"Inasmuch as the recent student petition supporting racial segregation in the public school system has presented a false and incomplete picture of the opinion of the entire student body, and further, that if this country is to serve as a lesson in freedom and the democratic way of life to the rest of the world, then the University of North Carolina must serve as a similar example to all Americans in supporting the decision of the United States Supreme Court regarding racial segregation; therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, students of the University of North Carolina to implement a reasonable plan that will uphold this decision by appropriate legislative action."

Levin said he anticipates that the petition will gain "at least 2,000" names. However, he emphasized the fact that he needs help in circulating it.

Bill Friday Promoted To UNC Secretary

New Office Is Created For Gray's Assistant

He's now Secretary Friday.

William C. Friday, who has served as assistant to President Gordon Gray since April, 1951, has been promoted to Secretary of the University of North Carolina.

BILL FRIDAY
. . . Secretary Friday now

Announcement of the new office and appointment was made yesterday following approval by the Executive Committee of the University Board of Trustees upon recommendation of President Gray. The Executive Committee met in the office of Governor Luther Hodges in Raleigh.

In his new job, effective March 1, Friday will continue to be a part of the Consolidated Office of the University and will "serve as staff officer to the President on student affairs and development programs, and shall be the service officer to the Board of Trustees, its officers and committees. He shall assist the President in maintaining effective liaison with members of the Legislature, University Councils and Committees, University officials, alumni and students."

Secretary Friday will also assist the President by performing "Special assignments which are outside the regular jurisdiction of other University officials, and by acting as the President's personal representative when so designated."

Prior to his appointment as Gray's assistant, Friday served for three years as assistant dean of students here. He has often said that his work with the students has left him with the feeling that "it was something that really showed some results." His popularity with the students was evinced by a big vote of thanks given him by the entire student body when he resigned to accept the new office.

Friday is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Latham Friday of Dallas. The 34-year-old executive is married to the former Ida Willa Howell of Lumberton, and they have one daughter, Frances, age 3.

Aid Organizer To Talk Here

Mrs. John Rood, of Minneapolis, Minn., organizer of the Million Dollar Fellowship Fund of the American Association of University Women, will speak at a dinner meeting of the Chapel Hill group tonight at 6 o'clock.

The meeting will be held in Lenoir Hall with guests welcome.

Mrs. Rood, who is director of the Atkinson Milling Company of Minneapolis and executor and trustee of the Frederick G. Atkinson Trust, has served as vice president of the national AAUW.

SP Names Campaigners Debate Spikes Session

The Student Party named two of its strategists for the forthcoming spring elections last evening in a session which saw the exchange of theories by a pair of SP leaders.

Elected as general campaign coordinator was the party chairman, Don Geiger. Appointed to hold the position of financial coordinator was Bob Harrington, party treasurer. The selection of the third organizer for the campaign, the publicity coordinator, was left at the disposal of the party chairman.

The convening was wound up with Geiger expressing confidence that the "SP can and will capture the majority of posts available in the spring elections."

Trustees' High Honor Awards Are Announced

Elevation of 10 UNC faculty members to the highly-select group of Kenan Professors has been approved by the University of North Carolina Board of Trustee's executive committee, upon recommendation of President Gordon Gray and Chancellor Robert House.

The new Kenan professors are Dr. Gordon W. Blackwell, noted sociologist and director of the Institution for Research in Social Science; Dr. Richmond P. Bond, international authority on English literature; Dudley D. Carroll, professor of economics and dean emeritus of the School of Commerce; Dr. Preston H. Epps, Greek professor and translator; Dr. Hugh T. Lefler, professor of history and award-winning writer; Dr. Loren C. MacKinney, professor of medieval history; Dr. Arthur Roe, chairman of the Chemistry Department; Dr. M. T. Van Hecke, professor of law and former Dean of the Law School; Dr. William S. Wells, professor of English composition and literature; and Dr. William L. Wiley, professor of French language and literature.

HIGH HONORS

Kenan professorships, representing one of the highest honors that trustees can bestow on the University's teaching staff members, are made possible by the Kenan Professorship Endowment and Reserve Fund.

The fund was established at the University in 1917 by the will of the late Mrs. Mary Lily Kenan Bingham, in memory of her father, William R. Kenan, and her uncles, James G. Kenan and Thomas S. Kenan, who were graduates of the University.

The Kenan Fund serves not only as a means of drawing and keeping men of the highest caliber on the faculty, but also as an awrad of merit for men who have distinguished themselves here as scholars and teachers.

Dr. Gordon Blackwell: "A teacher, author of books and articles, promoter and director of research, and worker for higher learning and finer citizenship in the South, Dr. Blackwell has brought credit to himself and distinction to the University."

Dr. Richmond Bond: "Provocative, enthusiastic and exacting teacher, Dr. Bond has aroused and sustained the interest of a widening circle of undergraduate and graduate students in English literature. His writings and lectures at University of London have won him an international position of prominence and honor."

Dudley D. Carroll: "As founder and, for 30 years, Dean of the Commerce School, Mr. Carroll led in the development of an essential new division of the University . . . In his teaching of controversial material in the field of social reform, he is an exemplar of intellectual and moral integrity. Since 1936 he has borne the main burden of the awarding of undergraduate scholarships in his distinguished work as chairman of the Committee on Scholarships."

Dr. Preston Epps: "Translator of Greek classics and outstanding teacher, he deserves recognition for his high standards, broad humanity, and persuasive interpretation of classical virtues . . . "

Dr. Hugh T. Lefler: "The award of the Mayflower Cup to Dr. Lefler in 1954 marked him as the preeminent contemporary historian of North Carolina. His tireless, colorful and uncompromising teaching of the history of our state and nation have won for him comparable acclaim in his work with undergraduate and advanced students."

Dr. L. C. MacKinney: "Publication of books and articles has brought to him international recognition as an authority on medicine of the Middle Ages. His writing and teaching in Medieval and Renaissance studies are a notable element of strength in one of the University's fields of highst achievement."

Dr. Arthur Roe: "He combines with distinction active investiga-

170,000 BOOKS, CLIPPINGS, NEWSPAPERS:

N. C. Collection Is Living History Lesson

By BARBARA WILLARD

Don't let the solid mohogany furniture and the period rooms fool you, that's a library. Every day or so, however, some student walks into the North Carolina Collection main reading room and says, "Can you check books out of here?" Wel, you sure can—anything from a Thomas Wolfe novel to early North Carolina sermons.

NO SELECTION

Miss Mary L. Thornton, librarian, says, "Selection of material to be included in the North Carolina Collection is very simple—there is no selection. Every book, pamphlet, article that can be secured, relating to North Carolina, is carefully preserved."

Miss Thornton came to the University of North Carolina and to her present position in 1917, when the State Collection was housed in Hill Hall. Working with her now are William S. Powell, first assistant librarian, and Mrs. Jane C. Bahnsen, assistant librarian.

The collection as it now stands contains about 170,000 items, including books, pamphlets, clippings, pictures, newspapers and magazines. Documents on current events, which Miss Thornton says are much more difficult to obtain than historical documents, add to the ever-growing collection daily.

LIVING HISTORY

Time spent in this section of UNC's library is a living history lesson. The Sir Walter Raleigh rooms, in which stands a life-like carved wooden statue of the versatile adventurer, adquately reproduce another age. The two rooms are done in Jacobean paneling, made in England during the Tudor period, about 1590. Period furniture occupies the rooms, and part of the Raleigh collection is in the old world bookcase.

The Raleigh collection includes Sir Walter's writings, biographies and related data, some of which is extremly rare.

"RIVER HOUSE" PANELING

Three rooms in the suite that make up the North Carolina Collection are reproductions of rooms typical of a North Carolina home around 1750. The yellow heart pine wall paneling was taken from the old "River House" at Nixonton, built in that year.

Furniture of the period, complete with even a spinning wheel, sets a stage for a move backward into time, The North Carolina Collection moves forward also.

DEVELOPMENT OF COLLECTION

The first North Carolina Collection at the University was started by the North Carolina Historical Society. The Society made an effort to secure "one or more copies" of everything published about North Carolina.

The Society was killed out by the Civil War, but it rose again in 1875, and secured some valuable documents still contained in the Collection.

It wasn't until 1907 that the collection, as it is known today, was begun. Louis R. Wilson, University Librarian for 31 years, took advantage of the opening of the new library in that year to call attention to a growing need. He made the state aware of the importance of preserving its records, its history, its people.

The state rallied to his call, and John Sprunt Hill, retired industrialist and philanthropist from Durham, endowed the Collection. His portrait, along with one of Bruce Cotten, who left his collection of North Carolina material to the collection, hangs in the main reading room of the State Collection. Hill is a graduate of UNC and was on the Board of Trustees for many years.

The coming of Miss Thornton as curator in 1917 was a great step in the advancement of the collection, for she had been more than significant in its development.

Newspapermen use it for research. Writers of North Carolina fiction find it has limitless value as a source of plot and background material. From artists to politicians, the collection provides the needed information in this State.

ALL THE PEOPLE

"We aim not to aid only students," Miss Thornton says, "but to serve all the people of North Carolina. Our resources are available to authors, teachers, reporters, government officials, lawyers and all other person interested in North Carolina."

The collection is designed to be a working collection. In the main reading room, with its outstanding 18th century architecture and decoration, are large tables and chairs, excellent study aids. The tables are replicas of a Chippendale table found in a North Carolina home prior to 1880. A photograph of the table was used to design the library tables, and the chairs were designed to blend with the other furniture. This furniture was also a gift from Hill.

The entire suite of rooms that make up the collection present a moving story of North Carolina, and the rapid growth of the collection shows it to be a story without end.

Although most of the material can be used outside the library, some of it is either too rare or too expensive to leave the collection room. One volume is valued at over $1,000 and several volumes are worth more than $100 each.

Certain rare collections, such as the complete O'Henry Collection, are enclosed in bronze grillwork in the walls. Among these is the Thomas Wolfe Collection, paced there by his family. It includes letters and albums of photographs of Wolfe and members of his family. First editions and foreign editions of his books are part of the collection.

The rarest item, according to Miss Thorton, is "an unbroken file of the session laws of the state dating back to 1777. This is one of the few complete files in the world."

HEART OF UNIVERSITY

Paul Green, Chapel Hill playwright, author of "Lost Colony" and a friend of the collection in many ways, once said, "A university must, like other things, have a center from which to draw its strength and sustenance. And such a center is its library. It's as impossible to think of a great university without a strong library as to think of a great athlete without a strong heart."

A serious effort has been made to collect in this part of the University's library, for the students and the people of the state, all state papers, authentic documents, books and manuscripts written by North Carolinians or having a direct bearing on North Carolina life. Even the picture post cards bought every day, with North Carolina scenes on them, have their place in the Colection.

TREASURES FOR THE FUTURE

Not only does the collection represent every aspect of past state life, the treasures of today, but every aspect of today's life also. Miss Thornton remarked on the current affairs part of the collection, which is the most difficult to keep complete, "Our daily life, also a changing picture, furnishes too little contrast to us to seem of importance as history."

What is being collected today, however, will be as important in the future as the historical documents that are of such value today.

The North Carolina Collection is day by day laying up treasures from which University students and all over the state will continue to benefit.

Salzburg Marionettes To Appear Here

The marionettes shown above, appear in "Concert at Schoenbrunn" with the Salzburg Marionette Theatre, which will appear here tonight. The appearance is sponsored by the Chapel Hill Concert Series and will begin at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall. Student tickets are available at the information booth in Graham Memorial. The price is $1.00 each.

The University's Man Friday

When the Trustees Executive Committee created the position of secretary yesterday and named William C. Friday to the job, they scooped together all the work of the school outside the domain of the other officers—and it is much, and vital—and laid it on Mr. Friday's willing shoulders.

Here's a job schematic for you: Mr. Friday is to serve as staff officer to President Gray "on student affairs and development programs, and shall be the service officer of the Board of Trustees, its officers and committees" and shall "assist the President in maintaining effective liaison with members of the Legislature, University, councils and committees, University officials, alumni and students."

But this is not all. He shall also, in the trustees' words, assist the president by performing "special assignments which are outside the regular jurisdiction of other University officials, and by acting as the president's personal representative when so designated."

If that sounds like a job for four or five men, it should be remembered that Bill Friday has been performing these very tasks with skill for four years as President Gray's assistant. Out of his love and concern for the University (and that includes State College and the Woman's College) he has become loved himself, by students, faculty, trustees, alumni and all those who know him and his part in this school. We know of no one whose devotion to the University is greater or for whom admiration is so universal.

The trustees are to be congratulated on their appointment of Mr. Friday. And students, particularly, for whom he has bridged the student-administration gap so well, will be pleased to hear of his new honor and new job.

Honor To The Teachers

We are not, of course, running down the essential role of research men in a University, but it has always seemed to us that professors whose first love is the classroom were not getting their proper honors.

A glance at the list of ten outstanding faculty members named Kenan professors yesterday will demonstrate that things are changing a majority of them have won their greatest esteem through years of standing at maps and blackboards and teaching students the truths of the world.

It is gratifying to see this base for the judgment of a professor's value emerge; the recommendation of these ten by the presilent and the chancellor may help usher in a new day of honor for the teacher.

A New Look

An hour spent talking about student governments with a visiting university administrator yesterday reminded us anew that Carolina students are practically unique in the extent of their intelligent self-government.

Here, we should take time now and then to remember, there is no hazing of freshmen, no beanies, no clipped hair.

Here, there is no administration control over the student budget or censorship of student publications or interference with the student courts.

Here, no faculty member presides over dormitories or proctors quizzes or counts the beers you drink in Rathskellar. You can live where you please (if you're a male); you can drive a car; you can do, within reasonable limits, anything you want to do.

It is not so at all schools, or even at most schools, where writing, studying, beer drinking, speaker-sponsoring, legislating, money-spending, exam-proctoring and housing are under control of university officials.

We are likely to take these hard-won freedoms for granted. And that's the point of this wandering little homily: Take a look at the comparative state of affairs in student government in other schools, and campus politics and politicians, the preservers of this unusual liberty, will begin to look better to you.

Weekend Like Those Of The Good Old Days

Louis Kraar

WHAT IT WAS, was a Carolina weekend.

That's about the only way to describe the past weekend, which reminded me more of the days before Saturday classes than any other.

During those days of no Saturday classes and the quarter system, Germans festivities would begin unofficially Thursday afternoon. By Friday morning, classes were sparsely populated. And by late Saturday night, the campus had pleasantly partied itself into exhaustion.

With Louis Armstrong on Thursday night, the weekend seemed to get off to a premature, but potent, start. Sunday morning at about 1 a.m., the Mouza Cafe—only eating place opened—bustled with more students than appeared in most Saturday classes.

★

HIGHSPOT OF the Earl Bostic concert Saturday afternoon was the boy who opened a Memorial Hall window from the outside, set his paper cup on the window sill, and climbed into the auditorium.

Wind rushed across the hall, and everyone shivered. The student who had climbed in through the window turned to someone beside him and muttered: "Hey, shut that window. Do you want me to catch cold?"

★

THE STUDENT Legislature, which last week so generously granted the campus two class-free Saturdays each semester, fell into an old pitfall.

The legislators passed their legislation — then checked on its feasibility with the administration.

Class scheduling is strictly an academic matter. Thus, if student politicians want to dole out free days, they should check with the proper academic authorities first.

Chances of the campus actually getting the free days that the Legislature has called for are slim. The University has a certain quota of class days to meet, and the calendar is prepared far in advance to provide for holidays.

But so near election time, it's not surprising for campus politicians to start granting the improbable.

★

THE WEEKLY political columns submitted by both campus parties should be interesting propaganda.

So far I notice that the Student Party has "thrown open the windows of the smoke-filled rooms in Graham Memorial."

I hope none of them catch cold.

★

IF CAROLINA males are anything like those at Denver University, coeds should be wary of ever stealing a fraternity symbol.

A bunch of Alpha Chi Omega sorority girls from Denver were suspected with stealing the Kappa Sigma emblem at that school. The fraternity held a "kangaroo court" and found the girls guilty.

The sentence was that each girl had the symbol of the fraternity painted on her forehead. After the sentence had been carried out on several of the girls, the stenciling got out of hand.

Then an unidentified coed was stood on her head, and the symbol was stenciled on her panties.

★

AS A possible fee raise looms over University students heads, word comes from Texas that the legislature in the oil state is considering raising tuition at the University of Texas — from $25 per semester to $50.

Tuition for North Carolinians attending the University is $150 a semester, not including other fees and dorm rent.

The Death Of Halfway To Heaven

Joseph Alsop

NORTH TACHEN ISLAND—One of the casualties of the latest free world retreat in Asia is a place called Halfway to Heaven.

Halfway to eHaven perches, or rather used to be perched, on the cratered summit of the highest peak of North Tachen Island, some 1,500 feet above the surrounding, nourishing sea.

It began a little more than a century ago, when the first harsh impact of the modern world on ancient China produced the Taiping rebellion, which in turn produced a fearful famine in Chekiang province. Fleeing the famine, a handiul of inhabitants of the Chekiang town of Wan Ling found a safe refuge on this island crag and stayed to build a village, or rather two villages, for the lesser of the two adjoining craters contain Little Halfway to Heaven, and the larger, Big Halfway to Heaven.

For five generations, sons succeeded fathers, gradually clawing new terraces from the crater walls and naked mountainside for their plots of vegetables and sweet potatoes, gradually adding vessel to vessel in Halfway to Heaven's fleet of fishing sampans until there were 130 sampans owned among the hundred families of peak dwellers.

The bitter poverty of the original refugees thus slowly gave way to a kind of crude prosperity. Long low houses of chinked stone, with finely carved, boldly curved ridgepoles were built to cling to the crater sides. A little temple to the Taoist earth godlings gave the villagers some one to pray to when times were hard. The young men fished all year. The elders, the children and the women tilled the terraces.

Only One Wept

With salt and cloth from the Lig settlement on South Tachen Island, with their fish and sweet potatoes and vegetables, with a rare treat of meat from the pigs, chickens, rabbits and goats they also kept, the people of Halfway to Heaven were not ill-content. But for a hundred years no outsider ever saw Halfway to Heaven, except the people from Door of the Wind Hill, the village on the other side of the crag, and the huge, superbly winged fish eagle that had his nest on the cliff below the village graves.

Then President Eisenhower "unleashed Chiang Kai-shek" and the American government pressured the Chinese Nationalist government into occupying the Tachens in force. So the soldiers came, barracks were built, and halfway to Heaven briefly tasted an unfamiliar uneasy prosperity. And then again President Eisenhower releashed Chiang Kai-shek, and the American government pressured the Chinese Nationalists into abandoning the Tachens; and that was the end of Halfway to Heaven.

In the Chinese way, the end came without undue lamentation The villagers talked it oevr and decided that what they had heard of communism from their fellow fisherfolk from the mainland as ugly enough to justify a move. The government said it would help. And so, on the afternoon before the move was to be made, no one was weeping except the wife of the elder of the Leng family. She was deaf and could not read, and she wept because she had grasped that a move impended but no one could tell her why or where.

The elder of Leng, a little, old gnarled, toothless man like a weathered root, with what must really be the last queue on any Chinese head, was ignoring his weeping wife. He and the elder of Chu and the young men and boys of Little Halfway to Heaven were sitting in the pale, watery sun in the village center, while the women finished their packing. Yes, they said, they were leaving. Yes, it was hard to go, but they did not want to stay. They d swept the graves one last time, and now they were ready.

It was the same in Big Halfway to Heaven, where is found the house of the place's richest man, Cheng who owned three whole sampans in the fleet that set to sail from the foot of Knife Black Mountain. He had enough capital stored up to open a restaurant when the soldiers came, and his Chinese crullers and hot soya bean milk brought him in the magnificent cash profit of two dollars a day. But Cheng too was leaving without reluctance.

As dusk fell, the village headman, Lo The Clever, came back from organizing the evaculation of all North Tachen Island—Kwan Yins Village, Bare Rock, the East Village and the rest—which were all to be led by Lo. He had his aged mother to calm and his household to organize, for Lo The Clever is a widower. So he let his deputy, Hung Give the movement orders to the chiefs of the "Sections" of fifty or sixty people into which the village, by immemorial Chinese custom, is administratively divided.

The meeting took place in the upper room of the house of Liang, a big house, for the Liang clan was the largest in Halfway to Heaven. A score of men, young and old, stood around the table, their faces work hardened, their black peasants clothes worn, making a picture fit to be painted by a Chinese Breughel in the yellow light of a guttering tallow candle Hung read the movement order in a brisk sing-song.

Departure would be at nine the next morning. Each section leader would be responsible for his section. Each person would be allowed to carry 100 pounds of personal belongings if he could manage that much.

There were quick questions; How about bad weather at sea, from a weatherwise fisherman: how about pregnant women, would they get medical care on the ships, from a young father-soon to-be; and so on. Hung dealt with the questions intelligently. And then everyone went home for a great feast of all the food that could not be sold to the soldiers, was not worth carrying, and was no longer worth scrimping against a poor season.

Before dawn the nxt morning the young men of the village set off down the mountain de, each balancing two enormous packs on his back. At first Lo had a little trouble forming the line to his taste

Then the last shout was given. Little Liang marched proudly forward. Children shouldered the babies. Men and women, young or old, hoisted up their heavy packs, Even the old boundfeet grannies carried something. But none complained. And so the slowly moving line wound its way up over the crater lip and down the long miles of fearfully curving fearfully mud slimed road to Yellow One Beach where the transports awaited them.

An old nanny goat and her two kids, which had somehow escaped the pot, was being chased by two soldiers when the last of those who had made Halfway to Heaven a living breathing place of habitation cast his last backward glance into the familiar hollow on the mountain summit. The greatfish eagle still magnificiently volpanet in the cloudy sky above. But the doorways of the houses were dark and deserted. The muddy lanes were strewn with the rubbish of departure. Halfway to Heaven was dead—killed by forces it did not understnd, utterly destroyed because it had been briefly swept, by what strange processes and changes, into the fearful vortex of great events

Books: Why So Dear?

Paul T. Chase

The distribution of text books at this institution is a racket. It has long been a racket in the publishing world, where new editions overtake each other before their ink is dry for the sole purpose of killing the used book market.

But publishing houses have never pretended to be educational or philanthropic agencies. Our University has, on occasion, made such pretence. This has not prevented it from making the sale of texts to students a lucrative commercial enterprise. Wherever the profits go — football, scholarships, dormitories — they come from us.

Whenever you buy a text you are giving a handout to some unknown recipient. Does it make you feel all warm inside?

At most other educational institutions a student can buy any book (not only texts) at a discount of from ten to forty per cent. How do we rate the privilege of paying the full publisher's list price?

The assignment of texts for classes is either a racket or gross stupidity. Most classes require a deluxe, slick paper edition of a text costing from five to ten dollars. Many demand six or seven separate volumes for a single course. The existence of identical or comparable books in inexpensive paper format, or the possibility of slight alterations in course material in order to take advantage of such cheap editions, seems not to have been considered.

Many professors are authors of the texts they assign; this is fine. Most of these texts are expensive; this is not fine.

The fate of used texts is a mystery. At the end of each semester thousands of slightly worn texts are sold by relieved students for a fraction (never more than half) of their value. At the beginning of each semester these texts are markedly conspicious by their absence from the shelves of the local book dispensary. After the initial rush is over some of these bashful tomes make a hesitant appearance at prices higher than those we should be paying for new books. Ou sont les livres d'autre fois?

The plight of the student who cannot afford to spend twenty or thirty dollars each semester for texts is a sad one indeed. It is of no apparent consequence to anyone but himself. He is the victim of an economic conspiracy — witting or unwitting—on the part of publishers, distributors, administrators, and professors. He cannot do a lot to fight it. Those who can have refused to do so.

Dept. of safe predictions: Nothing will be done to extirpate the textbook racket at this University.

What Price Peace In The Far East?

Ed Yoder

In the not so far-seeing view of U. S. warpath-runners, the time has come when we must do either of two things in the Far East: We must continue to fiddle dangerously close to the borders of Communist China and run the risk of war; or we must pull stakes altogether, blow the whisle on the Seventh Fleet get out, and "lose face."

The warpath-runners, who are not limited to any particular group except the China Lobby believe that the first choice is the only choice

But the greatest threat of all is not burning in that quarter of the woods. The greatest threat is indeed, a warpath-running threat, but it is localized right at the flank of the nation where it could do spontaneous harm: Not since peace came to Korea has war sentiment among the rank and file of people been so sensitive to sudden change as it is now.

The reason is simple. Although the advent of the "total" nuclear weapons, the guided missiles have changed the attitude of wise statesmen and scientists towards war (and have even converted the fading old soldier. General MacArthur, to the belief that war must be outlawed), the full import of the new attitude toward was has not reached the populace. The new concept of the values of war and peace contain a new ethical ingridient that many do not understand. (In fact, you could believe from the present policy in China that many national leaders do not understand.)

The fickle shifts in Communist policy never have soothed any nerves. Now Formosa and the surrounding situation are seen as an old and familiar show by the Moscow-Peiping Puppet theatre. So the question arises: Why don't we throw bombs into the broad and hateful morass of Red China, show them once and for all what's what? Why let the Chinese play with us/ again to their advantage?

So runs the sentiment of the warpath-runners. Yet their questions run into one solid wall that has existed since the first Khan got the idea of Chinese conquest: How do you conquer a nation that lives a narrow existence on the land, crowded thousands to a square mile in some areas? How do you conquer a nation that has so many men under arms that slaughter becomes a matter of indifference? Why do you conquer a nation controlled by your real enemy and inhabited only by people who were the forgivable victims of their own hunger and of the abuse of a regime of graters?

All which boils down to this question: Why any war at all? If the United States must own an obligation anywhere in the crucial area, it can only rightly be within the "juridical" boundaries outlined for the Formosan government by the Japanese Peace Treaty. That area does not include islands off the Chinese mainland that are no more distant from it than Wrightsville Beach is from Wilmington, N. C. If we have geographical commitments they are limited to Formosa itself and to the Pescadores. Our moral obligations, too, stem first of all not to Chiang Kai-Shek but to the 30,000 or so Chinese soldiers who refused to go back to the Red government and are now garrisoned on Formosa.

The broad truth behind the warpath-running sentiment, last of all, returns to one idea—the idea that peace is complete Nirvana, the pacific peak from which no further excursion be made. The tenuous balance between Capitalism and Communism, th peace that has included the fury Berlin air-lift, a Korean police action and r Germany, is not real peace, say the warp runners. o, they ask, why not begin to throw bombs and make it real peace?

The fallacy is that peace never has been peace under terms of the warpath-runners. I is an often-relative term, and it certainly h been Nirvana at any time.

In current language, peace is the abse a global war that would demolish civilizati

Hobbes, the English philosopher, had a unpopular phrase for it—"Peace at any That maxim, scoffed at for centuries, may c apply one of these days with a new seriousn

Reasonable action in the Formosa crisis the warpath-runners call it what they will, is price that can be paid.

Humanities And Human Understanding

Dr. Harold W. Dodds

(Dr. Dodds is president of Princeton University. The following assessment by him of the value of liberal arts in education is reprinted from The Daily Pennsylvanian.—Editor)

It is perspective—the ability to see men and events, to see oneself in relationship to the sum of human experience — which gives balance to a man and leads to his maturity. His maturity may lead to wisdom. Whether or not he is the rare one who does reach that serene plateau, it is clear that the first stage of the long journey is the gaining of perspective.

Close study of history, philosophy, religion, literature and the arts expands and deepens a man's understanding of human nature in a way that individual experience alone cannot do. Every man's personal experience is necessarily limited, by the circle of his personal friends, by the mentality of his vocation or profession, by the prejujdices of his class, his nation, his religion, by the climate of opinion of his particular historcal era.

But through human studies, anyone with intelligence and imagination is able to make his own the most penetrating insights of generations of thoughtful and sensitive observers of man. The result is usually a startling sense of the range of human possibilities. One cannot have become aware of a great novelist, a great painter, a great philosopher, scientist, musician or great statesman, without an increased feeling for the potentialities of human nature.

A realistic, deep-driving, but uncynical knowledge of the possibilities of human nature, both for good and for evil, is a recognized advantage in leadership of any sort . . . It is in the Humanities that thoughtful men have found reservoirs of comprehension and strength for a good many centuries.

Freshmen Cagers Crush High Point Jayvees, 117-89

Kearns Has 29, Brennan 27 In Easy Victory

Tar Babies Take Lead Early, Never Headed

Chunky Tommy Kearns dumped in 29 points and tall Pete Brennan tallied 27 as the Carolina freshmen team easily subdued the High Point College junior varsity, 117-89, last night in Woollen Gym.

It was the second time the Tar Babies went over the century mark in defeating the club.

The UNC frosh took an early lead and were never headed. Halfway through the first half High Point employed an ineffective full-court press in an effort to hold the score down, but the starting Carolina five ran the margin to 24 points before Coach Buck Freeman began subbing. The score at intermission was 49-31.

At the beginning of the second half High Point cut down the Tar Babies' lead to nine points when Dale Swarringer began to hit on his jump shot. Carolina, however, quickly woke up and built a 30-point lead which was maintained by the subs throughout the remainder of the contest.

Swarringer was high scorer for the losers with 18 points. C. W. Faulkner rang up 16 for the team.

Blue Devil Shankle Hot In Practice

Duke's outstanding trackmen Joel Shankle, captured five events —the same number that the entire Carolina varsity gathered— in a practice meet on the Tin Can board Saturday.

Shankle was tops in the high and low hurdles, high and broad jump, and pole vault. The Carolina winners were Roger Morris (shot), Don Wright (330-yd. run), Boyd Newnam (660-yd. run), Don Mitchell (60-yd. dash), and Jim Beatty (1½ miles).

In a freshman three-quarter-mile run three Tar Babies finished within two seconds of each other, Ben Williams winning in 3:15.6 followed by Everett Whatley and Richard Riggsbee. Ronnie Austell (330-yd. dash) and John Sylvester (660-yd.) were other frosh winners.

DUKE FROSH Dave Sime captured three events, the 60-yd. dash, low hurdles, broad jump and tied for first in the high hurdles with Carolina's Gene Drury.

In the one and one-half mile run, Beatty's 6:98 time has been bettered by only three pervious UNC runners, as he and the next three place runners, all Tar Heels, turned in their best time ever. Bob Barden, Glenn Nanney, and Marion Griffin trailed Beatty. Morris' 50'1" heave of the shot was his best in the indoor competition.

Cold Weather No Hindrance As Baseball Activity Opens

It was freezing cold in Chapel Hill yesterday but in spite of the weather, Coach Walter Rabb and a host of candidates for the 1955 edition of the Tar Heel baseball team launched their first day of practice.

About 15 pitchers and catchers limbered up in the Tin Can while the rest of the squad was issued equipment in Emerson Stadium. The weather forced the team to remain indoors, but Coach Rabb stated that as soon as the weather permits, the team will then move outdoors and begin serious drills.

About 30 men reported to Rabb yesterday, among them six lettermen from last year's squad. These included infielder Harry Lloyd, outfielders Al Long, Bob Paller, Ken Keller and Connie Gravitte, and Tom Maultsby who will be counted on to be the foundation of the mound corps. Will Frye and Jack Maultsby will report late due to the fact they will be working out with the football squad.

All infielders and outfielders are expected to report to Emerson Stadium at 2:30 this afternoon and the pitchers and catchers are to report at 4:00.

UNC Gymnasts Defeat Georgia Tech Despite Concession Of 13 Points

Despite the fact that gymnastics coach Bill Meade conceded 13 points in the meet, the Carolina gymnasts defeated Georgia Tech, 58½-36½, Saturday afternoon in Woollen Gym.

The flying rings were broken during the warm-up period and were unable to be repaired in time for that particular event. As a result, Meade gave Tech first, second and third places.

With the exception of the flying rings, Carolina took first in every event. Gordon Hudson was high man for the Tar Heels with 13 points. Pete Brumley tallied 12. Cosodi was high man for the losers with eight.

The victory gave the gymnasts a 3-2 record for the year.

Dons Strengthen Hold On First In AP Poll

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The defense-minded San Francisco Dons, who turned down a National Invitation Basketball Tournament bid because they're confident of going into the NCAA tournament, yesterday established themselves more firmly as the nation's No. 1 college basketball team.

The Dons, who ousted Kentucky from the lead last week, topped the 10th weekly Associated Press ranking poll of sports writers and broadcasters by a margin of nearly 300 points, although they received fewer first-place votes than they did a week ago.

COEDS STILL OUTNUMBERED:

UNC Enrollment Figure Up 53 Since Autumn Semester

The total enrollment at Carolina for the spring semester is 53 above the number of students who registered for classes in the fall, according to figures released yesterday.

The figures, released by the Chancellor's office, show there are 6,114 students attending classes now, as compared to 6,061 last semester.

Of the net total, there are 1,488 male veterans and 19 coeds who have pulled hitches in the armed forces.

Native North Carolinians make up 4,680 of the total. Out-of-staters add 1,183 to the student body. There are 64 students here from foreign countries and United States possessions. The rest of Carolina's 6,114 students are graduate students in Public Health (65); Library Science (24), and Social work (40.)

Listing by departments it as follows:

General college, 2,312; arts and sciences, 975; business administration, 461;

Education, 261; journalism, 44; graduate school, 719;

Law, 203; library science, 42; social work, 40;

Not counting graduate students in fields of public health, library science and social work, Carolina coeds are far outnumbered. They stand 1,018 strong, as opposed to 4,909 men students.

PTA Asks Referendum On ABC Stores Here

Seeking sources of revenue for the school system's building needs, the Chapel Hill Parent-Teacher Association has voted to ask the county commissioners to call a county-wide referendum on the establishment of ABC whisky stores in Orange County.

The PTA motion, passed at the group's meeting last week, merely asks the commissioner's to hold such an election, but as it was suggested in connection with potential sources of revenue for much-needed capital outlay money for local schools, an endorsement of ABC stores is thus implied to that extent. Ninety percent of all profits from the state-owned whisky stores are supposed to be appropriated by the county commissioners for school purposes, the other 10 percent going to law enforcement.

An ABC store vote in Orange failed in the summer of 1938 in the face of strong rural and northern county voters' opposition.

CAN ORDER VOTE

The commissioners have the right to order such an election but if they choose not to do so it may then be mandatorily held on petition to the county board of 15 per cent of the voters in the last general election.

It's understood that such a petition is intended in the event the commissioners don't call for the election on their own initiative and a move is already under way to secure the support of other civic groups for this possible alternative.

Since such an election cannot be held within 60 days of another election, it will be late summer or fall before a county referendum on ABC stores can be held because the biennial municipal elections in Chapel Hill and Carrboro will be held May 2 and 3.

CARRIED BY 3-2

The PTA vote seeking the election carried by about a 3-2 majority following a lively discussion. There were more than 100 persons present at the meeting. It was estimated in a report given Association President J. L. Godfrey that a profit upwards of $70,000 annually would be realized.

A North Carolina public law applying only to Chapel Hill, was passed many years ago prohibiting the sale of whisky and the running of pool halls and other concessions within five miles of the University. But in 1941 this act was amended to deleted the section applying to the sale of whisky, so that the passage of an ABC store election wouldn't conflict with this "blue" law.

The PTA also voted to confer with the University to see if the $11,000 contribution the latter makes to the local school system each year might not be increased, and decided to participate in the taking of a school census along with the local chapter of the AAUW.

SUPPORTS REFERENDUM

Local School Board Chairman Carl Smith, who's been leading a campaign along with his board for increased capital appropriations to the local system, has said he would certainly support the holding of an election on the ABC store question. He didn't commit himself as to which way he stood on the issue itself, but said "I think it is a source of revenue that the PTA shouldn't pass up in its considerations. The people of the county are certainly entitled to vote on it." He added that he felt sure the board would certainly discuss the matter at its next meeting.

Dr. Frank Talks On Red Cross

"America needs the Red Cross for its own sake and for the sake of the meaning of the freedom of association of people in good cause as the very faith and substance of America from the hour of her birth in freedom on this continent to this hour of her stand for freedom in all the world," Dr. Graham said.

Now serving as vice-chairman of the 1955 national Red Coss fundraising drive, Dr. Graham is a past director of the American Red Cross. He was formely president of the University of North Carolina and was a United States Senator before beginning his UN work.

LEARNED FIRST-HAND

Citing Red Cross service to all people, he said "The people of North Carolina learned first-hand about the Red Cross work in the wake of Hurricane Hazel, when the Red Cross served 73,000 stricken families. We now know personally what the Red Cross does when a typhoon hits Japan, or floods devastate India and Pakistan, or disaster strikes any people anywhere."

Emphasizing the importance of Red Cross work everywhere, Dr. Graham said "In this day when we know from the headlines firsthand of the needs and tragedies across continents and oceans, we cannot be callous and unresponsive without hurt to our own souls.

"The Red Cross symbol, the Red Cross blood, the red band of faith and courage in our American flag, and the red blood of our common humanity are all part, not of the guilt by association, but of the glory of free association and high adventure of free people for the liberty and hope for all people."

Membership in the Red Cross, he continued, makes us part of a movement "which reached back across a century and forward across the wide world. Wherever youth lay wounded on a battlefield, wherever homes were made desolate by flood, volcano, earthquake or hurricane, or wherever

5 Named To Village Offices

Chris Waddell, Ellen Hanna, Charles Ragland, Joanne Earley and Jesse Butler have been elected to fill seats on the 11 member board of directors of Victory Village in the two week election which ended last Monday.

A total of 77 ballots were cast among the 13 candidates. Slightly more than 25 percent of the 704 eligible voters (students and their wives) turned out during the election.

Foushee Art Exhibit Now At Planetarium

The paintings of Mrs. Ola Maie Foushee, Chapel Hill artist, opened in exhibition this week in the South Art Gallery of the Morehead Planetarium, where they will be on display this month.

The collection is entitled "Retrospective Showing of Paintings" and includes works which have won for Mrs. Foushee prizes and acclaim in exhibits within and without North Carolina. She is also showing some of her favorite oil, water color and crayon abstracts and portraits. The exhibition pictures were chosen for size and variety of techniques.

Among the titles are "Sarah," which won for her the S. Clay Williams cup in the 1948-49 annual exhibition of North Carolina Artists, and "Foggy Night," which took honorable mention and a cash award at the 1950 annual exhibit at Butler Art Institute at Youngstown, Ohio.

A portrait of Dr. E. J. Woodhouse, retired University professor, is also on display.

Stray Greeks Elect Miss Brown President

The Stray Greeks elected the officers for next year in a meeting last week.

The officers who were elected are president, Miss Nan Brown; vic-president, Miss Kay Browne; secretary, Miss Susan Freeman; treasurer, Miss Dare Peace and social chairman, Miss Betty Ann Neas.

Far East Policy

Professor Ralph Braibanti of Duke University will speak on problems of American foreign policy in the Far East here tomorrow.

He will speak at an open meeting of the Pi Sigma Alpha, political science fraternity, at 8:30 p.m. in the assembly room of the Library.

Dr. Braibanti is a native of Connecticut and holds academic degrees from Connecticut State College and Syracuse University. He held a Ford Foundation fellowship for work on Far Eastern problems and in 1952 was civil administrator for the Ryukyu Islands. He is editor of Administration of Occupied Areas: A Study Guide.

N.C. Colonial Documents On Show Here

A new bibliography of North Carolina colonial and state documents from the period 1749 to 1939 is being exhibited at the UNC library in the main lobby.

The new bibliography is a recent publication of the University Press and was prepared by Miss Mary L. Thornton, librarian of the North Carolina Collection.

The featured volume begins with the year the printing press was introduced into the state and records all known official publications of the government.

Before then documents of the type recorded were often issued in a series with a broad title which gave little or no hint as to the value of their content, Miss Thornton said. Historians and state officials will now be able to use this relatively unused source of information about North Carolina.

Recorded and indexed in the bibliography are more than 4000 titles including a number of early state documents such as the journal of the convention which ratified the Federal constitution.

Essays may be of any length, must be typed and should treat the general themes of John Ericsson and his contribution to the United States; John Ericsson, the inventor, and John Ericsson, his life and work.

Entries for the John Ericsson Society Contest will be accepted at the American-Scandanavian Foundation, 127 E. 73rd St., New York 21, N. Y., from March 1 until Nov. 1.

'... BUNCH OF BLABBERMOUTHS ...'

SP's Charlie Wolf Hits Fellow Solons

By NEIL BASS

An invitation for a couple of Student Party leaders to address their fellow politicians Monday resulted in a lengthy exchange of ideals and hurling of charges by the leaders, Charlie Wolf and David Reid.

Wolf kindled the spark which set off the argument by saying that "the Student Party has completely failed in its effort this year to carry out an effective student government, primarily, because we have been torn by an internal struggle for power." Hitting at the leadership of the group, Wolf called it "ineffective and lacking in unity, without an unselfish and keen interest in the betterment of the student body." Pushing the issue even farther, he described the SP leaders as "a bunch of blabbermouths who are always getting into trouble by shooting off their mouths to The Daily Tar Heel; thus we are losing the favor of the student body."

CALLS CREASY 'POOR EXECUTIVE'

"Tom Creasy is a god boy and I am sure that he 'sincerely believes' all the measures that he tries to enact, but the fact remains that he has been and is a poor executive."

Wolf ended his talk by saying that "maybe I'm over-pessimistic and all wet, but David will follow me and encourage you with his bouyant and optimistic views." Wolf instructed the press before he began his talk that the views he would express were his own and did not necessarily reflect the feelings of the party as a whole.

REID DEFENDS PARTY

"I could not call my good friend Charlie Wolf all wet, but I will say that his feet are a little damp," was the opening comment of Reid, who followed Wolfe.

On the question of party unity and the "struggle for power within the group "that Wolf referred to, Reid said that "disagreement stimulates thought and prevents stagnation of ideals." Referring to the University Party nominations of last year, he said "how healthy is a party when it takes only 30 seconds to nominate a candidate for the presidency of the student body?"

The UP is afraid to initiate anything "of its own," Reid concluded, "but just sits back and watches the SP introduce new thought and ideas and ridicules us if the measure doesn't work out."

Job Interviews Available Through Placement

According to the Placement Service, approximately 60 companies have already been scheduled to send representatives to the campus during February and March.

Undergraduates interested in locating summer jobs may also contact the bureau. Information on specific careers, types of businesses and vocations and on techniques of obtaining jobs may be found in the Placement Service Library, 206 Gardner Hall and in the General College Library.

UP Steering Group Is Announced At Session

By CHARLES JOHNSON

Bill Sabiston, vice chairman of the University Party, announced last night the names of those members who will serve on the University Party Steering Committee. This committee was recently established by an amendment to the party constitution.

Those appointed to serve on the committee were: Rollie Tillman, Ed Lipman, Bob Eberle, Patsy Daniels, Laura Ervin, Davis Merritt, Lionel King, and Luther Hodges, Jr.

Sabiston, in announcing these appointments, stated, "The University Party, looking ahead at spring elections and feeling a deep-seeded obligation to the students of the University of North Carolina, feel that it is once again under obligation to adjust its party structure in order to fulfill the students' general wishes, wants, and desires."

Charles Yarborough, party chairman, in discussing the coming elections, stated, "The University Party is stronger now than it has been in several years. Its representatives in legislature and in the party meetings are doing their utmost to see that all the students get the best in student government."

"We shall attempt to formulate sound, constructive programs so that student government will continue to be directed toward useful and beneficial ends. We shall continue to eliminate unnecessary politics, petty disputes, and wasted effort."

"We have confidence, the capacity for hard work, and the will to win. Above all, our party has a strong sense of dedication to the principles inherent in the deep-rooted tradition of student government."

Yarborough announced that ominations for candidates for the egislature from the men's dorm districts and the women's dorm districts will begin next week.

Attendance at the meeting was at a minimum, but attendance at next week's meeting should be greatly increased due to the beginning of nominations for the spring elections.

Blackwell Says Delinquency Is Rising Higher

HIGH POINT, Feb. 15 — The continuing rise in juvenile delinquency, now becoming more evident among youngsters of eight years and less, was discussed by Dr. Gordon W. Blackwell of the University faculty before the High Point Exchange Club tonight as the kick-off meeting of Crime Prevention Week here.

Dr. Blackwell, director of the UNC Institute for Research in Social Science, said that "comics, television of ABC stores are not among the important causes of delinquency.

"These widely discussed matters are often used as smoke screens by inadequate parents, poor teachers or those who do not want to face up to the really basic community causes of delinquency," he said.

Dr. Blackwell cited a number of cases: slums, lack of recreational opportunities; lack of adequate social work and health programs (especially mental health); lack of modern, well staffed courts to work with children and their parents; lack of detention homes, and lack of adequate State and local support for public welfare programs, including child welfare workers, boarding homes, aid to dependent children and training schools.

"Because such needs cost money, many people prefer to focus public attention on less expensive matters such as criticism of comic books and TV programs," Dr. Blackwell said. "The later factors may sometimes tip the scales toward delinquency for an individual child, but not unless some of the more basic causes for delinquency have been present."

In discussing the delinquency rate rise since the beginning of Warld War II, he pointed out that delinquency begins early, for studies show that almost half of the young offenders were showing noticeable signs of becoming delinquent at the age of eight or younger.

Dr. Blackwell praised the corrective value of domestic relations courts and study homes for children which counties, including Guilford, have established through civic groups and county government.

Playmakers Take Play On Tour

A State-wide tour of the Carolina Playmakers' production of "Arsenic and Old Lace" got underway this week and will cover North Carolina from Rocky Mount to Sylva.

The annual Playmakers tour was founder in 1921 by Frederick H. Koch to emphasize the production of folk drama written by students in playwriting. During that early period of touring, Paul Green's play, "House of Connelly," was taken over the eastern half of the country, and another play was taken as far west as Dallas, Tex.

Since 1944, the tour is now a major production. Some recent tours have been "Spring For Sure," "Romeo and Juliet," "The Inspector General" and "On Borrowed Time."

Touring by the Playmakers is a function of the University Extension Division. It is arranged through the Bureau of Community Drama of the Extension Division, headed by John W. Parker, business manager of the Playmakers and executive secretary of the Carolina Dramatic Association.

Petition's Response Is 'Good'

Author Levin Says Integration Request Has Student Approval

"The response as a whole is very good," said Ron Levin yesterday concerning student response to the pro-segregation petition which he began circulating yesterday morning.

Levin, who began distributing copies of his petition early Tuesday in Y-Court, said "They are being received with a great deal of approval by the students."

The petition calls for "the legislature of the State of North Carolina to implement a reasonable plan" to support the Supreme Court's decision against racial segregation in public schools "by appropriate legislative action."

"All those who wish to have a copy for their campus organizations please contact me," said Levin yesterday. He added that "there are still sufficient copies available." He also asked that "anyone interested in helping to manage the table in Y-Court" get in touch with him either in Y-Court or at 2301.

Levin said he will set a date next week for the copies of his petition to be called in.

The concerts are presented free of charge in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial. They begin at 8 p. m.

The new series will begin with a recital by William Whitesides, tenor, on Feb. 27. The following concerts will feature piano recitals, a woodwind quintette and a concert by Gilbert and Sullivan excerpts.

Greek Groups Will Sponsor Heart Drive

Delta Sigma Pi Fraternity and Alpha Delta Pi Sorority will jointly sponsor the American Heart Association drive on campus, according to Louie Bonardi, chairman of the drive.

Plastic hearts will be distributed to all fraternities, sororities and dormitories for contributions. In addition, contributions will be accepted at the North Carolina Heart Association, Miller Hall.

According to Bonardi, the contributions will go for the support of research projects on the causes and controls of various heart diseases. In addition, he said, the contributions will support programs of educations concerning heart disease and community service activities.

ARGENTINIAN ASKS:

Hold Americans Together

Closer relations between the United States and Argentina, "the two nations which can hold the American continents together against the 'Big Hate' across the sea," were urged by Argentina lawyer-writer in a recent address before the UNC Cosmopolitan Club.

Alfredo A. Casey, professor of law at the University of La Plata who studied here in 1949-50, said that exchange programs of students and professors for cultural study have already accomplished a great deal in improving inter-American relationships.

The governments themselves, he said, must follow the example of private citizens, and initiate an active campaign towards a better understanding and closer relations between the two nations.

Casey, who has a private law practice and spends much time studying and writing about American literature, is currently on a three-month lecture tour of U. S. universities. His tour is sponsored by the U. S. State Department.

Noting that years of mutual misinformation have given each nation a false picture of the other, Casey expressed hope that recent action by President Eisenhower may indicate progress toward "a more humane and realistic panamericanism."

"The Latin American visit of President Eisenhower, as well as State D partment officials and U. S. industrial representatives, may suggest a serious purpose of increasing our economic relationship," Casey said, "but the Rio de Janeiro conference has shown that the U. S. has not decided yet to accept South American nations on equal footing."

Casey has written five books, including Two Centuries of American Poetry, and "History of American Literature, to be published in Buenos Aires this spring. He has also translated the works of 160 American poets into Spanish and has given lectures throughout Argentina on American literature and ideas.

At present he is doing research on contemporary American novelists, including Dos Passos, Bromfield, Steinbeck and Upton Sinclair.

Casey began his lecture tour in Lima, Peru, and visited Panama and Cuba before reaching Miami. From Chapel Hill he has gone to Charlottesville, Va., to address University of Virginia students and then on to Washington, D. C.

'Adventures In Folk Music' Set In Hill Hall Feb. 22

Adventures in Folk Music," under the direction of Professor Jan P. Schinhan of the department of music, will be presented in Hill Hall Feb. 22 at 8 o'clock.

Dr. Schinhan will use recorded music in the first part of the program to illustrate a brief survey of non-European folk music.

He will be assisted by the Carrboro Boys' Choir, the Chapel Hill Boys' Choir, a choral group from the University and soloists for the remainder of the program on folk music of North Carolina. In the second part of the program, the singers will perform folk tunes a cappella and in unison and melodies arranged for accompanied and solo.

Born in Austria, graduate of the Academy of Music in Munich, the University of California and the Universty of Venna, Dr. Schinhan came to North Carolina in 1935. He is head of the organ department here and also teaches theory and courses in musicology. At present he is editing The Music of the Ballads and Folk Songs, volume four of the Frank C. Brown Collection of North Carolina Folklore.

The New Petition

The circulation of petitions will not, it is true, lead men to accept racial equality. But the student petition calling on North Carolina to accept the Supreme Court's segregation decision deserves your signature.

It deserves your signature because it is an effective repudiation of the idea in the minds of some North Carolinians that University students and faculty members are all opposed to integration. That idea was born with the widely publicized petitions of Dr. W. C. George and the prosegregation student petition delivered recently to Governor Hodges.

It deserves your signature because what it calls for is nothing more than the obeying of the law of the land.

In its first day of circulation, the petition met with a surprising and heartening number of enthusiastic signers. There seems to be little doubt that it will far surpass in its number of names the prosegregation petition.

In Chapel Hill, where dissent against bigotry is traditional, that is as it should be.

Critic—Or Slave?

"The chief danger confronting education today is not its possible domination by church or state, but the temptation to become subservient to the business culture that rules America."

This sentence comes from a speech delivered in Providence, Rhode Island earlier this month by the president of Harvard, Dr. Nathan Pusey.

"Universities," said Dr. Pusey, "are not the creatures of modern industrial society and should not be enslaved to that society."

President Pusey is right. From the Middle Ages the university has been a kind of independent third force between church and state. It has always had to battle against threats and pressures from both and against other forces that are always working to make the university conform itself to the world. Universities have often been hard-pressed—as they are today—to keep from becoming subservient to the culture in which they find themselves.

That they must not become subservient would seem to be self-evident. The university is properly conceived as a critic—not a slave—of society. It is a force always calling for fresh endeavor and pointing the way to a higher road, a better life. It cannot perform that role as an underling of the modern church, the modern state, or modern business.

The danger to American universities is clear, and is apt to grow as they look increasingly to business and industry for the money they need for sustenance. Even at state universities such as this one, the problem is felt: how many inroads can business make? How much support and control can be countenanced from business?

The answer, frustrating to those who must make the wheels go around, build new buildings and pay faculty members is—not much. For if a university is to lose its freedom or any considerable amount of its freedom it can no longer perform as a critic, a leader, and it will no longer be a university.

The danger of encroachment from church and state have come to be well recognized; the threat from organized business (or any other organized group in society) is also clear to most educators.

"It is not time not," as Dr. Pusey asked, "to hammer out a fresh justification for the university in modern society that will give it a sense of direction, and at the same time save it from excessive preoccupation with the ordinary in life and from idolatrous service of economic activity?"

Tell Me When You Begin That 'Political Junk'

Louis Kraar

"I WISH you'd tell me when the paper is going to start running the campus political junk so I can quit reading it then."

That's what a student said on campus the other day. I laughed at the time because campus politics have always seemed to me too amusing to miss.

But later I realized that this student was cheating himself out of having a say in spending money — his money.

Every spring I hear students griping about those "damn campus politicians." It has at last occurred to me that they don't realize what a hand those politicians have in their pockets.

★

WITHOUT A doubt the most important thing the student Legislature and student government in general do is to "levy and collect all student fees except athletic fees."

The quotes are from the student constitution, which goes on to list other powers of student government.

The student Legislature decides what "offenses against the student body" are and provides for their punishment. In other words, they decide the working rules for the University in regard to the Campus Code and Honor System.

All funds for student activities — publications, the Forum, Graham Memorial — are doled out by the Legislature.

Thus, to the debunkers of student government I offer these things — the student politicians spend your money and they make the laws under which you stay in school (or become kicked out of school).

Next question?

IT'S TRUE that the campus has a circle of students who concentrate every moment of their spart time into campus political activity. These people are the campus politicians.

Some are leaders, some are ridiculous, and most of them are interesting people. Many like to tell themselves that they are dedicated to "doing something for the students," but most of them simply enjoy politics.

This is not to say that many aren't interested in bettering the University. It's just that their love of politics is the main motivation for participation.

The Student Party, despite shouts to the contrary from its members, is primarily a dormitory party. Of course, the SP contains many fraternity members, but most of its time, legislation, and efforts is directed to the dorm element of Carolina.

On the other hand, the University Party is made up mainly of fraternities and sororities. This year UP representation in the dorms has hit a new high. Thus, like the SP, the UP isn't strictly one class of students. But — at the same time—most of its members belong to fraternities and sororities.

★

NEXT YOU may ask me, "What has student government done this year?

Actually, this reporter believes this school year has been a rather dull one in student government circles.

The Forum, publications, Graham Memorial, and other student activities have rocked along with usual vigor — all financed on money from the student Legislature.

A battle over the question of first-offense leniency in cheating cases did much to inform the campus on the nature of the Honor System. A student vote indicated that the campus didn't desire first-offense leniency, but at least students had their choice.

I could go on and on, but why bore students with "that campus political junk?" It's only their money and the laws they live under that are involved.

All These Things, These Moods

What Is North Carolina?

The Charlotte News

What is North Carolina? she asked. Is it a 'cropper's house on the edge of a field? Is it the rusty cough of a 'lint head'? Is it Jim Crow hiding in the rear of a bus? Is it crowded prisons and road gangs and murder in Harnett? Is it a 'Gastonia incident'. Is it the homeless and the hungry and the cold?

Her voice mingled with the heavy metallic drone of the engine. The car sped over a wide, black satin ribbon of highway, rolling and tumbling westward from Raleigh.

The sky was yellow with sunset and she squinted into it, all the time talking of leaving the South and going home to the North. It had been a revisit to Raleigh which now lay miles behind her. Off to the left were the Sandhills, to the right a rise called Chapel Hill. Ahead were Liberty and Asheboro and Concord and Charlotte.

Is North Carolina these things? she questioned.

Yes, she was told, they are North Carolina too.

But North Carolina is also Virginia Dare and Kings Mountain, the Courthouse at Hillsboro, Reconstruction, Buck Duke and Billy Graham, Green and Odum, and Kay Kyser. It is the folk music in the mountains and the rollicking chanties of the Outer Banks.

It is the hum and the whir of looms, the pungent odor of tobacco, the bent fields of grain, a harvest of strawberries, factory smoke and honking horns, a Bible class at Gardner-Webb and an atom smasher at State College.

It is a sociologist explaining away our foibles and a professor discussing ESP, it is vast medical centers and a horse doctor, it is muddy spring roads of orange and hot, brown summer days.

It is a debutante ball and a barefooted boy, steaming factories and airconditioned offices, it is a pot-bellied stove in a one-room school house and a sprawling school plant in a large city.

It is an orator from Buncombe, a barber from the east in the Assembly, it is a high school girls' basketball team and a national champion, a prize-winning poet and great illiteracy, it is a novelist and a songwriter and 30,000 people singing on the side of a mountain.

It is fancy cloths of synthetic yarns, an apron from a flour sack. It is a hiyhway heavy with people to see the scenery and a '32 Ford twisted with six dead.

It is a mind—a troubled, restless, unhappy mind fighting for life. It, too, is a confident, hardworking, happy mind.

All these things, all these moods—all of this is North Carolina.

Then the sun fell behind a distant hill and the evening was still and red.

And she said, I see, I see.

'What's Good For General Motors —'

The Administration & Union Unity

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON — The merger of the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations is a defensive action. Former President Truman struck the keynote for it on Labor Day, 1953, when he warned:

"If you don't hang together in this present situation there will be some people only too eager to hang you separately."

The Eisenhower Administration has contributed materially though negatively to the new unity.

Labor believes that the wind from the present White House is decidedly chilly. They do not expect it to change, since their observations convince them that Treasury Secretary Humphrey and Commerce Secretary Weeks have vastly more influence with the President than Secretary of Labor Mitchell.

For example, Secretary Mitchell attacked the right-to-work laws of the states which are the pet hates of all unions. The White House hastily backed away, and that cause seems lost.

How much the Administratoin can be blamed for labor's present difficulties will be disputed. But it is a fact that the drive to organize workers has slowed down. This is not because so much has been done; only about a third of non-agricultural workers in the nation are unionized, and some major industries —chemicals, for example—have not been penetrated at all.

In Congress labor has been getting nowhere fast. This has been true since Republicans captured the 80th Congress during the last half of Truman's first term. It looks now as if it would be true still, in spite of the fact that Democrats have weighed their labor committees in labor's favor.

For that legacy of the New Deal years will remain with the new labor movement. The trade unions of the United States will continue to take political action on a national scale.

The CIO theorists have lost their battle for a labor party. The national labor newspaper they once plugged for seems nowhere in sight. The present practical compromise of a loose alliance with the Democrats, with local support where indicated for Republicans, will remain.

An early test of how militant the new labor group will be should soon be forthcoming. Some big wage disputes are coming up, including a demand for a guaranteed annual wage by automobile and steel workers. So far the President has been lucky in that no big strikes have occurred to exacerbate his relations with the unions, but it may not last.

Little Man On Campus

Reaction Piece

'Way Of Life', Religion & H. Matusow

David Mundy

The typical "Carolina Gentleman" is supposed to spend his afternoons either sleeping, at the movies, or in an uptown pub; preferably the Goody Shop. Nights are supposedly devoted to fraternity frolicking and/or escapades having to do with some Durham "emporiums of delight." At least, this is an impression held by some alumni writers, and parents who are unduly alarmed.

But there exists another facet, and a contrasting one, to the "Carolina Way of Life." This is the interest shown in "religion," to use a fairly free terminology. To a few on campus it is "corn-ball stuff." The great majority largely ignores the subject. The pressure of studies to a few, campus politics, and social life all combine to force religion out of the lives of most students.

But religious interests do manifest themselves. This summer, groups of two and three dozen even had weekly "Bible Studies" in some of the dorms.

Those who participate in the student church groups, the 'Y', and the few who are really concerned about a religious faith are probably as numerically large as the "hotbloods" who are supposed to give the University its "country club" reputation.

Why don't these people then make more of an impression on campus life —— or at least on the general impression of what campus life is?

According to a little pamphlet received last week, that will be one of the questions discussed this weekend at Camp New Hope, when a group of collegiate Christians assemble for what the pamphlet terms a "Midwinter Weekend." The theme: "Every Christian a Missionary."

The titles of the talks and discussion topics would sound almost ludicrous to one schooled in the supposed "Carolnia Tradition." "Ambassador for the King of Kings, The Source of Daily Strength, Living in Fellowship with Others, and The Campus as a Mission Field" are the items to be discussed.

The Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship, sponsors of the meeting, may yet affect the campus enough to partially change its general reputation as a place of "high living." The members of the IVCF at least have a challenge, if not the capabilities.

★

A change of thought to the field of national politics might seem rather abrupt, but it is part of the same trend. Wondering about people's religious beliefs easily changes into wonderment about their 'ethical' behaviour in the field of politics.

Actual corruption, Kansas City fashion, and vote "irregularities," Ninth District fashion, worry be considerably less than the intellectual dishonesty of the more vocal members of the political "left," the self-labeled "liberals."

Their handling of the Matusow confession is indicative of their behaviour. When Matusow admitted to perjuring himself when giving testimony against Communists the liberals reacted strongly.

Characteristic was a Herblock cartoon, which was of course carried in the DTH. The caption: "This Could Spoil the Whole Racket, Men." Signs posted around an office inhabited by four shady-looking men went like this: "Testimony to order. No job too small. You name the victim and we do the rest." "We can remember anything to fit. Word rates."

A sign, "Association of Professional Ex-Communists" of course carries the cartoon's implications to all those ex-Communists who have offered testimony about their former associates. Naturally, Matusow's lies are to be deplored as are all lies.

But the liberals gave quite another treatment to one of their number, another liar who was caught in his own fabrications about former associates. But was this 'purveyor of untruths to congressional committees' stigmatized as such by the liberals.

Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse see imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others.—Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was crowded close to a table-tennis layout, his hammer head swiveling right and left, right and left, right and left. I was puzzled, because there were no players present, no pingpong ball pinging and ponging.

"This is the way you watch contests of this sort," The Horse explained. "Haven't you ever watched folk watching tennis, table—or grass or clay-tennis?"

To be sure. But nobody was playing!

"I studied Journalism," The Horse shrugged. "It is s. o. p. in Journalism, it would seem, to disregard such trivia as genoowine presences."

I thought this was a non-sequitur.

"No-o," The Horse jujdged, his eight-balls of eyes still round on the non-existent contest. "But some Journalism would seem to require non-sequitures, as well as imaginary conflicts; or don't you follow the news and observers of such fetid press misreportings?"

Didn't The Horse have a word for this sort of thing: Churlism . . . instead of Journalism?

"That was coined for such jackassininities as publishing the nauseous details of revolting crimes, and piously mouthing apophthegms anent truthful reporting," The Horse snorted. "But the lecherous leer winked through the linotyped grummels of indecency. What I refer to now is the studied lie, the half truth, the sophomorical sophistries, the loaded questions, the hypocritical answers. And all in the interests of fighting a bugbear that is as chimerical as this table-tennis game that I am watching and that is not going on."

Oh, oh Was this the Undercover War against Educational Television, again?

"oor O'Richard said, 'Love your enemies: they tell you your faults.,' " The Horse declaimed, ducking an imaginary wild ball. "But he didn't say a word about the alleged friends who sweet-talk you out of one corner of their mouths while they lie out of the other corner about you."

Tut-tut, Horsie, ol' hoss, tut-tut! Or, could he cite chapter and verse?

"On the hypocritical 'friend' pose, yes," The Horse snapped. "And it is all done under the silly disguise of The Unfettered Press. This greeeeeeeat, greeeeeeeat 'friend' who brags of matriculation at our noble seat of North State Cultoor & Erudition also supports a column which basely and without a vestige of truth calls us Commies, and tosses in a cheap appeal to prejudice by tagging a lot of us as Furriners."

Well . . . The Horse did admit he was a boreal equine, no? Or, no?

"You're durn right I am," The Horse stated loudly. "By birth. And I moved to where I wanted to, I didn't just land here by the accident of birth. Item Two—the ostrichlike mewings and droolings which perhaps hope to maintain a stern view of friendliness whilst the birdbrained head of the creature chirrups the childish sophistries."

Facts, please? .

"Well, a recent example of stupidiana is the pious deplorings that poooooooooooooor State College hasn't enough mney to distribute the books they have in their library; But—there is money for Edoocational TV!" The Horse exemplified. "A further spot of such bilge is the sanctimonious deplorinb that poooooooooooor Women's College lacks money for someadditional building; But—there is money for Edoocational TV: A third and even snider sophistry is the statement that 'by an odd coincidence' the money asked to propagate Edoocational TV is almost EXACTLY the sum by which old-age pensions must be curtailed this year."

Well, was this true? Any or all of it?

"In so far as figures are concerned, yes," The Horse admittted. "It would be just as true, perhaps, to compute the monies this and other publishers gain by free-loading in below-cost mailing charges for their papers and matching it against what Federal Pensions would benefit if they paid cheek-by-jowl with ordinary users' of the mail. Or, you might compute the monie s they spend personally these publishers, on personal goods, and cry out that if they were to give this money to one or a dozen different and deserving causes, the state would not hav to cut old-age pensions, or welfare payments. Carry it to its ultimate absurdity, and you would have exactly what the Russians have—a dictated economy where rationally thinking men cannot pick and choose, in Representative Republic processes, how and where and why they want money spent here instead or there; or the other place."

Well, it was a frec country. And freedom of the press permitted a publisher to say his bit.

"That is Roger-Dodger," The Horse affirmed. "You are R-5, S-5. Your signal is loud and clear. What we, meaning myself, gripe about is that for some baffling reason, this greeeeeeeeat and goooooooooood frind apparently hasn't the intestinal fortitude to come out flatfootedly and honestmouthedly speak his bit. Doubtless lusting to drink Edoocational TV's blood, he also lusts for good advertising lineage . . . and fears to offend the big industrialists and tycoons who so generously gave of their time and money to test—without cost to the state!—the edoocational possibilities of TV, as contrasted with the formal and cloistered schooling known heretofore as the only way to get the people of a state edoocated. All I object to is the pose of friendship while the knife is driven under the trusting toga. I hate a mealymouth, and I never yet knew one who was a good publisher or who put out a good paper. We are not gazing upon any exception here. But the real pity of it is, it is all so baseless, this fear—for such it is—that TV means the deathknell of newspapers. A smart publisher would study the gimmick that is TV and find a place to catch hold and boost his circulation. There are a dozen ways to ride with the tide; so why buck it?"

Didn't fish swim up waterfalls, Horsie?

"You got something there, Roger me bhoy," The Horse grinned. "But I'm durned if I ever read a newspaper put out by fish. Not knowingly, that is. Well, one thing is sure. Poor Richard said, 'A false friend and a shadow attend only while the sun shines.' And if you think he is off his rocker—you just ain't watching Edoocational TV."

Mr. Wump wasn't about, so I said it for him:

UNC Seeks To Snap Slump At Wake Forest Tonight

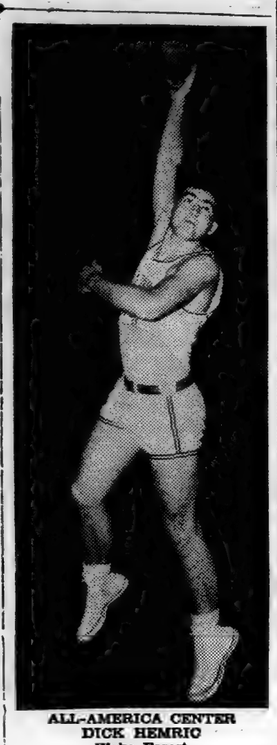
Varsity Contest To Be Preceded By Deaclet-Tar Baby Preliminary

McGuire Says Law Of Averages Just Caught Up With Varsity During Past Three Defeats

Coach Frank McGuire's Tar Heels, who have lost three consecutive games, will seek to pull out of their slump tonight when they invade Baptist Hollow to take on the Wake Forest Demon Deacons.

The game, to be preceeded by a freshman preliminary between the Tar Babies and Deaclets, will get under way at 8:15 o'clock.

Despite Carolina's loss of three straight, Coach McGuire feels that the team has snapped out of its lethargic mood and is ready once again to play ball comparable to the days before Christmas. Then the Tar Heels were red hot.



McGuire bases this opnion on his team's showing Saturday night against Maryland when Carolina battled the Terrapins down to the wire before dropping a 63-61 decision. With 30 seconds to go, the team led Maryland by one point.

"I think that the law of averages just caught up with us for a while," McGuire said after the Maryland defeat. "Wake Forest will be tough, especially on their home court (Gore Gymnasium). It will be a dog-fight, but I think we will do okay."

THE TAR HEELS beat the Deacons in Gore Gym last season, and won another from Wake Forest in Chapel Hill last month by a 95-78 count.

At the time of the most recent game between the two foes, it was said that Carolina was not a running team, but the Tar Heels abandoned their possession play and practically ran the Deacs off the court.

The starting line-ups for the two teams tonight will be unchanged. Wake Forest will open with Dickie Hemric, Jackie Murdock, Lefty Davis, Maurice George and Ernie Wiggins. Carolina will start Len Rosenbluth, Jerry Vayda, Bob Young, Al Lifson and Tony Radovich.

Grid Practice Postponed 'Til Next Monday

Spring football practice, originally slated to begin tomorrow, has been postponed until Monday, with the first session scheduled at 4 o'clock.

Equipment for the workouts, which will continue until the annual Blue-White game March 19, will be issued on that date.

For the main, the sessions will be devoted to fundamentals — tackling, blocking and defense. Pass defense will receive a large part of the attention devoted to defense, as eight of the 10 teams on the Carolina schedule next year use the T or Split-T type offense. The two which do not are Tennessee, which employs a single wing with an unbalanced line, and North Carolina State, which uses a multiple type offense.

Coach George Barclay said, "We've got a lot of work to do, because of inexperience on the part of some of the boys, and this is probably the toughest schedule Carolina has ever played."

Barclay also stated that he would welcome anyone who wished to try out for the squad, and give them ample opportunity to prove their ability during the ensuing workouts.

ANYONE WHO wishes to try out should see Coach Barclay between now and Monday in Woollen Gym.

Injuries, which befell some of the freshmen players last season, have been for the most part pronounced cured and the players ready for action. Freshman players Wally Vale and Jimmy Jones, forced to miss most of last year's games, are ready to play. However, the future of Leo Russavage and Nick Marcopolous is still indefinite. Russavage received a severe charley horse in his knee last season, and Marcopolous is awaiting doctor's decision as to whether he will be able to play.

"We need work especially on our guards, fullbacks and quarterbacks," said Barclay. The end positions appear to be well taken case of, with Will Frye, Darden Livesy, Norman Lane and Larry Muschamp returning from last year's squad, and freshmen Paul Pulley and Buddy Payne up for a crack at the varsity.

Candidates for the quarterback position are Doug Farmer and Len Bullock from last year's squad, and freshmen Buddy Sasser, David Reid and Ron Marquette. The size of Sasser, the 160 lb. former high school all-american doesn't seem to worry Barclay, who believes that his speed will off-set his lack of brawn.

Fencers In Triple Meet Here Sat.

The Carolina fencing team will tangle with swordsmen from State College and the Augusta Military Academy in a three-way meet to be held in Woollen Gym Saturday.

This will be Carolina's first contest of the year. The Tar Heel fencers have been holding daily practice sessions in preparation for Saturday's meet. Both State and Augusta have strong squads and should give the Tar Heels a rough opening assignment.

The first meet is slated for 1 o'clock and will pit State against Augusta. Carolina will then battle State at 3:30. The nightcap will begin at 7 o'clock when the Tar Heels take on Augusta.

Swedish Gym Troupe Appear Here March 2

This year the troupe includes the Swedish women who won a gold medal in the 1952 Olympics. Miss Ann-Sofi Pettersson, rated Sweden's best, is leader of the women's team and holder of two world's championships.

Athlete of the Week!

With 13 Points, Hudson Topped Scoring As UNC Downed Tech

Gordon Hudson, outstanding Carolina gymnast, has been selected as "Athlete of the Week" by The Daily Tar Heel sports staff for his performance against Georgia Tech last Saturday.

He scored a first on the parallel bars, second on the side horse and third on the high bar for a total of 13 points as the Tar Heels turned back the Georgians, 58½-36½.

This personable and versatile athlete is a 21-year-old senior from Winston-Salem. The effortless ease he displays is deceptive, for he makes the most difficult feats seem easy. It is this same grace and poise that has made him such a consistent winner.

LAST YEAR Hudson set a UNC all-time scoring record, garnering 106 points for the season. For the last three years he has been the mainstay of the Carolina team, being the leading point-producer each year.

His consistency and versatility have caused gymnastics Coach Bill Meade to say of him, "He is the best gymnast I've ever had, and probably one of the best natives in the South.

Meade has high hopes for Hudson in the Southern Intercollegiate Gymnastics Championships to be held at Georgia Tech next month. The coach feels that Hudson will be one of the best men competing in the meet.

Blue Devils Begin Spring Grid Drills

DURHAM, N. C., Feb. 15. (AP)—A squad of 75 hopefuls reported to head coach Bill Murray as Duke University's Orange Bowl champions started off-season drills with a brisk workout here today.

Coach Murray said that most of the work would be on fundamentals and the problem of working the freshmen into the varsity squad.

Two Redskin Players Jump To Canada

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15. (AP)—Two star tackles who formerly played at the University of Maryland jumped the Washington Redskins today and signed contracts with the Calgary club of the Canadian Football League.

George Preston Marshall, the Redskin owner, said he hadn't decided yet whether or not to bring any legal action against the players, Dick "Little Mo" Modzelewski and Bob Morgan. But he had this to say of them:

"Both obviously have no respect for their agreements. Evidently, the University of Maryland has no course in contractual relations."

Modzelewski said in a telephone interview that "We will get much more than what we've been getting."

House For Warrantless Arrest

RALEIGH, Feb. 15 (AP)—While the Senate received a bill to provide collection of state income taxes through payroll deductions, the House today passed a measure giving officers authority to arrest without warrants in misdemeanor cases.

Sen. David M. Hall of Jackson and seven other senators introduced the "pay-as-you-go" income tax collection proposal. Revenue Commissioner Eugene Shaw, who had suggested it earlier, has estimated it would boost collections by more than two million dollars yearly.

A long wrangle preceded House passage of the bill authorizing misdemeanor arrests without warrants. Three amendments were offered and tabled before it was passed.

The bill now goes back to the Senate, which had passed it earlier, for approval of House amendments adopted in committee.

REALIGNMENT

Other highlights of legislative action included a hearing on a bill to realign and increase the number of judicial districts to provide additional Superior Court judges. A group of Eastern North Carolina lawyers raised objections to the measure prepared by the State Judicial Council.

Hall's bill would provide a state system similar to the method used to collect federal income taxes. Deductions would cover the approximate amount of income tax which would be due at the end of the year. Taxpayers would either receive a refund or pay additional tax after filing their returns.

The plan would become effective next Jan. 1. Employers would pay in tax money withheld in quarterly payments.

Hall said the estimate of two million made by Shaw would be the minimum increase resulting from the plan. He added it would reach "tens of thousands" of persons who have evaided income tax collections.

WINDFALL

In addition, Hall predicted the plan would result in a "windfall." to the state of more than 18 million during the next two years through collection of income taxes sooner than they would have been collected under the old system of paying taxes in the year following the year in which the income was earned.

At present, the great bulk of individual income tax money pours in during March. The new system would spread collection throughout the year.

Most persons whose income is not derived from wages would be required to file an estimate of their income and pay their taxes in installments on the basis of their estimates.

ARREST BILL

The arrest powers bill was recommended by the State Judicial Council to clear confusion which resulted from a State Supreme Court decision last year. The court said officers could arrest without a warrant only where a "breach of the peace" had occurred, even if the misdemeanor were committed in the officer's presence.

The proposed law would give officers authority to make arrests for misdemeanors committed in their presence and where they have "reasonable ground to believe" a misdemeanor had been committed in their presence.

WHAMMY

Meanwhile, House Judiciary Committee 1 prepared to act Thursday on legislation to limit the Highway Patrol use of its electronic speed detection equipment—nicknamed the "whammy." The committee today delayed consideration of the measure until Thursday so that Motor Vehicles Commissioner Ed Scheidt can be on hand to oppose the bill.

The measure would require the "whammies" to be operated in full view of motorists and would not permit "whammy" evidence to be introduced in court unless there were expert testimony to show the devices were proprly installed and in good working condition.

UNC Prof Participates In Corporation Confab

RALEIGH, Feb. 15. (AP)—An attempt to rewrite the state's corporation laws to deter Tar Heel businessmen from running to such states as Delaware to escape the jurisdiction of the laws and courts of North Carolina was questioned by former House Speaker E. T. Bost today as "an invasion of rights."

Bost's question brought one of the first signs of life to the tedious briefing sessions of the bulky revision proposed to the state's statutes relating to corporations. The Senate Judiciary I and House Corporations Committees began listening to the briefings last Tuesday.

Bost questioned the desirability of passing a law which would hinder North Carolinians from incorporating in New Jersey or Delaware "if they found North Carolina laws undesirable."

He pointed to R. J. Reynolds Co., Liggett and Myers and Duke Power Co. "both New Jersey corporations."

"If these companies had not been able to organize in another state," said Bost. "They probably would not have been able to grow and prosper as they have."

Professors E. R. Latty of Duke, and Professor M. S. Breckenridge of the University of North Carolina, jumped to their feet when Bost raised his question. The two law professors, who helped draft the proposed bill, had been conducting the briefings.

Latty said that Bost was, in effect, condoning the present laws which permit businessmen to do substantially all their business in North Carolina while 'thumbing their noses" at the state's laws.

Breckenridge said the old practice of "going to Delaware" is a "wholly ficticious performance."

"There is nothing harsh in this proposed act," he said, "and if there is it can be amended."

Latty stressed the point that these "pseudo-foreign corporations" now in existence would not be effected by the proposed law; it would effect only future corporations, he said.

COMFORT & CHEER

"Wherever life ebbs away from lack of blood, or hospitals need volunteers, or a drowning child is being brought to safety and life, or a word of cheer is needed for soldiers in camps here and in some distant land, or good offices are needed to get a message or a loan or a lift in a desperate situation or a tragic hour, there, seeks to be, the Red Cross, lending a hand of comfort and cheer."

Dr. Graham traced highlights of Red Cross history, almost 100 years old in international scope, and existent in the U. S. since the Civil War.

"The great dynamic international framework," he said, "which brings us the news from all the states and all the continents has made necessary the local, national and international Red Cross to give us the way to lend a hand across the street, across the tracks, across the nation and across the ocean."

GRAY

Gray days are impending if President 'Gray's psychology course takes the tack it might. The editor's wild conjectures are in the editorial column, p. 2.

Wolf Says Article Gave Wrong Idea

A Student Party leader who was quoted in Wednesday's edition of The Daily Tar Heel as saying that "the Student Party has completely failed in its effort this year to carry out an effective student government, primarily, because we have been torn by an internal struggle for power" said in a written statement yesterday that the article in which he was quoted as saying this left "false impressions."

The article, written by Staff Reporter Neil Bass, also quoted SP leader Charlie Wolf as saying that leadership of the Student Party has been "ineffective and lacking in unity, without an unselfish and keen interest in the betterment of the student body," and as saying that student body President Tom Creasy "has been and is a poor executive."

Wolf in his statement yesterday said "Due to the false impressions left by Bass in his article on the Student Party (Wednesday) I must clarify my position to set the record straight."

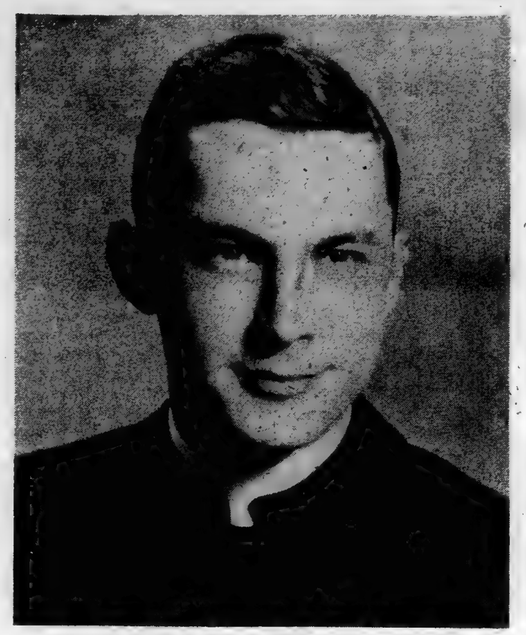
'NOT PERFECT'

Concerning the statement he was quoted as making about the Student Party, he said, "The Student Party is not perfect.

"Granted. But it is the student's best bet for achieving constructive and energtic student government.

"The Student Party has faults and shortcomings.

"Granted. But it is constantly striving to overcome them and give the students the kind of student government they deserve: the best."



Concerning the statement he was reported to have made about SP leadership, Wolf said, "The Student Party needs leadership.

"Granted. It will always need leadership of the highest caliber to put across its plans for improving student government and student life."

In connection with what he was quoted as saying about Tom Creasy, Wolf said yesterday, "Creasy is a 'poor executive.'

"He has attempted to carry the burdens of student government by himself and has neglected his 'bipartisan' cabinet. The SP has a responsibility to forward student government, in or out of office, and should work with President Creasy in every way possible."

Wolf concluded his statement, "There are many things wrong with the Student Party. But there are many more things right with the Student Party. It remains the most interested and vigorous student government, and deserves the support of every student to help it succeed."

Dorm Improvements Bill To Get Consideration Tonight

Far East Talk Set At 8:30

Problems of American foreign policy in the Far East will be the topic on which Professor Ralph Braibanti of Duke University will speak tonight in an open meeting of Pi Sigma Alpha, political science fraternity.

The meeting will be held at 8:30 in the assembly room of the Library.

Dr. Braibanti, a native of Connecticut, holds academic degrees from Connecticut State College and Syracuse University.

Separation Of Powers Bill To Hit Legislature

By NEIL BASS

While tonight's convening of the student Legislature will be more or less "the calm after the storm," there is still some important legislation to come before the group.

The "storm" was last Thursday night's argumentative session, during which the lawmakers cleared their agenda. The relative "calm" which the next few meetings will probably experience is the result of a concentration of effort on the part of both parties to the planning of forthcoming elections.

Both the Student and University Parties will begin their nominations next week. The SP will select its candidates for legislative posts in Dorm Men's I, II, III, V and Dorm Women's Districts at a Monday -night session. The UP will name its nominees for seats in Dorm Men's I, II, III, IV, V and Dorm Women's Districts in a Tuesday night assembly.

The three measures that will be discussed by legislators tonight are all SP introduced. No bills will be brought before lawmakers with UP sponsorship.

Decisions will be handed down on SP bills calling for (1) The Student Welfare Board to "negotiate" with the administration toward getting certain "deplorable" conditions corrected in Battle-Vance-Pettigrew Dormitory and numerous "drastically needed" improvements made; (2) The appropriation of $90 to the Elections Board to "pay debts incurred by the purchasing of new ballot boxes in the fall elections," and (3) The prohibiting of any person from serving in more than one branch of student government at UNC.

The meeting is scheduled to get under way at 7:30 p.m.

Soprano House, Tenor Churchill Sing Tonight

Two University students, Soprano Patricia House and Tenor Robert Churchill, will give a junior recital tonight at 8 o'clock, in Hill Hall.

Eugene Hudson, piano major from Black Mountain, will accompany the singers, whose program will include works by Legrenzi, Caldaro, Chausson, Massenet, Faure and Gounod.

Both singers are students of Joel Carter, of the voice department, and have appeared in concert in Chapel Hill .

Miss House, junior education major from Roanoke Rapids, transferred to the University from Meredith College in September. She is an officer in the Woman's Glee Club, and sang the role of Barberina in the Music Department's recent production of "Marriage of Figaro."

Churchill, sophomore from Durham, is a student in the School of Radio and Television. Tenor soloist for the Congregational Christian Church choir in Durham, he also soloed with the Chapel Hill Choral Club in Handel's "Messiah," in December, 1953, and appeared in several Music Department recitals last spring.

Episcopal Mission Scheduled

The Rev. David Browning Collins, chaplain of the University of the South in Sewanee, Tenn., will deliver a series of four sermons in a mission to be held by Episcopal students here on the theme "Man's Need and God's Action."

The mission will be held at the Chapel of the Cross on Feb. 27, 28 and March 1. Each sermon will be followed by informal discussions led by Rev. Collins to be held in the Parish House.

The topics and dates of Rev. Collins' sermons are as follows: "Are You a Christian?" on Feb. 27 at 11 a.m.; "The Christian Believes" on Feb. 27 at 8:30 p.m.; "The Christian Worships" on Feb. 28 at 7:30 p.m., and "The Christian Works" on March 1 at 7:30 p.m.

The mission speaker was born in Hot Springs, Ark., the son of Rev. Charles Frederick Collins. He received his B.A. degree in 1943 and his B. D. degree in 1948, both from the University of the South.

Reverend Collins was a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Omicron Delta Kappa and Blue Key while at the University.

He was ordained deacon in 1948 and priest in 1949 by the Right Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, Bishop of Arkansas. Before becoming chaplain at Sewanee, he was deacon-in-charge and later rector of St. Andrew's Church, Marianna, Ark.

During World War II, Reverend Collins served in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant, junior grade, as a communications officer for the armed guard units.

Textile Man Asks Aid For Ill-Clothed Billions

PINEHURST, Feb. 16. (AP)—A new concept of U. S. foreign economic policy was advocated by a textile manufacturer here tonight aimed, he said, at helping the plight of a billion or more of the world's ill-fed and ill-clothed people.

H. K. Hallett of Charlotte emphasized, however, that elimination or lowering of tariffs would never accomplish such a purpose. In fact, he said, even if all tariffs were wiped out the basic elements of world trade distortion would still remain.

He told the annual Cotton Research Clinic of the National Cotton Council that a "concentration of fire-power on the much-maligned U. S. tariff structure" is only encouraging the flow of textiles from other manufacturing nations to the abundant U. S. market while regions where clothing is desperately needed are bypassed.

And he added that proposed further cutting of U. S. tariffs while the rest of the nations build their trade walls higher must mean, sooner or later, the demolition of the U. S. textile industry.

Hallett, a former president of the American Cotton Manufacturers Institute said however, that if a realistic or "positive" policy could be carried out, there would not be fields enough in the world to produce enough cotton nor enough looms to make the cloth.

Such a policy, he told the research men, would aim at ending such "subterfuges" as the network of artificial trade barriers outside of North America and seek to encourage under-developed countries to put their economic houses in order.

College Mags, Papers May Be Censored

The Coraddi incident, which involved a nude male's picture in a Woman's College magazine, may lead to a law requiring faculty advisors for all publications of state-supported colleges.

Burke Davis, state Legislature correspondent for The Greensboro Daily News, said in his "Raleigh Notebook" column yesterday that "There is talk among the Assembly even yet about the Coraddi affairs on (the WC) campus, and general denunciation of the appearance of the nude male drawing in the magazine.

"One member," wrote Davis, "evidently in dead earnest, speaks of having a bill drawn which would require faculty advisors for all publications at state-supported colleges."

Davis, reached for comment yesterday, said he knew the legislator who made the suggestion, but that he was unavailable.

Money Requests

All organizations desiring an allotment of appropriations from the 1955-56 student government budget must have their requests in the student government office by March 1, according to Don Fowler, student body treasurer.

Correction

Due to an error made in yesterday's edition of The Daily Tar Heel, the petition sponsored by student Ron Levin which is now being circulated on the campus was said to be pro-segregation.

The petition, however, calls for the state Legislature to support the Supreme Court's ruling against segregation in public schools "by appropriate legislative action."

Shiny New GM Coffee Machine Has A Big Green Brother Now

The shiny new coffee machine recently installed in the kitchen of Graham Memorial now has a companion—a big green sandwich dispenser, which will be ready for use just as soon as it can be installed and filled.

The machine, which is being rented for $7 per month, will eliminate losses caused by people who have been helping themselves to sandwiches and "forgetting" to pay for them, said GM Director Jim Wallace. Consequently, prices, raised to cover these losses, can now return to normal, he said. Sandwiches which were 25 cents will now be 20 cents, and those which cost 20 cents will drop to 15 cents. This will still give Graham Memorial about 2 cents profit on each sandwich—enough, Wallace hopes, to cover the cost of renting the machine, since daily sales average between 20 and 30.

The dispenser will hold four different types of sandwiches, but one of the spaces may be used for doughnuts, which will sell for a nickle each. The sandwiches will still be made by the same company, and kind of sandwich will probably be varied from day to day, according to Director Wallace.

Teaching To Be Discussed Tomorrow

"The Art and Science of Teaching" will be the subject of a panel discussion to be sponsored by the Graduate History Club tomorrow night at 8 o'clock in the Library assembly room.

The discussion, which will be open to the public, will consider the problems and skills of teaching in the humanities. The panel will be composed of faculty members and instructors from the departments of history, political science and education. They are Dr. James L. Godfrey, Dr. E. P. Douglass, Dr. Cary F. Brown, Robert David Ward and John De Grove.

IDC Court Finds 14 Of 16 Guilty

By DAVID L. WHITAKER
Clerk, Interdormitory Court

During the fall semester 14 of 17 defendants were found guilty by the Men's Interdormitory Court of offenses ranging from violation of quiet hours to destruction of dormitory property.

The Interdormitory Court was presided over by Don Scott, chairman. Thirteen of the defendants were charged with violating quiet hours. Of these, 10 were found guilty, two were found not guilty, and one case was considered too minor to be tried, with the defendant being given a warning without trial. Of the 10 found guilty, seven were placed on indefinite probation, two were given reprimands and one was ordered to move to another dormitory to separate him from his roommate.

DAMAGING PROPERTY

Two defendants were tried for damaging dormitory property. Finding both defendants guilty, the court placed them on indefinite probation.

In a case where the defendant was charged with breaking dormitory social rules by breaking bottles and burning newspapers in a dormitory, the court, finding the defendant guilty, placed him on indefinite probation.

10 OUT OF 14

The most common sentence was indefinite probation, occurring 10 times out of 14 sentences passed. When probation is passed, a notation is put on the student's record in pencil. After a minimum length of time, usually designated by the court, the student may apply to the court to have his probation lifted and erased from his record. A person on probation must have it lifted before he can graduate or is able to have his transcript transferred.

The work of the court has been greatly facilitated by the Investigating Committee newly set up by the Interdormitory Council at the beginning of the fall semester. The committee investigates cases reported to the court, sometimes interviewing six or eight people for one case, and presenting its findings to the court. It is largely because of the Investigating Committee that 14 of 17 cases tried were found guilty.

The Interdormitory Court is elected from members of the Interdormitory Council in the fall. The chairman and clerk are chosen by the council in the spring as set up by the new IDC bylaws. Serving on the court during the fall semester were Don Scott as chairman Dave Whitaker as clerk, Bill Maready, Bruce Morton, Larry Hinson, Shelton Alexander and Jack Shuford.

DEVELOPED AT STATE COLLEGE:

Orlon May Replace Human Arteries

RALEIGH, N, C, Feb. 16—(AP)—Orlon tubing may soon be used as substitutes for the human heart's principal artery—aorta and the Y-shaped aortic arch.

The artery substitute, which resembles a tiny knitted necktie, has been developed experimentally in the School of Textiles at North Carolina State College, officials revealed today.

It already has been used successfully as a substitute for the aorta in dogs. If successful in humans, it will be an historic milestone in medical science.

The idea was projected by two Charlotte heart specialists, Dr. Paul W. Sanger and Dr. Frederick H. Taylor. They approached Prof. W. E. Shinn, head of the College's Department of Knitting Technology about the idea.

Prof. Shinn, working with a modified necktie knitting machine, knitted orlon tubing in the exact dimensions of the human aorta and its accompanying aortic arch. The achievement may bring recovery to older people afflicted with aneurism, a permanent abnormal dilation of a blood vessel.

The orlon tubing, fashioned from one of Du Pont's fabled "miracle fibers," is not subject to chemical change, will not dissolve in body chemicals and gives promise of pulsing the vital blood through the human body for an indefinite period. One scientist in the School of Textiles at State College said the tubing "should last forever."

The knitted orlon tubing has minute holes in its surface which first cast doubt on its use as a blood vessel. But doctors have found that as the blood flows through the orlon tubing these tiny openings are permanently sealed by the coagulating blood.

Doctors first hit on the idea of using plastics for the artery substitute but found this material to be unsatisfactory. Dr. Sanger then conceived the plan to use the orlon tubing.

The Lineberger Foundation provided funds for the project, and Prof. Shinn modified the mechanism of the necktie machine to knit the orlon tubing the proper shape, size and quality to replace the aorta.

After Prof. Shinn successfully knitted the orlon in the shape of an aorta, he was asked to make a replacement for the aortic arch, a Y-shaped artery. He simply used the same necktie machine, adapting it to turn out the Y-shaped piece of orlon fabric in a process similar to that used in making gloves.

Aneurism, a disease striking older people, is a development of weak spots in the aorta. When this condition prevails, the blood moving through the aorta at high pressure oftentimes causes the aorta to break at these weak spots — like a blowout in an auto tire tube.

Artery replacements taken from deceased persons and stored in the nation's three artery banks have been used successfully but due to their short supply are not adequate for medical needs. These arteries also are not substantial in some cases and are, therefore, subject to deterioration.

If the orlon substitutes work, they can be produced on an unlimited scale and can be made available anywhere without the use of preservatives. They can be stored on shelves just like neckties and socks and can be just as plentiful.

Too Real . . .

An hour before the movie, flames swept the theatre, causing damage estimated at $18,000.

Noiselessly & Inconspicuously

"It seems to me," the professor said, "that this generation of students is lethargic."

It was 10 o'clock class in Caldwell. The professor was digressing from his lecture.

"The zeal for reform that has been present in students since Socrates' time seems somehow lacking," the professor said. He walked to the window and looked out.

"In the midst of great world tides," he said, "students today appear unconcerned. Perhaps they are afraid to think; perhaps they do not care to think."

He turned back to the class. "Students have traditionally been critics of their society and have helped bring progress to straight-laced cultures. But students today are hardly ever heard from. They seem uninterested in controversy, passive and inert and sleepy."

And the class, no longer taking notes, listened quietly.

Except for the student in the second row, whose head was down, his arms folded across his chest, his eyes closed.

He could hear nothing, because, noiselessly and inconspicuously, he had gone to sleep.

Please, Mr. Gray, Study That Psych!

The news that President Gray is taking a course in psychology assumes added significance when it is pointed out that his teacher is a visiting professor from Duke.

How did this happen, anyway? Did Mr. Gray sign up for the course intentionally, figuring these home-grown profs are too tough and hoping for a crip? Or did he just get fouled up in registration like the rest of us?

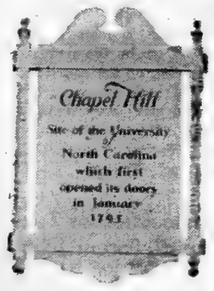
Another thing we'd like to know: What's going to happen when the grades come out next spring? Mr. Gray is risking one of Carolina's finest undergraduate averages in this bold venture. He's kept pretty busy these days playing papa to three big campuses and might not find time to hit the books sufficiently. So if he gets a D or an F, what then?

Well, it will louse up that average. But what we're most afraid of is the inter-institution crisis that will develop.

All the glib talk about Duke-Carolina warmth and cordiality will fade into the background. Mr. Gray, hot under the collar, will have his secretary ring up West Durham.

"Hollis," he will say, "Gordon. Now about this D. er . . ."

Perhaps it won't come to that. Maybe the boss will pass his exam, get his quality points, and everything will be all right.



But it's a scary situation just the same, and one we'd just as soon Mr. Gray hadn't gotten into.

Phi On You For Not Joining Earlier

The General Assembly of the Philanthropic Literary Society (founded 1795), better known as the Phi, an ancient and honorable debating organization, can use a few new members. It has been doing pretty recently, and the Phi figures it's because you don't know how painless and pleasurable it is to belong. Moral: If you like to engage in lusty argument, or just mostly sit and listen, go see the Phi upstairs in New East, any Tuesday night at 8.

No Talking While Grades Are Recorded

Louis Kraar

HAVE YOU ever wondered who puts those hand-written pencil marks on your report card?

I found the answer the other day when I came into Hanes Hall basement and saw six tables of women working. Grades are recorded by hand on a form that makes four carbon copies—one for the dean, one for student aid, one for central records, one for your folks, and one for yourself.

It takes the recorders about a week to mark all report cards. And from the looks of the women working at it, the job is tedious. A big sign overhead warns: "No conversation while recording grades." But coffee breaks are scheduled, according to another sign, at 1:30 and 3:30 in the afternoon.

★

CAROLINE COED, an anonymous young lady on campus who scribbles off critical letters to this reporter from time to time, came through yesterday with criticisms of "ponography" in this column.

Miss Coed said, "There are certain depths of ponography, I am told, below which even the writer of a collegiate newspaper column is loath to sink. Thank goodness you have finally reached this level, otherwise we would never have been enlightend on th subject of stenciled lingerie."

Although it might not occur to prim Caroline at the moment, most people living in the 1950's aren't offended by the mention of underwear in a peice of writing, provided the reference is not otherwise in bad taste.

And after all Caroline, even you have to mention them right out in public every time you purchase some of the unmentionables.

★

AFTER FALLING blindly for years in matters of love, the mental and physical phenomenon has been explained for the Carolina male and the world.

That oracle of fashions, pin-ups, and entertainment—Esquire magazine—has just served up the answer in an article called "Why Men Fall In Love."

According to Esquire, it's neither sex or sentimentalism that makes the male's heart throb. Instead, so say the psychiatrists, men fall in love because they are "suffering from internal discontent, feelings of guilt and anxiety."

Here's how it works, according to the analysts: Three conflicting forces rule man, "a subconscious image of the man you think you ought to be," a feeling that you're not measuring up to what you should, and the ego ("the man you think you are").

Thus, all a guy needs, say the psychiatrists, is some gal to make him think he's the guy he'd like to be. Falling in love, then, is sort of a truce with the three warring forces

★

NOTHING SOUNDS more unsentimental than the psychiatrists' description of love. So try another one offered by psychologists.

Summed up, the psychologists say: "Love is biological, normal, healthy, vigorous." This sounds a little better than the psychiatrists' version that says the whole business arises from guilt.

And neither explanation seems to measure up to the sentimental standards we're supposed to have.

I prefer Alistair Cooke's explanation of why men fall in love. When he was asked what made a man fall in love, he replied: "Of course, a woman."

Bahai—The New Faith

Ed Yoder

Walter R. Wooten, senior in public administration and industrial relations, has a unique mission on this campus.

He is the advocate, missionary, and teacher for the Bahai World Faith—a new, world-wide religious movement aiming at a conjunction into one of all the world's higher religions.

"World turmoil," Wooten said when I talked with him in the Graham Memorial lounge Tuesday, "is the signal of the death of an old era that has lost its spiritual power, and the birth of a new and golden age animated by the teachings of a new prophet of God."

That new prophet of God, believe Wooten and the other members of his faith, was Baha'u'llah, a Persian saint of the 19th Century who proclaimed himself the new Messiah.

The first chapter of the Bahai drama, according to Wooten, closed on July 9, 1850, when The Bab, the prophet of the coming of Baha'u'llah, was publicly shot before a firing squad of 750 men. According to Bahai teachings, the execution of the Bab was accompanied by a whirlwind. An earthquake and a cholera epidemic, both of which claimed thousands of Persian lives, came within short order.

The focus of events in the 1840's and 50's holds great importance in the Bahai scheme. It all hinges on the references in Revelation and Daniel of Biblical prophecy to the "1260 days." Both by reference to other passages and to logical mathematical computations, Wootten showed me (and will be glad to show you) that the years 1843 and 1844 can be arrived at.

These years have certain significance in United States religious history. Miller and his Millerites, believing an apocryphal event was at hand, moved out of society; in Germany, the Carmelites followed essentially the same pattern.

Bahai teachings also claims another strange coincidence. On May 23, 1844, supposedly the day upon which the Heraldic Bab appeared, Samuel F. B. Morse sent his famous first telegraph message, "What Hath God Wrought?"

Baha'u'llah, the "most High Manifestation of God," the second Messiah, was himself born in Teheran in 1817. His father was Minister of State under the Shah. He made his public declaration as a Messenger of God in Baghdad in the year 1863. George Townshend, one time Canon of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, Ireland, sometime Archbishop of Clonfert, now a convert to the Bahai faith, writes of Baha'u'llah's significance:

"He affirmed that His appearance fulfilled the promised return of Christ in the glory of the Father. He brought a Teaching which though ampler and fitted to a more advanced Age was in spirit and purpose the same as that of Christ. He revealed those 'other things' which Jesus told His disciples He had to give them but which they could 'not bear' at that time. His mission was to bring the work of Christ to its completion and realization, to reconstruct the social order of the world and build the long promised Kingdom of God in very fact."

Baha'u'llah, having made his identity known, was banished from Persia to Baghdad, where he gathered a large following; he was soon banished from Baghdad to Constantinople, from there to Akka, Palestine, across the Bay from Mt. Carmel. All years in prison during his life, together Baha'u'llah spent 40

History's Little Joke In The Tachen Islands

Joseph Alsop

TACHEN ISLANDS. If you want the real measure of what has happened to the Eisenhower administration and American foreign policy in the last two years, consider the story of those barren, controversial rocks—the Tachen Islands. It it were not so serious it would be a cosmic joke.

The background of the drama of the evacuation of the Tachens has been simple enough. It is no secret that for ten days or so, Chiang Kai-shek balked bitterly at making a present of the Tachens to the Communists. The Eisenhower administration had to press Chiang very hard indeed to take his troops off the Tachens before the Chinese Communists attackd them.

The joke lies in the fact that just two years ago, the shoe was on exactly the other foot.

Those were the brave early days of Eisenhower policy-making. There was no talk then of cease fires and peaceful co-existence and the like. Instead the watchwords were liberation, dynamic new foreign policy, recaptured initiative, and the "unleashing of Chiang Kai-shek."

President Eisenhower's dramatic announcement that after being wickedly held in check by the Truman administration, the Generalissimo had now been boldly unleashed by the Republicans, caused a wave of reaction that reached all the way to the rocky Tachens.

At that time, the islands were hardly more important than those which fought for Yikiangshan through close to three bloody days. The Formosa government considered the Tachens too distant from the main island to be covered by air or supplied by sea. The Generalissimo and his military advisers did not wish, therefore, to commit either their prestige or large components of their regular forces to the defense of the Tachens. In short, the islands were then being treated as expendable.

But President Eisenhower had given the watchword. Chiang Kai-shek was unleashed. The Tachens were doubly valuable, as a base for irregular guerrilla operations on the mainland, and as a forward radar warning point for both Formosa and Okinawa. So the American military advisory group on Formosa began pressing Chiang Kai-shek very hard to put regulars on the Tachens. This was one of the measures devised in Washington to give a little reality to the famous unleashing.

The Americans did not win their point with ease. The Generalissimo was extremely reluctant to put rgulars on the Tachens. Certain key Chinese military leaders, particularly the Chief of Staff of that period, Gen. Chou Chi-jo, resisted the American project to the end. None the less, as usually happens on Formosa, the American advisers triumphed in the end.

All of which is important for two reasons. In the first place, what are the unfortunate Chinese Nationalists to think, when they are first powerfully pressured to defend the "essential" Tachens at all costs, and then told that the Tachens are not essential after all, and please to evacuate at once? This reporter has never shared the Knowland-Robertson-Radford view of the unvarying rightness of Formosa. But in view of the past record, the Generalissimo and his advisers certainly seem to deserve some sympathy at this time.

In the second place, might we not be better off in Asia today if there had not been so much loud, empty talk at the beginning, and if there were a bit more boldness, spirit and determination in our policymaking today? Maybe it is impolite to ask the question, but the facts demand that it should be asked.

YOU Said It: Petitioner Sees 'Apathy'

Editor:

I cannot resist the urge to record here some of the varied reactions I observed while obtaining signatures for the petition being circulated favoring appropriate legislative action to uphold the Supreme Court ruling regarding racial segregation in the public schools.

Student A walked by the table at which I sat as if the room were empty. If he is for segregation, fine. Student B read it, shook his head and said, "I can't sign this." That too is fine. I believe every man should uphold what he believes in.

Yet others, as student C, said, "This is fine; I'm glad to see you do this, but . . ." Or student D, who, when asked if he was for it, said sheepishly, "I'm not for either petition." They tell me an apathetic person leads a happy life.

Of course we sooner or later had to meet student E. He felt that his signature might someday prevent him from getting a job. "After all, I have to think of myself." Yes, I guess so. I hope I never want food or wealth so badly that I abandon principles which may inconvenience me.

Student F, a young man wearing the uniform of an ROTC cadet, couldn't sign it either. I wonder if he thought even a little about the many United States citizens of every race and creed who have died wearing the bar he will someday wear on his shoulder.

I have no quarrel with those who disagree with me; but apathy I cannot forgive. One cannot help but wonder how much more effective propaganda the communist world will derive from not only the prejudiced, but from the indecisive and the uncaring.

All Those Ads

Editor:

After reading this morning's Daily Tar Heel, I was very disturbed about the tremendous amount of advertisements and the consequent lack of news. The sports page, which is undoubtedly the most widely read page of the paper, usually contains half the ads in the paper and today was no exception. On crowded days of advertising, I would suggest that the editorial page run the comic strips and crossword puzzle; therefore, this would leave more room for sports news.

I think that there is altogether too much advertising in the paper. It looks more like a billboard for local merchants than it does a student newspaper.

Gordon Jones

(About half of The Daily Tar Heel's financial support comes from its advertising; with receipts from the student Legislature below normal we must accept all the advertising we can get. This advertising is received late on the day before publication, usually too late for changes in the editorial page makeup. Whenever it is possible to foresee a heavy advertising day, we switch the comic strips and crossword puzzle to the editorial page. Such foresight is, unfortunately, not always possible.—Editor.)

The Over-Trained Concert Audience

Goddard Lieberson

In The Reporter

Nothing sweetens the air at a concert quite so much as applause. Yet, in the last fifteen or twenty years, applause—this precious oxygen given off by audiences which, more than money, gives life to an artist—has been steadily discouraged slowly stifled, suppressed, and deadened. Consequently, concert halls have become stuffier, and graveness of mien a prerequisite for him who fancies himself the intelligent concertgoer. The fun is gone, or going, and music has come to be worshipped instead of enjoyed.

It all began subtly enough: the unsmiling face of a violinist or pianist after a sonata; a reluctance to face around on the part of a conductor or his refusal to lower his arms at appropriate (which he considers inappropriate) moments; and sometimes even a hand lifted in repressive gesture toward an audience which dares to express enjoyment with a tentative burst of applause.

Thus the great solo artist becomes a kind of reluctant professor of music, too serious to acknowledge his students; the conductor a monochromic, monolithic father figure, grim, repressive, demanding of obedience and love. Like an unsmiling, humorless Mr. Darling of "Peter Pan" he seems to say, "A little less noise there. Just watch your decorum—we are worshipping the divinity Music—keep your feelings to yourself." But only saints are adept at private ecstasies, and to ask this from the music public is asking for too much.

One wonders where the foolish concepts of "serious" music began. Was it an attempt to guarantee a posterity that otherwise seemed lost? Yet bon vivants are kindly remembered: We honor Dante, but we also honor Boccaccio; we are grateful to both Marcus Aurelius and Petronius. And are we not correct in our suspicions that the artist who "seriously" strives to create "serious" works which will be remembered by succeeding generations is at once doomed to failure?

I cannot help but believe that what we now call "serious" music was once listened to in quite a different way, that concert rooms were neither study halls nor places of worship, and that the atmosphere at music-giving gatherings was one of great social fun. Indeed, one has only to look at an old print depicting Handel as the conductor of his own music surrounded by a conglomeration of audience, singers, and instrument artists to know that a concert for those people was a robust frolic, not unrelated to other robust frolics, and nearly as much fun. I should imagine that our jazz concerts of today would come closer to approximating what concerts then were. At these concerts, faces are smiling, the air is electric with enjoyment, the applause is lusty and grateful.

One wonders: How many years of repression have gone into forming our serious music audiences? It must have meant many years of training, because the natural reactions to the exhilaration that music engenders are applause, dancing, even vocal expressions of joy. Wasn't there once a time when applause between movements of a symphony was not considered a coarse gaucherie? Today, the unhappy creature who involuntarily and ecstatically claps his hands together after the first movement of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony is the center of malevolent looks, whispered "sshs," and perhaps spoken insults from close relatives who expected a little more sensitivity from a respectable fellow. It is all heartbreakingly unfair. Particularly since Beethoven, if he were alive and not deaf, would be delighted, I am sure, to stand and bow in acknowledgment of the applause. And what joy for a contemporary composer if he were to hear an inadvertent burst of applause from an exuberant admirer!

Our generation, in all aspects of life, has completely rejected the fustiness of Victorianism save in this one area—the concert hall. There the clinging plush, the dim lighting (as if to suggest gaslight), the grim art that hangs on the walls, and, above all, the somber atmosphere, suggest that the antimacassar still lives, and that Alfred Lord Tennyson has crossed no bars.

Soon music will have become such a serious matter that it will entirely be left in the hands of experts. That is, unfortunately, the direction in which it is now moving. It is the responsibility of everyone concerner with music to re-establish its pre-eminenince in the field of entertainment, as an essential social (of course, in the broad sense) activity. A good way to begin would be to convert our musical audiences to the concept of the enjoyment of music, and to leave study and worship in the edifices designed for their use.

The Annual Auction

Burke Davis

In The Greensboro Daily News

Interest is picking up in the biennial auction of trusteeships of the Greater University, and bidding promises to be as brisk as it has been in the past two scrambles. Committee Chairman John Umstead of Orange, who long ago had a try at civilizing the method of selection, and has given up, is having numerous requests for information.

This is one of the legislative scandals crying for reform, but no one has come forward with a feasible substitute for the present log-rolling scheme. Picking names from a hat would be an improvement. Umstead once attacked with a bill preventing Assemblymen from becoming trustees while serving in the Legislature, and that failed—perhaps fortunately, for service in the Assembly should not automatically bar a statesman.

Several new trustees who emerged from the 1953 scene (which looked something like the Stock Exchange floor on Black Friday) replaced veterans who had contributed much to the university. Not all newcomers have made, thus far, startling contributions of their own—nor even been very regular in attendance at meetings.

This time Guilford County, which now has six trustees, comes up with terms expiring for two eminent friends of the university: Maj. L. P. McLendon and Spencer Love. They will surely inspire fights among the statesmen to see that they keep their seats, but there will be other candidates in the field as well.

'We Win' Again Carolina Cry; UNC 83, Wake 79

Dick Hemric Tallies 35 As Deacs Lose In Game's Closing Minutes

Rosenbluth Bags 21, Lifson 20 and Vayda 19, Tar Heels Snapping Three-Game Losing Skein

By BERNIE WEISS

"We win," the joyous cry of victory, once again is being heard throughout the ranks of loyal Tar Heels.

The men of coach Frank McGuire last night snapped their three-game losing streak by edging a tough Deacon five at Wake Forest, 83-79, and strengthened their fourth-place position in the Atlantic Coast Conference. Formerly leaders of the ACC, the Tar Heels dropped after losing consecutive games to Duke, Virginia and Maryland.

But the Tar Heels got back in the winning groove against the powerful Deacons. They had the stuff against Maryland, according to McGuire, but couldn't hold their own.

It was a different story last night at Gore Gymnasium in Baptist Hollow. Carolina took an early lead and held it most of the way, though the Deacons, paced by their great center, Dickie Hemric, led by a few points on occasion.

Hemric proved a Tar Heel collapsing zone defense to be practically useless as he burned the mesh for 35 points. This leaves him only 96 points shy of the all-time high scoring record for modern basketball, and he has at least five more games to reach that goal.

Hemric, playing the entire game, not only was the No. 1 man in points, he also led everyone in rebounds, snagging 18.

Al Lifson had 20 points, Jerry Vayda 19 and Tony Radovich 15. Behind Hemric's 10 field goals and 15 foul shots, little Ernie Wiggins tallied 18 for the Deacs.

The game was a nip-and-tuck affair most of the way. Wake Forest was leading by a point with less than three minutes to go, but a flurry of perfect foul throwing attempts by Vayda and Rosenbluth, plus a Paul Likins field goal at the final horn, wrecked Wake Forest.

Carolina started off like a house afire. With Rosenbluth hitting from the corners, outside and under the basket, and Lifson dropping in his set shots with amazing accuracy, the Tar Heels quickly jumped to a 19-8 lead. During the first half the Tar Heels' collapsing zone on Hemric was decently effective and the potential All-American could only bucket 10 points, a crippling factor.

Young soon found the range, further boosting UNC, and the team continued to move along in snappy fashion. After the opening minutes, Wake Forest never came close during the first half and at intermission it was 38-30 Carolina.

Another significant factor in Wake Forest's poor first-half showing was the Deacs' failure to connect from the foul line. They missed many of their first shots on the "one-and-one" call.

The worm turned in the opening minutes of the second half, however. Hemric tapped in four points and Wiggins connected from the corner to pull the Deacons with two points, 38-36. Wake Forest was dominating the rebounds at this point.

But once again Carolina got the upper hand and extended the margin to six points. Then it slipped back to the slimmest of margins and that's how the game ran until Young fouled out with 10 minutes left. Here the guard on Hemric was weakened and the big Deacon began to pump in the points right and left, Wake Forest gaining a two-point lead, 62-60.

Radovich and Lifson put in two long set shots to alleviate the situation and from this point on it was still close, but the Tar Heels remained out front.

The Baptists tried a full-court press in the final two minutes, though it was fruitless. They committed too many fouls, which were capitalized on by the winners, and that was the game.

It was rough. Lifson and Jackie Murdock nearly squared off after a scrap under the boards but fortunately it got no worse than that.

New N. C. Tourney Tops Baseball Slate

The high spot of the 1955 Carolina baseball schedule will be the newly formed North Carolina Invitational Baseball Tournament to be held in Durham April 7, 8, and 9. In addition to the tourney, the Tar Heels will have a rough 23 game slate against tough conference and intersectional foes.

The tourney will be run along the same lines as the Dixie Classic is in basketball. The host teams along with Carolina will be Wake Forest, State and Duke. Willard Casey, who is Business Manager of the Dixie Classic will serve in the same capacity for the baseball tournament.

Four outside teams have been invited to compete with the Big Four and these clubs stack up to be some of the nation's best. Among the visitors will be a strong Rollins College squad which went to the 1954 N.C.A.A. finals, before being nosed out by Missouri for the national championship. Notre Dame and the University of Ohio will represent the midwest These two clubs have always been baseball powers and preseason predictions show they will be hard to beat once again during the '55 campaign. The Ivy League will have Yale as its representative to fill out the eight team slate.

The pairings have not yet been announced but each Big Four team will tangle with one of the visitors in the opening contest and the winners will then go on to battle for the championship. The Durham Athletic Park and Duke's baseball diamond will both be in use during the three day tourney. Each park will have a double header scheduled on the three consecutive dates. This will be the first attempt to hold such a baseball tournament in the Carolina area during mid-season. The Big Four hope to make it an annual affair and are very confident that it will be a big success.

Coach Walter Rabb of the Tar Heel nine stated that he is also trying to schedule Notre Dame for April 11, which is an open date for Carolina. Other non-conference foes for the Tar Heels will be Ga. Tech, Rollins, Ohio State, Michigan State and Michigan.

Lou Jones Captures Women's Tennis Title

Lou Jones had little trouble in downing Marion Chalmers and claiming the Women's Intramural Tennis Championship yesterday afternoon. Miss Jones lost only one game in recording a 6-0, 6-1 victory.

The tourney was started in early October. but bad weather forced the finals to be postponed until yesterday.

Tonight, the Women's Swimming Meet will begin at 7:30. All dorms and sororities may enter teams in the nine events.

Frosh Capture 7th Straight, Beat Deaclets

Carolina's Tar Babies took an early lead and steadily increased it to whip the Deaclets of Wake Forest, 86-66, last night at Wake Forest.

After leading at half-time, 45-32 Tommy Kearns got hot and helped the team extend the lead to 20 points where it remained throughout most of the second half.

Kearns led all scoring with 27 points. Bob Cunningham tallied 23 and Pete Brennan 20 for the Tar Babies.

It was their seventh straight win, giving them a 17-1 record thus far this season.

John Reed, scoring 18, and Swede Frausen, scoring 13 paced the Deaclets.

Flashy Frosh Runners Seek Top Spot In Indoor Games

By RAY LINKER

Since track coaches Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton were able to win the freshman division of the Indoor Games last year on the strength of only three men, they should have no worries when meet time comes around on February 26, for this year's team lists many more outstanding stars.

Whereas Jim Beatty copped second place in the ¾-mile run last year as the Tar Babies turned back 10 other teams, Richard Rigsbee, who was winner of the scholastic 1000-yard run last year, has moved from Hillsboro High to help the Carolinians nail down first in the three-quarter-mile run this year. Everett Whatley, two-time Georgia state high school mile champ, as well as Ben Williams from Chicago. will also b after the top spot for the freshmen in the ¾-mile.

The winner of the only hurdle event—70-yard highs— in the scholastic division last year for George Washington High of Alexandria, Va., Gene Drury, will do his best to take over where Claude Rhule and Richard Waters left off in the 70-yard high and 70-yard low hurdles in the frosh group. It was Waters and Rhule in one-two fashion in the highs and Rhule and Waters in second and third in the lows. Drury will have some assistance from Bill Farrell.

Ronnie Austell and Jim Varnum give the Babies a fine one-two punch in the 60-yard dash where there was no one among the top finishers last season.

Austell and Drury will combine with Ray Montgomery, and Hubert Clemmer (with Ben Williams as alternate) to make a fine mile relay team for the UNC frosh, while Jim Carraway is the best Tar Baby high jumper.

Last years' team of Beatty, Rhule and Waters scored 16 points to the Maryland freshmen's 14, while Florida State University was gathering 13½ and Duke 9½ to round out the top four teams.

With three times as many men as last year's scorers, who are all highly talented, another victory in the freshman division should be even more easier to capture than that of the previous Indoor Games.

Redskins Sue Canadians For "Enticing" Players

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16 (AP)—The Washington Redskins today sued Coach Jack Hennemier of the Calgary Canadian football club for $50,000 damages on a complaint that he enticed two Washington players to jump their contracts.

Attorneys for the National Football League team said they planned to file a second suit tomorrow in an attempt to gain an injunction that would prohibit the two players from going to Calgary to play football.

Involved in the litigation are Dick (Little Mo) Modzelewski and Bob Morgan, both of whom formerly starred at tackle for the University of Maryland.

The suit was filed in nearby Prince Georges County, where Modzelewski and Morgan now reside.

Schoolboy Swimmers In Big Meet Here Saturday

More than 100 entries representing seven schools have been received for the Southern Intercholastic Swimming Championships to be held in the North Carolina Bowman Gray Pool Saturday.

"We are expecting even more entries before Saturday," Tar Heel swim coach Dick Jamerson, who is directing the all-day affair, said.

The championships will pit scholastic swimmers in two divisions—prep school and high school. Staunton Military Academy is defending champ in the prep school division, with Granby the high school title-holder. Both teams are slated to be back to defend their laurels.

THE MAIL BAG

If the spirit should ever move you to write me a letter—and it's always a pleasure to hear from you—take pen and paper and address me c/o Philip Morris, 100 Park Ave., New York 17, N. Y. Or if you don't have any paper, snap open your Snap-Open pack of Philip Morris, remove the fine vintage cigarettes, turn the neat brown wrapper inside out and use it for stationery. The regular size Philip Morris pack is perfect for short notes. For longer letters use the king size pack. For chain letters and petitions, glue several packs together.

This week's column is devoted to a few of the many interesting letters that have been coming in:

SIR:

Maybe you can help me. I came up to college eight years ago. On my very first day I got into a bridge game at the Students Union. I am still in the same bridge game. I have never gone to a class, cracked a book, or paid any tuition. All I do is play bridge.

To explain my long absence and keep the money coming from home, I told a harmless little lie. I said I was in medical school. This made Dad (my father) very proud. It also enabled me to keep playing bridge. We were both terribly happy.

But all good things must come to an end. Mine ended last week when I was home for spring vacation. I arrived to find that Sister (my sister) was in the hospital with an ingrown spleen. Dr. Norbert Sigafoos, the eminent ingrown spleen surgeon, was scheduled to operate, but unfortunately he was run over by a hot-food cart on the way to the scrubbing room.

"Oh, never mind," chuckled Dad (my father). "Harlow (me) will fix Sister (my sister)."

Well sir, what could I do? If I told the truth I would make a laughingstock out of Dad (my father) who had been bragging about me all over town. Also I would get yanked out of school which would be a dirty shame just when I am getting to understand the weak club bid.

There was nothing for it but to brazen it out. I got Sister (my sister) apart all right, but I must confess myself completely at a loss as to how to put her back together again. Can you suggest anything? They're getting pretty surly around here.

Harlow Protein

Dear Harlow,

Indeed I do have a solution for you—the solution that has never failed me whenever things close in: Light up a Philip Morris! Knots untie as you puff that rich vintage tobacco. Shade becomes light as you taste that mild fragrant flavor . . /. And as you watch the pure white smoke drift lazily upward, you will know that nothing is as bad as it seems, that it is always darkest before the dawn, and that the man worthwhile is the man who can smile!

SIR:

Do you think a girl should kiss a fellow on their first date?

Blanche Carbohydrate

Dear Blanche,

Not unless he is her escort.

SIR:

Here is a rather amusing coincidence that may amuse your readers.

Just off the campus where I go to school there is a lake called Lake Widgiwagan where students from time immemorial have gone fishing. Thirty years ago when my father was an undergraduate here he went fishing one day at Widgiwagan and dropped his Deke pin into the water. Though he dived for it for many weeks, he never recovered it.

Just yesterday—thirty years later, mind you—I went fishing at Widgiwagan. I caught a four pound bass. When I got the fish home and opened it up, what do you think I found inside of it?

You guessed it! Two tickets to the Dempsey-Firpo fight.

Fleance Fat

Dear Fleance,

It certainly is a small world.

NEWS FROM THE CAPITAL:

Milk Powers, House Reassignment Up

RALEIGH, Feb. 16. (AP)—Price fixing powers for the State Milk Commission and reassignment of House seats in line with the 1950 census, both touchy issues, today were headed for the Senate floor.

The milk pricing bill, unanimously approved by the Senate Agriculture Committee after a public hearing, was reported to the Senate floor and likely will come up for debate tomorrow.

Both support and opposition were voiced at the hearing before the Senate and House Agriculture Committee. The measure, introduced by Sen. Ralph Scott of Alamance, would give the milk commission power to set minimum wholesale and retail milk prices.

Meeting after today's session, the Senate Committee on Election Laws and Senatorial Districts gave a "without prejudice" report to the House reapportionment bill. It is not expected to come before the full Senate until after tomorrow.

By the "without prejudice" report, the committee took no stand for or against the measure. It would increase the House membership of Alamance and Rockingham Counties from one to two representatives each and cut Cabarrus and Pitt Counties from two to one each.

WARRANT BILL

Other legislative highlights today included final action on a bill to give officers authority to arrest without warrants in misdemeanor cases. The bill, already approved by both Senate and House, was enacted into law when the Senate agreed to a House amendment.

It would clear confusion on situations where officers have authority to make arrests without warrants. Such arrests would be legal where the offense was committed in the officer's presence or he had "reasonable ground" to believe it was committed in his presence.

BETTER JOB

Action by committees included a recommendation from the House Roads Committee that the State Highway Commission do a better job of marking danger spots on secondary roads. The group also killed a measure to repeal inspections required for used cars brought into the state. Opponents said repealing the law would make North Carolina a dumping ground for jalopies from other states.

Resolutions from the Legislature to Congress got attention from House members who were told too many of the resolutions are going through the legisiative mill.

The House passed a resolution calling on Congress and the President to refrain from adopting tariff policies which might hurt domestic textile interests. The House Conservation and Development Committee approved another asking Congress to give schools and health departments priority in acquiring war surplus stocks.

House Speaker Larry I. Moore suggested that legislators write letters to their congressmen rather than introduce resolutions.

Rep. H. Cloyd Philpott of Davidson said the General Assembly "can better address itself to problems before it" instead of sending petitions to Congress.

ESCAPE BILL

New legislation included a bill to provide tougher penalties for prisoners who escape or those who aid in prison escapes. Introduced by Rep. Thomas Turner of Guilford and others, it would make escape or aiding in escape a misdemeanor.

Chariman W. W. Fitzpatrick of the milk commission promised the Senate Agriculture Committee the price fixing powers will be used "reluctantly and only when necessary for the good of the industry and the state as a whole."

Fitzpatrick said use of the pricing authority would be permissive rather than mandatory. Prices might be fixed in one section of the state without affecting other areas, he explained. He said authority to fix prices is necessary to enforce fair trade practices for the milk industry.

Opposition came from J. F. Fowlers, representing the Farmers' Cooperative Dairy of Mecklenburg County. He said the bill would deprive consumers of the advantage of lower milk prices.

Sen. Scott said the bill would help stabilize the milk industry by "preventing chaotic price wars."

The act creating the Milk Commission was passed by the 1953 General Assembly only after price fixing powers were stricken from it. The pricing feature sparked heated debate in the last legislature.

Although the State Constitution says that legislative membership shall be reapportioned after each census in line with population changes, both the 1951 and 1953 Legislatures turned down reapportionment bills.

The House Reapportionment measure considered by the Senate Committee today is expected to run into rough debate when it reaches the floor.

A special committee of senators is studying the problem of senatorial reapportionment under a resolution approved earlier this session.

—Textile—

The theory of trade reciprocity, he said, just hasn't worked, adding:

"The U. S. textile market is the widest open, the most easily accessible, of any great consumer market in the world. This is true because U. S. tariffs have been steadily reduced during two decades of reciprocal trade agreements.

"To correct such a condition and permit the flow of goods to regions where they are most badly needed should be the real aim of a positive U. S. foreign economic policy, he said.

"Foreign cloth can come into this country and sell in the U. S. market for one reason only—because it is cheap. It is cheap for one reason only—because it is made with cheap labor."

Hallett, who is vice president and general manager of Kendall Cotton Mills, said that the textile industry in this country, while by far the U. S. cotton producer's largest customer, is vitally interested in helping maintain an export market for the relatively small part of the domestic crop not needed by American mills, and added:

"We are convinced that world trade, based on honest contractural relationships between countries, will open up new consumption areas for cotton and textile goods."

Graham Tells Roads Committee N. C. Highways Not 'Adequate'

RALEIGH, Feb. 16. (AP)—The Joint Roads Committee, going to work on Gov. Hodges' highway program, was told today that much of North Carolina's primary road system is neither "adequate" nor "safe" for present day traffic needs.

Highway Commission Chairman A. H. Graham told the committee this as he reviewed developments that led the Highway Commission to propose a 610 million dollar highway modernization program along with 150 million dollar bond issue and some changes in highway taxes to increase highway revenues by about nine million dollars a year.

Gov. Hodges has turned thumbs down on the road proposal. Yesterday he called for a "pay-as-you-go" highway construction program. He backed some of the Commission's highway tax proposals but rejected others. He also called for a study of the Highway Department so as to achieve a "statement" approach in its operations and planning.

Sen. Claude Currie of Durham, chairman of Senate Roads, told the joint committee legislation to put some of the Governor's proposals into effect are being drafted.

The Governor gave his backing to tax changes which would (1) Increase registration fees for private trucks to more nearly the level paid by contract haulers, (2) Change the method of collecting taxes on Diesel fuels so as to employ the same system used for collecting the gasoline tax, (3) Set up a plan for collecting a "use" tax from big trucks which cross North Carolina, and (4) Make a tighter check on gasoline tax refunds given to nonhighway users.

Graham told the legislators that the Commission, aware of the inadequate state of the primary system, had hired a New York engineering firm to study the highway system. He said the report on this study left the Commission "more impressed with the needs of the system than ever before." The Highway Commission, he said, studied the report in planning its program and adopted portions "applicable to North Carolina."

Graham made no direct reference to the fact that the Governor had differed with him on the highway program except to say that perhaps the Commission program "went too far." He added the Commission wants "to go just as far" as "the Legislature is willing to go" in improving the primary road system.

Graham spoke in support of the tax changes which the Governor endorsed. On the proposal to boost registration fees of private haulers, Graham said that many industries have set up big truck fleets to haul their products, and the Highway Commission feels these trucks "ought to carry the same taxes" as the trucks of contract and franchise haulers.

Graham said the present system of collecting the Deisel fuel tax, under which truckers report how much fuel they use and pay the tax, "puts a penalty on the honest man" because it gives the "dishonest person" such an "easy out."

Tobacconists Argue Against Weed Taxes

RALEIGH, Feb. 16. (AP)—Tobacco industry leaders declared today a state tobacco tax would further decrease cigarette and cigar sales and seriously affect North Carolina's economy.

"The industry is not in a healthy state," Fred Royster of Henderson told the Joint Finance Committee. "It is in a state of revolution. . . . I say it is a time for alarm."

Royster, Henderson warehouseman and president of the board of governors of the Bright Belt Warehouse Assn., declared he spoke as an individual grower and warehouseman.

While cigarette sales in the U. S. have fallen 7 per cent since 1952, said Royster, they have increased substantially in the 35 leading cigarette producing nations.

Gov. Hodges and the Advisory Budget Commission have recommended a tobacco tax of 2 cents per pack on cigarettes, 1 cent per cigar, and 1 cent on each 10 cents worth of smoking tobacco. Such a tax schedule would yield the state an estimated $8,945,000 per year.

The main reason for the sales decrease in the U. S., Royster asserted, is the increasing tax burden placed on tobacco since the end of World War II. He said the cancer scare is a minor reason for the decline.

Carolina, WC Officials Say They Are Against Rumored Advisors For Publications

Coraddi's Defender Resigns

The resignation of Mrs. Lettie Hamlett Rogers, defender of the Coraddi staff at WC, has been accepted by the Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina.

The resignation was released by Chancellor Edward K. Graham following approval of the Board in Raleigh on Monday.

Mrs. Rogers was an assistant professor of English at WC. Her resignation became effective at the end of the first semester.

In January, shortly after the Coraddi incident, Mrs. Rogers said that she would resign from the faculty "in protest of the administrative action" censuring the staff of the school's literary magazine.

Mrs. Rogers is the author of three novels and specialist in the teaching of creative writing.

The resignations of two other WC faculty members were also announced yesterday. They are Walter J. Gale, professor of education, and Miss Margaret E. Norton, instructor in education, both effective at the end of the present academic year.

Weaver, Chancellor Graham Students Agree On Freedom

"A censored student newspaper would be worse than no paper at all," said Fred H. Weaver, dean of student affairs, yesterday. Weaver was asked for his opinion about a rumored proposal for a bill to be introduced in the state Legislature requiring faculty advisors for all student publications in state-supported institutions.

The suggestion was first heard of in the Wednesday column of Burke Davis, state Legislature correspondent for The Greensboro Daily News. Davis wrote, "There is talk among the Assembly even yet about the Coraddi affairs on (the WC) campus, and general denunciation of the appearance of the nude male drawing in the magazine. One member, evidently in dead earnest, speaks of having a bill drawn which would require faculty advisors for all publications at state-supported colleges." Davis has said that he is sworn to secrecy on the Legislator's name.

Dean Weaver said, "I have heard of no proposal to censor our student publications. Hence, my statement is not related to any such suggestion. But, since you have asked me to state what I think is a wise policy with respect to supervision of student publications, I am glad to do so.

"It is our policy to leave the student publications free, to help them with their finances, to hold the students responsible for what they do, and hope for good results. We offer the student journalists as much counsel as they will take; but, considered from the standpoint of education, we think a censored student newspaper would be worse than no paper at all."

Chancellor E. K. Graham of Woman's College, in a telephone interview yesterday said. "Required faculty advisors for all student publications would be an error from both a practical and a policy standpoint. So far as I know, there has been no specific proposal looking in this direction. But the question of a required advisory system is one which comes up from time to time at all colleges and universities.

"From the practical standpoint a required faculty advisory system is almost invariably a disappointment, because it does not work. The faculty advisor is usually caught between what he regards as the devil of administrative disapproval and the deep blue sea of censorship.

"From the standpoint of policy, required faculty advisors would probably be even worse. Freedom

Levin Says Someone Took His Petition

A pro-integration petition with approximately 100 names was mysteroiusly stolen Wednesday night while being circulated during the supper hour at Danziger's Restaurant.

Ron Levin, author of the petition which calls for "the legislature of the State of North Carolina to implement a reasonable plan" to support the Supreme Court's decision against racial segregation in public schools "by appropriate legislative action," said yesterday "We have sufficient reason to believe that we know who took the petition. If we find it necessary to present the evidence later on, we shall do so."

The 25 or 30 petitions began circulating last Tuesday morning. As yet, there is no way to estimate the number of signatures acquired so far. Levin said, "We shall get more than the other one."

Solons Favor A Bi-Partisan Board To Name Honor Council Candidates

Trustee Clark Is Against Negroes' Attending State

John W. Clark of Franklinville, a frequent critic of the University of North Carolina, has written a letter protesting summer school plans at N. C. State College, The Raleigh News and Observer said yesterday.

Chancellor Carey Bostian of State has asked the executive committee of the UNC trustees to permit about 30 Negroes to attend a three-week extension course this summer, Clark wrote to State Sen John Kerr of Warren with carbon copies sent to other members of the General Assembly.

"This movement to take Negroes in the summer courses at State College is part and parcel of the integration program and is just the opening wedge," the newspaper said Clark wrote. "Once they get this crowd hanging around the college they expect to bring in the ounger generation into the various courses at the college, then call for the admittance of every Negro who wishes to come to the Farm and Home Week. . . .

"At first they will be put in seperate dormitories and then under protest made by subsidized workers will ask to be mixed in the various dormitories with the white farmers. In this way, they hope to bring about complete integration."

Clark, a UNC trustee, asked the recipient of the letter to consult with fellow legislators on what "can or should be done" about "this movement."

"State College has been in existence now for 65 years and Bostian is the first head of the institution to make this request. He told the executive committee that the Negroes, 30 or more in number, would stay at Shaw University and would not eat or sleep on the campus. When asked about the advisability of putting this in the resolution the executive committee backed off and Chancellor Bostian said they would probably be served lunch but not other meals," the letter said.

SCOTT MENTIONED

"Kerr Scott got the solid Negro vote in Greensboro, the Haiti section of Durham and other places where the colored bloc vote was needed," the letter said. "I am not sure that this is one of the things his runners promised the anti-segregation crowd or not but you can doubtless learn something about this from your fellow legislators."

A post script to the letter said, among other things ,"Last Sunday Harold Hipp, assistant pastor of

Clark Once Charged Trustees Supported Integration Moves

John W. Clark, member of the executive committee of the UNC Board of Trustees, has been prominent in the state press on several occasions, as he has been actively engaged as a private citizen in a private campaign to uphold the southern tradition of segregation in North Carolina.

Nell Battle Lewis, News and Observer writer, quoted a letter from him in her column of Feb. 3, 1952. The quotation from Clark read as follows:

"The movement to break down segregation in and around Chapel Hill and bring about amalgamation of Negroes and whites is highly financed and is locally supported by individuals employed by the Trustees of the University of North Carolina. . . . So far the Executive Committee has done nothing to oppose the movement. I will appreciate any suggestions you may have to offer at any time."

Heart Drive Underway In Campus Residences

The anual Heart Fund Drive got underway on the University of North Carolina campus this week with two Greek organizations, Delta Sigma Pi professional and business fraternity, and Alpha Delta Pi, social sorority, as the sponsoring agents.

Louie Bonardi, Durham, member of Delta Sig and chairman of the campus drive for the American Heart Association, said yesterday that the two sponsoring groups have been busy distributing plastic hearts to all fraternity and sorority houses and dormitories for contributions.

In addition, he said, contributions will be accepted at the North Carolina Heart Association, Miller Hall.

Posters will be placed in windows throughout the campus and other activities are planned to help make the drive a success, he added.

Bonardi pointed out that "the contributions will go for the support of research projects on the causes and controls of various heart diseases. They will also support programs of education concerning heart disease and community service activities," he said.

Refer Dorm Improvements To Hands of Interdorm Council

By NEIL BASS

The student Legislature in an abbreviated session last night approved unanimously a bill to establish a bi-partisan board to select candidates for the Honor Council. The bill had previously been referred to a Legislative committee for study.

The board will consist of: the chairmen of the Men and Women's Honor Councils, the chairmen o. he Student and University Parties, the secretaries of the Men and Women's Honor Councils, the chairman of the Women's Residence Council and the president of the Interdormitory Council.

In other action of the session the body thumbed down by a vote of 17-15 a resolution calling for the Student Welfare Board to "negotiate" with the administration toward the correcting of certain "deplorable" conditions in Battle-Vance-Pettigrew Dormitory. The examples cited were the "need for new springs and mattresses" and "renovation" of the social room.

The Legislators, voting almost entirely along party lines, the Student Party for and the University Party against, ruled that the bill came under the jurisdiction of the Interdormitory Council, and did not need acting upon by the Legislature. The body referred the killed bill to the IDC.

An appropriation of $90 to the Elections Board "for the purpose of paying the debt incurred by the purchase of new ballot boxes" was given a unanimous stamp of approval by the group in a quickly run through action.

President Tom Creasy's recent appointments to the Student Entertainment Committee, the Elections Board and the Orientation Committee were given the go sign by the body with the exception of one appointee. This was Claude Pope, whom a committee studying the appointments ruled ineligable because, the Legislature by-laws state that a person cannot serve on the Student Council and a Legislative Standing Committee both.

Archaeologist Lectures On The Hittites' Land

Art and architecture of the early Hittite kingdom in Asia Minor, "which excels by the intelligent use of the natural setting," was discussed by Dr. Machteld J. Hollink in a recent address here.

Miss Mellink, who is assistant professor of classical archaeology at Bryn Mawr, Pa., participated in excavation work in the Hittite country near Tarsus in southern Turkey, from 1947-49.

Her address was sponsored by the North Carolina Society of the Archaeological Institute of America, which is headed by Dr. J. P. Harland, professor of archaeology here.

Illustrating her lecture with films of the Hittite remains, Dr. Mellink pointed out that the Hittites invaded Asia Minor in the same way that the Greeks invaded their future homeland, Greece.

"Many castles of the Hittites are still to be seen on Hills and mountains of the Turkish Plateau," she said, "and often they are marked by colossal fortifications and rock-cut reliefs with religious designs."

Dr. Mellink explained that rock-reliefs, the most typical Hittite art form, survived after the destruction of the Hittite Empire around 1200 B.C., for their conquerors borrowed certain of their art features.

A native of Holland, Miss Mellink received her B. A. degree from Amsterdam University, and her M. A. and Ph. D. at Utrecht. Since coming to the United States, she has attended the Institute of Advanced Study at Princeton University and has had several articles published in national archaeological publications.

The Letter Writer

John W. Clark, a member of the trustees' Executive Committee, has written another letter.

This one went to the members of the North Carolina General Assembly protesting the proposed inclusion of Negroes in a three-week State College extension program this summer.

This letter, as have so many of Mr. Clark's similar epistles, got the large headline treatment in yesterday's state newspapers.

In case you're new around here and don't know John Clark, let us present his credentials.

He is a trustee from Franklinville, where he operates Randolph Mills, Inc. For many years, he has been an influential force in state politics.

He likes to write letters. In 1952, The Daily Tar Heel compiled many of these letters, most of them to newspapers and all of them preaching the same militant racist line.

Here is a sample, from an unsigned, mimeographed circular marked "Confidential Memorandum" and titled "Trampling Southern Ideals Underfoot" sent to members of the Board of Trustees in February, 1947:

Julius Rosenwald and other Jewish Allies are engaged in a campaign to do away with all segregation in Southern schools, churches, colleges and hospitals and bring about amalgamation of the white and negro races in the South. Their real purpose is the destruction of the Germanic races who form the basis of the South's civilization . . . Their hirelings are scattered throughout the nation in churches, educational institutions, news distributing agencies, and all other places where their poison can be advantageously placed . . .

It is not possible to say how many of them have had their palms greased but don't forget that one of the 12, a so-called disciple, betrayed Christ for 30 pieces of silver.

These letters have been aimed at University administration (numerous attacks on Dr. Frank Graham), University faculty (notably Dr. Guy Johnson of Sociology) and students (notably 1951 student body president John Sanders).

John Clark's crowning achievement came a couple of years ago, when he wrote letters to mayors of several North Carolina communities, checking on University students who asked for elimination of segregation on the campus.

The student integration petition, signed this week by hundreds of students, probably hasn't done Trustee Clark's blood pressure any good.

But he is still writing letters. And they haven't changed much. Here is an excerpt from this week's Clark epistle:

Last Sunday Harold Hipp, assistant pastor of the Market Street Methodist Church in Greensboro, had charge of the morning service and put on quite an act. Practically everything he said, word for word, had been stated by the Rosenwald crowd before. Among other things he said that it was anarchy to oppose the Supreme Court's decision, in other words anyone in the Legislature not falling in line with old Frankfurter and his gang is an anarchist . . .

Enclosed with the letter was a tract headed "Total Mongrelization" which attacked the NAACP and the CIO and contained pictures titled "interracial marriage, friendship, entertainment, love, society and movie."

Mr. Clark, we are happy to report, is finding less support than ever for his fantastic one-man crusade. The proposal to admit Negroes (who would live off the campus) to the State College extension classes passed the trustees Executive Committee by a vote of 11-1, the "1" being Mr. Clark himself. And State's Chancellor Bostian has replied to this latest letter in cool and measured words.

John W. Clark will undoubtedly write more letters. He will undoubtedly get more headlines for his fiery anti-Negro, anti-Semitic prejudices. But all the intelligence of Iris state is arrayed against him.

For John Clark represents the broadsword and magnolia mentality that began to pass in North Carolina a hundred years ago. We tell his story not as current circumstance but as curious history.

Carolina Front

A New Look At The Hill & Its People

Louis Kraar

I'VE HAD A new view of Chapel Hill in the last few weeks.

My friend Chuch Hauser of the Chapel Hill Weekly took off a couple weeks ago to cover the legislature for the Associated Press and I've been filling in for him on the Weekly.

Previously, Chapel Hill — the town—seemed to mean a row of stores to me. And this is the way most students become aware of the town.

Since the pocketbook is a sure route to any student's attention, the fiscal—rather than physical—aspects of the village fill the undergraduate mind and budget.

As a result, many students see the town as an incorporated conspiracy to grab their dollars.

The do pay more for gasoline, flannel suits, and meals at most Chapel Hill places. But they also enjoy free seconds on coffee, ice cream handouts when they buy their books in town, and an annual senior party pitched by one restaurant.

★

AFTER THE first shock at paying six dollars for a shirt with stripes and a collar "like the Ivy League is wearing this year," the Carolina student sustains each succeeding high price with a zest that dwarfs his pocketbook.

And after four years of paying through the nose, he either graduates a wise shopper—or with bankrupt parents.

Some students look beyond the row of merchants on Franklin Street into the protoplasm of the town—its people. Here one finds authors (prosperous, struggling or phony, depending on where you look), old women, South Building secretaries married to grad students, grad students wishing they could marry secretaries, and professors.

Chapel Hill people are a charming, busy, talking bunch who enjoy conversation, each other, and life in general better than most. Their interest in each other supports two active town newspapers, a small radio station, and more clubs than Sinclair Lewis could have ever dreamed up for his Babbit.

★

STUDENTS OFTEN tell the townspeople about their professors, that league of pedants and slave-drivers who — from time to time—drive the young people from the movie houses and beer halls to the library and books.

Despite the charges of these students, there are many teachers who speak that thing called truth with a firmness and consistency that makes conservative administrators uneasy and students attentive.

These men bring the gusto of life into their classrooms, and their students respond by studying. These good professors (and there are many) write books, admire instead of envying youth, and teach because they enjoy teaching and youth.

★

THE STUDENTS — I've even started viewing them differently—are like the state, rich and poor. Most of the boys are more interested in making money, sitting in cars with coeds, and learning to socialize than in the labors of scholarship.

Most of the girls are more interested in the boys and how to socialize than in classes.

In short, we're a Southern generation who never had it so good.

Most students have an almost unconscious yearning for something the ythink of as "culture," but they never call it by that name because it sounds "too intellectual." Somehow the speakers of truth in the classroom show them the way to this thing they seem to want.

Such is my new view of Chapel Hill.

Confusion In Taipei

The Quemoy, Matsu Story

Joseph Alsop

TAIPEI, Formosa.—The controversy now raging in Washington about the real status of Quemoy and the Matsu Islands is easily understandable.

The confusion grows directly from the curious, tortuous and even somewhat shabby dealings of the American government with the Chinese Nationalist government on this vital issue. The real history of those dealings (which leaves the true status of Quemoy and the Matsu as dubious as ever) can be summarized as follows on high and undoubted authority.

Originally, as the whole world knows, President Eisenhower's policy, adopted against the recommendation of three of the four Joint Chiefs of Staff, was to defend none of the offshore islands that constitute the Formosa approaches. This decision was taken last September, at the famous Security Council meeting in Denver, after the first major Communist shelling of Quemoy had brought the problem of the offshore islands to the forefront.

CHANGED DECISION

How or why this original decision was changed in January is not known here. It is suspected, however, that the lever of change was a growing conviction that the Chinese Communists seriously intended to attack the Pescadores and Formosa proper, which in turn made the defense of the more advanced positions seem more logical and important. At any rate the original decision was changed, and the new policy was adopted of abandoning the Tachen Islands but assisting, if need be, in the defense of Quemoy and the Matsus.

This led directly to the President's request to Congress to pass the so-called Formosa resolution, and to the key scene in the discussions of the problem of the offshore islands between the Chinese and American governments. This key scene was a meeting between Chinese Foreign Minister George Yeh and Secretary of State John Foster Dulles while the Formosa resolution was pending and shortly before Secretary Dulles' departure for his Caribbean holiday.

At this meeting, Secretary Dulles informed Foreign Minister Yeh, without qualification or equivocation, that President Eisenhower would issue a statement in effect guaranteeing Quemoy and the Matsu as soon as the Formosa resolution had passed the Congress. The statement, Secretary Dulles asserted, would specify Quemoy and the Matsus as being "related areas" essential to the defense of Formosa. It would thus put the Chinese Communists squarely on notice that an attack on these islands would bring the United States into the fighting.

There was no possibility of misunderstanding about this promise made by Secretary Dulles to Foreign Minister Yeh. Official State Department minutes were taken of the meeting between the two men, and a copy of these minutes was given to Foreign Minister Yeh. The minutes clearly recorded that Secretary Dulles said the President would issue a statement effectively guaranteeing Quemoy and the Matsus in the manner described above.

CHEERFUL STATEMENT

On the basis of this apparently solid commitment, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek then agreed to the evacuation of the Tachen Islands, as Secretary Dulles had requested. The plan here was to coordinate the Generallisimo's order for evacuation of the Tachens with President Eisenhower's expected statement on Quemoy and the Matsus. As late as a week ago Friday, U. S. Ambassador Carl Rankin had no idea that Secretary Dulles' promise to Foreign Minister Yeh was about to be broken. He even held a press conference cheerfully stating that Quemoy and the Matsus were now covered by an American guarantee.

At this very late date, however, Assistant Secretary of State Walter Robertson informed Foreign Minister Yeh, one assumes with some embarrassment, that there had been a little misunderstanding between the State Department and the White House. The President was not prepared to keep the promise that his Secretary of State had made.

Foreign Minister Yeh produced the minutes of his meeting with Secretary Dulles. Assistant Secretary Robertson showed the minutes at the White House. But all to no avail. Apparently the President had hedged his position, in order to undercut the Senate opposition to the Formosa resolution, in a way that made it impossible for him said he would do.

to do what Secretary Dulles had

On receiving this news, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek refused to keep his part of the bargain either, with the result the world knows—the long delay in the Tachen evacuation. These days of delay were occupied by the Chinese in pressing the President to keep the Dulles' promise, and by the Americans, in fending off the Chinese with one hand and pressing them to evacuate the Tachens with the other.

This curious impasse ended, partly because Chiang Kai-shek had no easy alternative except to bow to the will of the American government, and partly because President Eisenhower finally consented to toss President Chiang a diplomatic biscuit. This took the form of a communication relayed by Ambassador Rankin, assuring the Chinese President that the American President was still undyingly determined to defend Formosa and all related areas "he deems necessary" for the defense of Formosa, "including Quemoy and the Matsu Islands."

'Well--Let's See You Sell The Thing A Car'

The Daily Iowan

There's a new word on the American scene which is supposed to send shivers down the spine of the working man and fill the industrialist with happy anticipation.

The word is "automaton."

Every reader of the comic strips is familiar with automaton. The crazy inventor pushes a button that rings a bell that releases a lever that starts a wheel that strikes a match that lights a fire that wakes up his tardy assistant.

Automaton is control of flow in the manufacturing process.

Only this automaton is not fantasy. Automatic production has invaded the automobile, petroleum, chemical, television and railroad industries. It has moved into offices, too.

Basically, an automated factory is one in which the machinery is controlled by machines instead of men. The results are amazing.

An automatic machine controlled by another machine makes engine blocks in 15 minutes. It takes Ford workers nine hours to complete the same operation.

An electronic brain installed by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company does what 135 operators using 100 punch-card machines perform.

To the manufacturer and businessman, these feats mean lower labor costs and less workers.

To the laborer, automaton means possible displacement, temporary loss of wages and interrupted purchasing power. When these occur, the ripple of the worker's loss spreads throughout the economy.

An exchange of wit between CIO president Walter Reuther and the manager of the automated Ford plant at Cleveland sums up the problem.

The manager is said to have remarked as he pointed out a new machine, "I'd like to see you collect dues from that."

To which Reuther replied, "I'd like to see you sell it a Ford."

YOU Said It: 'Expose The Radicalism'

Editor:

My congratulations to The Daily Tar Heel for printing quotations from a political discussion made at this week's SP meeting. Extremely blunt political speeches have been made before but they were toned down or not printed by The Daily Tar Heel. Consequently the radicalism in student politics has not been exposed to public opinion.

Opposition is a necessity in student politics. It keeps those factions in power "on the ball." But when phrases such as "a bunch of blabbermouths" and exagerations such as "the SP has completely failed" are used, the criticism no longer remains constructive. It needlessly embarrasses student government and party officials.

It discourages potential leaders from taking responsible positions because of the embarrassment such extremely bitter attacks may cause them.

I hope in the future such speeches will be looked upon with disfavor by party members.

Silent Generation?

Editor:

Your editorial, "Inconspicuously and Noiselessly" was a little exaggerated (though it may have really happened) but it certainly struck at an important attitude on the Carolina campus at the present time.

I believe the professor you wrote about was speaking the truth when he said students today are afraid to talk on controversial subjects. The very word "controversial" is something Carolina students and students at other colleges and universities seem to be shying away from.

There has never been anything wrong with controversy. What is a school for, if not for the disagreement that can lead to truth? But try telling that to a student here and now. He will tell you, "I'm afraid I might not get a job if I express my opinion on this," or "What's the use talking about things like that? I can't change it."

Students do not seem to understand that the French Revolution was accomplished by students and many great things before and since have been done by students. They are the most important force in society if they will recognize their power for good.

Time magazine has called us "The Silent Generation" and while I disagreed with their article (which appeared two or three years ago) I am beginning to agree that we are a silent generation. And that is an insult, in case any of you readers do not recognize it.

Why? Because nothing good was ever accomplished without men speaking up and expressing their opinions.

It is encouraging to see students signing these segregation and anti-segregation petitions. They have created a good deal of interest, surprising to me. Maybe if The Daily Tar Heel keeps harping on this subject and a few more controversies arise, students will decide to let themselves be heard—at last.

India's Role In A Divided World

Prof. S. N. Roy

(Prof. Roy, a member of the Department of Statistics faculty, delivered the following speech at the "Indian Evening" last Monday, celebrated by the Chapel Hill Indian community.—Editor.)

It is a great pleasure to associate myself with the welcome to you all by Mr. Gnanadesikan on behalf of the Indian community at Chapel Hill.

India attained her independence on August 15, 1947 when she became a dominion of the British Commonwealth of nations. A little under three years later, on January 26, 1950 India became a Republic, still remaining associated with the British Commonwealth under some kind of constitutional arrangement which at that time was without a precedent.

Within India the two occasions are celebrated on these two dates, and Indians living abroad try to celebrate the two occasions on the nearest convenient dates by arranging a get-together with their host nations and sharing with them some Indian program. From most host nations and from this great nation, in particular, Indians living abroad receive so much kindness and hospitality that it becomes a duty no less than a pleasure to try to return a part of it by attempting to present to our generous hosts some aspects or facets of present-day India which may be little known outside, for example, in this country, but through no fault of the folks here.

SOME BARRIERS

Despite the best of intentions on both sides, despite genuine attempts at mutual understanding, some barriers might still exist, but, with good will on either side, these barriers could be eventually lifted if each side availed itself of every opportunity to present some facts and facets little known to the other side.

What characterises India today is a great effort, part of it conscious and part of it perhaps unconscious, to live and improve her own life, economic, social and political, and arrange her relations with the rest of the world in the light of what is currently called a middle-of-the-road philosophy.

This philosophy is based on a certain measure of tolerance, an awareness of the complexity of the issues that ordinarily divide rival groups and also on a desire to see and if possible pick up some good that may exist in different and sometimes hostile ways of life and idealogies.

FACTS, FACETS, FEATURES

To take certain facts and facets individually: Of the total population of the Indian union as of today about 85 per cent are Hindus, 10 per cent are Muslims, 2 per cent are Christians and the rest come from other religious minorities.

Among the Hindus a substantial minority forms what used to be called the depressed classes who are today free from all legal and organized social disabilities and who are being sought to be raised by all means in the power of the state to the level of the rest of the nation.

Out of 15 members of the Federal Cabinet, the prime minister is an upper class Hindu, the deputy prime minister is a Muslim who happens to be the most respected political leader in the nation after the prime minister, one member is a Christian, there was another Muslim member who recently died and two members come from the so-called depressed classes.

It is as if in this country, at the Federal level, the President was a protestant Christian, the vice-president was of the Jewish faith, a prominent member of the cabinet was a Roman Catholic and two other prominent cabinet members were Negroes.

COMPOSITE CULTURE

The social organization presents a complete picture on which many influences have worked — some of them stemming from India's remote and recent past and some of them from Western civilization with which India has been in contact over 150 years now and with which India has shared in an appreciable measure the great liberal movements of various fronts that started in the West around the end of the 18th century and have been continuing to our day.

On the economic front, however, the picture is one over which this country would be less happy. For reasons which I need not discuss at the moment, among such reasons being the current ratio of resources to population, the technological and industrial backwardness, the general background of poverty, disease and several other handicaps, India perhaps could not possibly adopt the system of free enterprise as it is sometimes understood and advocated in this country. The economic organization that is gradually emerging is much closer to that of, say, England and some other European countries that are political and social democracies than to that of this country which is also a great political and social democracy.

It is by no means unrestricted private enterprise, it is not also as nearly socialistic as in most communist countries, but it is a mixture of the two, part socialistic and part private, with the state always on the watch on behalf of the common people.

On technological know-how in industry, agriculture and various other sectors India is grateful for all the help it has received from this country in an abundant measure and from several other industrially or agriculturally advanced countries

INDIA'S DUAL GOAL

India, naturally, would be willing to draw upon the knowledge and experience of various countries of the world including some that are today within the communist sphere of influence and would welcome any help from those countries that are willing to offer such help without any strings attached.

On the whole, looking at all the forces that are at work in India, it would not perhaps be unreasonable to hope that India, in her own modest way, would keep to a path which would improve the lot of her own people, and at the same time—perhaps in that very process—contribute toward a lessening of the terrible fears and suspicions, some of them justified and some of them perhaps unfounded, that unfortunately divide most of the world today into two hostile camps.

By and large, India has received so much kindness and good will from the rest of the world that she owes it to the world to try to do her share in the promotion of peace and good will.

Varsity Tankmen Seek Sixth Win Today Against Clemson

CUFF NOTES

By BERNIE WEISS

Daily Tar Heel Sports Editor

A contemporary of mine at Dook, Herb Lodder by name, came up with an interesting column recently in the Duke Chronicle.

In Lodder's "Between The Halves" is the idea that Duke will be playing a great football schedule next year featuring some of the nation's top teams — specifically, Ohio State, winner of the Rose Bowl; Navy, winner of the Sugar Bowl; and Georgia Tech, winner of the Cotton Bowl. Lodder then cries over the fact that all of these games are played away from Durham and that the Dook home schedule, consisting of four games, is miserable.

He continues, "We wouldn't blame you if you took the weekend off and went home for three of those four. Other than Pittsburgh, who dumped Navy, 21-19, last fall, the home schedule is quite unattractive. William and Mary, Wake Forest and North Carolina.) With all due respects to those three teams, we feel that they cannot cope with the powerful Blue Devils."

So he says, but we shall see come next fall.

Lodder goes on to expound on the greatness, it being equalled by none, of football at Dook. He also delves into the difficulty schools (Dook in particular) seem to have with money, and states that perhaps the reason why so many good games are being played away from home in larger cities is to increase the gate receipts.

I shall take this opportunity to remind him that Dook is one of the wealthiest schools in the south.

And if he is still crying for good football next fall when his team is on the road, let him journey to Chapel Hill and watch the Tar Heels take on Oklahoma, Notre Dame, Maryland, Tennessee and Virginia.

Tommy Shores, a rabid basketball fan who puts in time as Business Manager of the DTH, and myself have come up with our selections for an All-Atlantic Coast Conference first and second team.

We agree on the starting five: Ron Shavlik, N. C. State; Dick Hemric, Wake Forest; Buzz Wilkinson, Virginia; Ronnie Mayer, Duke, and Len Rosenbluth, a local of some ability.

Shores' second team consists of Bob Kessler, Maryland; Bob McCarty, Virginia; Bob O'Brien, Maryland; Joe Belmont, Duke; and Bill Yarborough, Clemson. I selected Cliff Dwyer, of State, and Lefty Davis, of Wake Forest, instead of McCarty and O'Brien.

There will be no let-up in basketball coach Frank McGuire's summer schedule. He is a busy man throughout the year and is always in constant demand for speaking engagements.

While most of us will be basking in the sun, McGuire will conduct or have a part in conducting three summer camps in which the emphasis is on basketball. Starting early in June, he will be at an Elks camp at Hendersonville, and then go to Hill Beach, S. C. for another. Later he will be in New York to assist Buck Freeman (UNC frosh coach) at a military academy. Freeman is assistant director of the academy's summer basketball sessions.

Statistics of Bill Hensley, Wake Forest director of athletic publicity, show that the great Hemric now is only 96 points shy of Frank Selvy's all-time high scoring record of 2,538 points. He has scored 601 points this season, averaging about 29 per game, and has at least five more games in which to break the record. The "at least" is inserted because of the ACC tourney next month. The Deacs will certainly play one game in the meet and possibly three.

Already there is much speculation on the outcome of the tournament (which decides the conference champion) and the rating of teams other than State, which has been disqualified by the NCAA.

Discounting upsets, Clemson and South Carolina can be cancelled out with State. Maryland, minus Frank Fuqua (he had trouble with the books and left school) may be relegated to the ranks of darkhorse with Virginia and Wake Forest. All three of these teams, while having the potential, have trouble winning in the Coliseum.

This leaves Dook and Carolina. Place your bets.

Charles 3 to 1 Over Norkus In Garden TV Bout Tonight

NEW YORK, Feb. 17—(AP)—Despite beatings by Rocky Marciano in his last two starts, former heavyweight champion Ezzard Charles is a solid 3 to 1 favorite to polish off the "new" Charley Norkus tomorrow night at Madison Square Garden.

The 10-round match, scheduled for 10 p.m., will be carried on network radio and TV NBC.

Norkus was just another obscure heavyweight until he knocked out Danny Nardico a year ago in a sensational fight at Miami. Although he showed nothing against Hurricane Tommy Jackson, being stopped in five rounds in May, he moved into the rankings by whipping Cesar Brion, Charley Powell and Roland La Starza.

For the first time in years there is no ballyhoo about a "new" Charles. This time they're hoping the 33-year-old Cincinnati boxer has enough of the "old" Charles left in him.

In his first bout with Marciano last June, Charles was the master boxer in the early rounds, slashing Rocky's eye. When the tide turned in the late rounds, he absorbed fearful punishment but never went down. The next time around in September, Ezzy cut Rocky's nose but was knocked out in the eighth round. He was painfully slow at 192½ pounds and showed little of the dash and boxing skill he displayed in June.

Deacs Drilling Grid Tactics

WAKE FOREST—Backfield defense, depth at quarterback and finding a fullback were the three main problems for Coach Tom Rogers as Wake Forest began spring football practice.

The Deacons' 50-man squad began work February 7 and will conclude practice with a Varsity vs. Alumni game in Groves Stadium March 5.

A weak spot on last year's team was defense in the backfield, and the Deacon coaching staff will emphasize pass defense, tackling and line backing during the spring session.

The line will stress fundamentals with special work on rushing the passer and kicker.

Nick Consoles, a senior next season, heads the list of quarterbacks but Rogers is looking for a replacement to add depth to the position.

With Nick Maravic gone, the fullback position is wide open. The Deacons had planned on Charles Topping filling the post but Topping lost a battle with the books and had to drop out of school.

Penn State's Arnelle Nearing 2,000 Points

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., Feb. 17 (AP)—Jesse Arnelle, Penn State's record-breaking center, today was within reach of one of basketball's greatest achievements—a four-year scoring total of 2,000 points.

The 6-5 New Rochelle, N. Y., senior now has a four-year total of 1,969 points.

Coach John Egli hopes Arnelle can surpass that mark in State's two road games this weekend against Colgate and Syracuse. But even if he doesn't, Egli cited that the Lions still will have three more games.

Arnelle has averaged 28 points a game this season and has an overall four-year average of 20.5.

Frosh Swimmers Meet Pair of Military Teams

Krepp, Baker and Drake Expected to Pace UNC

Carolina's varsity swimming team will go after its sixth win of the season when it takes on the Tigers from Clemson College at 4:30 today following a freshman meet which pits the undefeated Tar Babies of Carolina against two strong military academy teams. The frosh will hit the water at 3 o'clock.

Hoping to rebound from their loss to the Michigan Wolverines earlier this month, one of the two defeats handed the Tar Heels Coach Ralph Casey will be counting heavily on his team to strengthen their Atlantic Coast Conference second place standing.

Charlie Krepp, Phil Drake, and Dick Baker, who set a national inter-collegiate record as the 300-yard medley relay team against the Wolverines, are expected to lead the way for the Tar Heels along with several other outstanding performers.

Drake will probably set the pace in the 150-yard individual medley and the 440-yard freestyle, while Baker is expected to score high in the 100-yard freestyle. Krepp will be the team's top man in the 200-yard backstroke.

Larry Shannon looks like the team's best bet in the 200-yard breaststroke, and will also pick up points in the 50-yard freestyle if the results of previous meets are any indication, and they should be.

THE 220-YARD freestyle will find Lee Holmes out front for the Tar Heels, and he will assist Baker with points in the 100 freestyle.

Charles Higgins is a good team man for the Carolinians, and will most likely show in the 220 and 440 freestyle races.

UNC trails N. C. State in the conference race and a win today would give them a tighter claim on second place, whereas a loss to the Tigers would bring Clemson into a tie for the runner-up spot with Carolina.

In what has been billed the top freshman swimming meet of the season, Georgia Military Academy and Staunton Military Academy invade the Bowman Gray pool to try and hand the Tar Babies their first defeat of the season. Carolina is sporting a 5-0 record going into the meet, which should be its toughest of the year. They had to battle down to the wire last year in meeting these two top-notch prep schools separately before squeezing out two victories, and the combined strength should prove no easy match for the host team.

Frosh coach Dick Jamerson's top men are Mac Mahaffey, Jake Smith, Parker Ward, Walt Rose, and Tony Shiffman.

Carolina Host To Eight Sports Events Saturday

The University of North Carolina may be setting some sort of record here tomorrow when it plays host to eight athletic events involving more than 200 participants. In addition, the Tar Heels will send one of their athletic teams out of town for competition.

The busy day gets under way at 10 a.m. with the beginning of the all-day Southern Interscholastic Swimming Championships in Bowman Gray Pool. Competition will be held in separate high school and prep school divisions, with both individual and team champs being determined.

As a sidelight of the Interscholastic Championships competition, the North Carolina freshman swimming team will take on Staunton Military Academy and Georgia Military Academy, both participants in the scholastics, at the same time, at 2:30. The clash will not be a three-way contest but two separate meets.

At 1 o'clock the first part of a three-meet fencing outing will take place in Woollen Gym with N. C. State taking on Augusta Military Academy. At 3:30 p.m. Carolina's fencing team will take on State, and at 7 p.m. Augusta will go against North Carolina.

A gymnastics meet and a wrestling match will round out the day's athletic record.

Coach Bill Meade's gymnastics team, its record now standing at 3-2 for the season, will take on Duke at 2 p.m. in Woollen Gym. The wrestling match, between North Carolina and defending Atlantic Coast Conference champ Maryland, will start at 4 p.m., also in Woollen Gym.

In out-of-town action Saturday night, Coach Buck Freeman's North Carolina freshman basketball team will shoot for victory number 18 against Wilmington Junior College at Wilmington, N. C. The Tar Babies have lost only one game.

Three Champions Are Entered Among 22 Schools In Games

By RAY LINKER

Three outdoor track champions in three different conferences this past spring head the list of 22 college teams entered in this year's Indoor Games.

Entries, which closed Saturday, have Maryland, defending champ in both outdoor and indoor track, heading the Atlantic Coast Conference group, and Virginia Military Institute, winners in the Southern Conference outdoors, and Roanoke College, Mason-Dixon spring winners out front in the non-conference division.

A total of over 600 athletes are scheduled to take part in the "Indoor Track Classic of the South." Fourteen teams are slated for the non-conference group, including five teams from the Southeastern and a like number of squads from the Southern Conference.

Just under 200 school boys are entered in the scholastic division of the meet, which finds only two of last year's placers returning. Washington and Lee High of Arlington, Va., and George Washington of Adexandria, who was first and second last year, head up a list of 24 teams, including teams from North and South Carolina, Georgia, and Washington, D. C.

All eight conference schools have teams entered in the freshman section of the meet, which features 16 teams. Other freshman teams outside the conference entered are Alabama, Davidson, Georgia Tech, Georgia, Gordon Military Academy, Presbyterian, Roanoke College, and Virginia Tech.

Other entries in the non-conference division besides VMI, and Roanoke are Alabama, Davidson, Florida State, Florida, Georgia Tech, Georgia, Navy, Presbyterian, Richmond, VPI, W & M, and Emory.

VMI nosed out the Navy by one-half a point for top honors in the non-conference group last year, while North Carolina will be defending the freshman crown.

Seixas Will Sit Out Singles In Net Meet

NEW YORK, Feb. 17 (AP) — Gorged with food and praise after a whirlwind series of victory celebrations, America's Davis Cup forces return to action tomorrow night in the National Indoor Tennis Championships at the 7th Regiment Armory.

Top-seeded Tony Trabert, lean and tanned from the Australian campaign, will meet a little-known Brooklyn player, Ray Antignat, at 9:30 p. m. in one of the feature opening matches.

Trabert's teammate, U. S. grass courts champion Vic Seixas, chose to sit out the singles competition and concentrate on doubles.

Fencers Battle State, Augusta In First Meet

Sabres will be clashing tomorrow for the first time during the 1955 season when the Tar Heel fencers tackle State College and the Augusta Military Academy in a three-way meet in Woollen Gym.

The Augusta squad will be coming up from Fort Defiance, Ga. and will be battling to upset the two college teams. Coach Pebley Barrow of the Tar Heels has had his charges practicing for the last few weeks in preparation for the tough opener.

UNC Grapplers, Maryland Vie 4 o'Clock Sat.

Maryland's powerful wrestling team will invade Woollen Gymnasium tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock to take the mat against the UNC grapplers in the Tar Heel's eighth dual match of the season.

In the past week's action, the matmen failed to break into the win column in two attempt as they fell before a VPI onslaught, 29-3, and were drubbed by State, 26-7. The only highlight of the unsuccessful trip to VPI was sophomore Charlie Boyette's victory in the 157 pound class.

NEWS FROM THE CAPITAL:

State Gets Private School Bill

Would Let Legislature Give 'Citizens' Money

RALEIGH, Feb. 17 —(AP)— A constitutional amendment aimed at preserving school segregation by allowing the Legislature to make grants for private schools was proposed today by Rep. Sam O. Worthington.

The veteran Pitt County legislator also introduced a bill to bring in additional state revenue by lowering the present 3 per cent sales tax levy to 2 per cent and eliminating a long list of tax exemptions. This would increase state revenues by an estimated 10 million dollars annually.

The constitutional amendment would pave the way for state support of private schools by giving the General Assembly authority to pass laws to "provide for grants of state, county or municipal funds to citizens of the state for educational purposes, in discharge of all obligation of the state to provide adequate education for its citizens."

Worthington, an outspoken advocate of continued segregation, agreed this would lead to a system of private schools. Asked if his proposal resulted from the U. S. Supreme Court decision banning school segregation, he replied, "of course, that's the whole basis of it."

"If approved by the Legislature, the amendment would be submitted to a vote of the people in the 1956 general election. To win legislative approval a constitutional amendment must pass each House by a three-fifths majority.

the Market Street Methodist Church in Greensboro, had charge of the morning service and put on quite an act. Practically everything he said, word for word, had been stated by the Rosenwald crowd before. Among other things he said that it was anarchy to oppose the Supreme Court's decision, in other words anyone in the Legislature not falling in line with old Frankfurter and his gang is an anarchist. . . . "

Enclosed with the letter was a tract headed "Total Mongrelization," which attacked the NAACP and the CIO, and contained pictures under which were captions reading "interracial marriage, friendship, entertainment, love, society and movie."

BOSTIAN REPLIES

Dr. Bostian last night issued the following statement:

"The proposal approved by the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of the Consolidated University of North Carolina and mentioned in Mr. John W. Clark's letter addressed to certain trustees simply permits State College to admit Negro farm and home agents to a three-week extension workers' course which also will be attended by white farm and home agents.

"The conference will be held at State College this summer but has no connection with the institution's regular Summer School or its regular classes. The course which the Negroes may attend is merely a refresher training period for county farm and home agents, who are regularly employed by the North Carolina Agricultural Extension Service.

"In a report to the Executive Committee, I emphasized the following considerations:

"Refresher training for county farm and home agents to render sirable and will enable the Negro farm and hom agents to render better service to their people.

"These refresher courses are a ype of post-graduate work not given by A&T College.

"There are three ways in which Negro extension workers can receive this training. They can go to institutions in other states where Negroes are regularly admitted but where the training available of the press is inevitably hedged about by the relationship and the responsibility of the press to the social and academic group in which it exists. But the strongest protection for a free press is the judgement and responsibility of those privileged with freedom. On a free and responsible campus, how can you develop the responsibilities of freedom if you establish specific limitations on the freedom in advance, and remove from the press responsibility for the exercise of judgment?

"We recognize that something is going to happen occasionally that somebody doesn't like. There is no reason for anyone to become unduly excited about it when it does happen. If the error of judgment appears sufficiently serious, the authorities in the institution have the inescapable job of taking a clear stand without taking themselves too seriously in the process. Neither responsibility nor freedom can be taken too seriously, however, and the imposition of required advisors would pose a serious risk to both."

Miss Linda Simmons, co-editor of The Carolinian, WC student newspaper, said, "Putting advisors on publications would manifest a lack of faith in students which is certainly not justified. We would oppose this.

"If this move is a result of the publication of "pornography" in Coraddi, it would seem that the legislator could more properly concern himself with the Tarnation in Chapel Hill," Miss Simmons said.

Miss Louise Merz, the other co-editor of The Carolian, added, "I would certainly agree with my co-editor in that having faculty advisors does manifest a lack of faith in the student. Furthermore it decreases any benefits which might be derived from working on a publication, as the responsibility for decisions should lie with the students. For these reasons, we would definitely oppose this.

"It is my impression" she said, "that the University of North Carolina is pretty unique in not having faculty advisors. At the Associate Collegiate Press convention, I gathered that most of the other colleges had advisors and I felt that this was one area, in particular, where we were more fortunate."

Jim Duan, editor of the UNC Carolina Quarterly, said, "I think there should be faculty advisors but not as a censorship board. More or less, as a group of people whose advice you can resort to if you get yourself in a jam, I don't think a faculty advisory board should be a censory board too, simply because this implies that they don't think the editor is as responsible as he should be. If you're going to appoint an editor who is not responsible for what goes into the magazine, he had just as well not be editor. What is an editor but the man in charge?"

Jim Turner, chairman of the UNC Publications Board, said, "I think it's reactionary; going back in the past to take something away from students they fought for years to get. I think it's carrying consolidation too far to tax Carolin afor the Coraddi mistake, if it was a mistake. Carolina publications have shown responsibility for years and our absolute freedom is a result of that."

Editor Charles Kuralt of The Daily Tar Heel said the newspaper's sentiments on the rumored bill will be given in an editorial Saturday morning.

Rueben Leonard, editor of Tarnation; Jackie Parks and Cornell Wright, co-editors of the Yackety-Yack, were not available for comment.

Japan Scared Of Being 'Trapped,' Thinks Braibanti

By ED MYERS

"Japan has the idea that she is trapped in the Pacific between the two mighty forces of the United States and Russia. She feels that she will be the battle ground for the next world war and her people will be used as cannon fodder."

This is the opinion of Professor Ralph Braibanti of Duke University who spoke Thursday night at an open meeting of Pi Sigma Alpha political science fraternity.

Braibanti, who served as consultant to the Army after World War II, said Japan may hold the key to Asia. When asked about the outward anti-Americanism, particularly obvious during 1952, he replied, "The hatred which Japanese have for Americans is not deep-seated. It is superficial, temporary, and typical of a defeated nation."

"The conduct of General MacArthur can not be discounted." He further asserted that MacArthur was the very apotheosis of a leader, according to the Japanese conception. "They also have not forgotten the fact that America kept them from starving at the beginning of the occupation," he said.

NOT FAST ENOUGH

The Duke professor stressed the point that the U. S. did not act quickly enough in the incident where a crew of Japanese fishermen were burned with radio active ashes. "We finally sent a recompense of one million dollars to the families of the fishermen, but too late. The fact that one of their people was killed and others injured was deeply imprinted in the minds of the Japanese people. By the time we got around to paying the families of these men it was too late to change public opinion or to make an emotional impact."

ON RED CHINA

Elaborating on Red China, Braibanti said "The central problem which we do not know the answer to is: To what extent will China be able to mold Russian Communism to fit the pattern to Confucian idealism? It is a truism that any body of ideas, when they come in contact with a particular culture, will change. And we can expect that Communism will be molded by China into a different form. However, the degree to which it is molded will be determined by several factors: the unusual zeal, intense organization, and the doctrinaire nature of the Communist movement.

"In any case, we cannot loosely compare the impact of Communism in China with the impact of the Mongolian invasion at the time of Marco Polo or the Manchu rule in the 19th century. Both Mongols and Manchus were barbaric nomads who had no culture; hence, were easily absorbed by Han people.

"Communism, however, has a well articulated philosophy, an intense religious zeal and much practical experience. It cannot, therefore, be absorbed as easily as the Mongols and the Manchus," he said.

Speaking about the present situation whereby Korea does not permit Japanese fishermen to fish off the coast of Korea, Braibanti said, "The fishermen do what everyone else does when the tyrant, Rhee, gets mad . . . run!"

CPU Meeting

"The Trade of Our Western Allies with the Soviet Union and Her Satellites" will be the topic of a discussion at a meeting of the Carolina Political Union Sunday night.

Special Show Is Announced For 'Romeo'

Andy Gutierrez, manager of the Varsity Theater, has announced that special tickets will go on sale today for a closed show of the J. Arthur Rank production of Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet, to be shown on Feb. 27.

The picture will play at the Varsity through Feb. 29, but four showings will be given on the 27th, for which special tickets will be sold. The tickets for that day will be marked for each of the four showings and may be purchased only up to the capacity of the theater. During these showings spectators will be admitted only at the beginning of each feature, and no popcorn will be sold at any of the showings, Gutierrez said.

Gutierrez said that advance sale of tickets for the four showings is being tried as a "special convenience to persons who want to derive the fullest benefit from it."

Lambda Chis Slate Banquet

Gamma Nu Chapter of Lambda Chi Alpha will hold a banquet and dance tonight at the Carolina Inn in honor of this year's pledge class.

Dick Levin and his orchestra will provide the music for the dance, and the ballroom will be decorated in the fraternity colors.

Following the dance, the pledges will give a champagne party for the brothers.

Hey, Where's This Place?

He went all over the campus looking for "Rushing Hall."

Election of Y officers will take place on March 9 in dorms and sorority houses.

Admiral Robert Carney Will Make Forum Talk

Admiral Robert B. Carney, chief of Naval Operations for the United States, will speak here Tuesday, March 8.

Carney's appearance here will be sponsored by the Carolina Forum, nonpartisan student group.

Carney will arrive here in mid-afternoon March 8, and will tour the campus and meet Naval ROTC personnel before he speaks that night.

Veteran of action in two world wars, having served in every type of ship from destroyer to battleship, and with virtually every uniform from Norwegian Navy to Turkish Army, Carney was once commended by General Dwight Eisenhower. In a letter to the Secretary of Defense in 1952, Ike wrote:

"Through understanding, sound judgement and able negotiation, (Carney) has earned the high respect and confidence of the political and military leaders of the nations whose forces he controls. His patience and firmness have brought forth the greatest possible improvement of our forces. I consider Admiral Carney a fine commander, and believe him qualified for any military responsibility the United States could offer him."

Eisenhower's letter was written during Carney's most recent assignment before going to Washington, when the admiral commanded all Allied armies, navies and air forces in Southern Europe.

VARIED CAREER

Carney has had a varied career. During World War I, he served as gunnery and torpedo officer aboard the U. S. Destroyer Fanning. While on the Fanning, Carney assisted in capturing a German U-boat and in bringing the German crew home as prisoners.

At Argentina, Carney worked with the U. S. Army and Air Force, the Canadian Army, Navy and Air Force and the British Navy.

After serving as skipper of the light Cruiser Denver in the early battles of the Solomons, Carney was picked by Admiral William F. Halsey Jr. to be Halsey's chief of staff.

He received the Navy Cross in the Battle of Leyte Gulf, OcOt. 1944, and formally accepted the surrender of Yokosuka in 1945. Yokosuka was the second largest naval base in Japan.

Carney was born in Vallejo, Cal., in 1895, the son of a naval officer. He attended the Naval Academy, where he participated in swimming and boxing.

ROUNDUP:

Legislators Disagree As To What Dorm Council Is

By NEIL BASS

By far the most controversial issue that was brought before the student Legislators at its Thursday night convening was the dorm improvements resolution that Larry McElroy (SP) introduced. The body refused to give the measure their stamp of approval—instead they, after a lengthy exchange of pros and cons, shoved the matter into the hands of the Interdormitory Council.

Perhaps the fate of the resolution, which only requested that the Student Welfare Board "negotiate" with the administration toward the correcting of certain "deplorable" conditions in Battle-Vance-Pettigrew Dormitory, would have been decided on a bit more speedily had not some of the body been confused as to just what the IDC was anyway.

Beverly Webb (UP) started the string of comments about the IDC by saying that the referring of the matter to the dorm group was "taking away" powers from the Legislature. This brought Bob Young (SP) to his feet with the opinion that the IDC was a committee of the Legislature.

Anyway, the resolution was passed on to the council. David Reid (SP) was asked his opinion on where the IDC's place was after the session, and he concluded that the body was a "subsiduary" of the Legislature.

One of the proposals slated to be voted on at the meeting was referred, upon recommendation by its SP sponsor, to the Ways and Means Committee for further "deliberation." It calls for the prohibiting of any student from serving in any two branches of the UNC student government.

The two parties are beginning to horten sessions now, probably due to the start of nominations. The SP and the UP begin Monday night.

Patsy Daniels Chosen Elections Board Chief

Miss Patsy Daniels, senior from Raleigh, has been approved by the student Legislature as new chairman of the Elections Board, according to President Tom Creasy.

She succeeds Graham Rights, who resigned to assume new duties as chairman of Campus Chest drive.

"I'll do the best possible job as chairman and will try to see that everything will be fair in the coming spring election," said Miss Daniels.

"And," she added, "I'm sure that I'll have the cooperattion of both parties." Miss Daniels also urged all students to exercise their right, as citizens of the campus community, to vote in the spring elections.

President Creasy said of Miss Daniels, "I think Patsy has done an excellent job in the past year as a member of the board, and I'm very happy she could accept the job as chairman.

"I'm sure that under Patsy's leadership the spring election will be carried out as successfully as the fall election this year," he said.

Other members of the Elections Board are Allan Hildreth, Claude Pope, Bill McLean, Doug Cantrell, Bennett Myers, Harriet Parrish and Barbara McRee. More members will be appointed to fill resignation vacancies in the near future, Creasy said.

SOCIETY HAPPENINGS ON THE HILL:

Parties Are In The Making, But It's Still An 'Off' Weekend

By SUSAN ANDES

A lull in activities? Never, for such a thing just doesn't exist at Carolina. Despite the tremendously fabulous time everyone had during Germans, the resting up afterwards is of week-long duration only. For some fraternities this is an "off" weekend, so ATO man GLENN LYNCH and Beta junior CHARLIE FROELICH told me. Then again for others parties are already in the making.

Last night in an array of flowing gowns and handsome boys attired in tux, the Phi Kap pledges and their dates were presented at their pledge dance held in the ballroom of the Washington Duke Hotel, Durham. (See picture, page 4.) Tonight they will again journey back to Durham, this time to Smith Lake for dinner and a party following. Sunday the old and new members and their dates will be honored at lunch at the house.

Newly elected officers of Phi Kap are ALLEN FRUCCI, Albany, Ga., president; CHARLES SILLERY, Littleton, vice president; JOE CORRELL, Winston-Salem, treasurer; FRED BLAKE, Hillsboro, recording secretary; BERT DAVIS, Roxboro, corresponding secretary; MYRON CONKLIN, Durham, house manager; FRANK HARRIS, Lincolnton, social chairman; and JIM SYKES, Jenkintown, Pa., pledge master. DICK BOYLE, Lincolnton, and OWEN KNOPP, Milwaukee, Wis., are sergeants-at-arms.

Fellowship's Representative To Talk Here

Miss Judy Livingston, a graduate student at the University of Michigan, will be on the campus tomorrow and Monday as representative of the Lisle Fellowship to talk with students about participating in summer service projects.

Interviews will be held on Monday at the YMCA for all interested students.

Each summer the Lisle Fellowship brings together international groups of about 40 young adults for a six-week program which is designed to create "opportunity for personal growth and to give training for the human relationships of family, profession, business, social life and responsible citizenship."

The groups for this summer will meet in the San Francisco Bay area; Washington, D. C.; Colorado Rockies; Copenhagen, Denmark;; the Rhine Valley of Germany and possibly in India, Japan or the Near East.

POLIO GRANT:

Funds Going To Work

By CHAL SCHLEY

For the third year in a row the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis has granted funds for Dr. Edward C. Curnen, head of the Pediatrics Department of the N. C. Memorial Hospital here, to use in fighting polio.

Since January, 1953, Dr. Curnen has been doing research on methods of differentiating between the effects of polio and non-polio viruses. The effects of these two types are often confused because of all the people infected with polio, only a few suffer paralysis.

The effects produced in the milder cases are similar to those produced by viruses which have no relation to polio.

At first, Dr. Curnen and his staff had to work in laboratories which were not laboratories at all. They were unused offices in the medical building. Several months of work were necessary before research could proceed. By the summer of 1953, labs were set up, and research has been progressing ever since.

Dr. Curnen first came to the hospital in 1952 when it opened. Previously he was an instructor in the Yale Medical School. At the same time, he was a member of a polio research team at Yale, and prior to that, he served at the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research where he studied other virus diseases. He came here specifically to head the Pediatrics Department.

It was Dr. Curnen's own idea to embark on his current line of research, in which viruses from actual patients are studied in a attempt to correlate one type of infection with a corresponding virus. His application to the National Foundation was placed in 1952, and the initial grant was made available in January of 1953.

The initial sum was $21,942. Since then, two more grants of $14,045 and $29,684 have been made for the years 1954 and 1955, respectively.

Jazzman Brubeck To Play At State

Jazzman Dave Brubeck, above, and his quartet will present a concert in Pullen Hall, N. C. State College, March 8. The concert will run from 8 until 10 p. m., and will be under sponsorship of the college's Interfraternity Council. Tickets are on sale at State College Union, State fraternity houses and in dormitories. Brubeck, a West Coast jazz artist, will feature progressive jazz at the State concert.

A Trojan Horse For Education

Even though the public schools find their cupboard as bare as Mother Hubbard's they should, and will, resist the federal aid program recently introduced by President Eisenhower.

The financial structure upon which the aid is to be erected is a peculiar one. The funds for new buildings would not come directly from federal treasury funds; nor would they come from state coffers. Instead, a series of private "school authorities" would be set up and they would sell bonds to the people of the state.

Thus, outsiders would build the badly-needed plants and "rent" them to the local communities.

The faults of the system are immediately obvious: It would seem that the desire for better schools is only a secondary consideration, the primary aims being the inauguration of a new federal program without direct federal expenditure.

Teachers, whose pocketbooks have always taken the slam when education funds were both short and long, fear that in a recession their salaries would be slashed beyond endurance to muster up payments for the prosperity-built plants.

The final and most important danger is this: The system of public education cannot be beholden to any private bond-holding group, no matter how honorable its intentions; the door for thought control is too much ajar as things are now. To go into debt to private organizations would be to throw it wide open.

The public schools, fed on an austerity diet since their time began, must fasten their belts one notch tighter and wait. There is crying need, but in no bind should schools open the gates to a Trojan Horse—even one with money running out his ears.

The Gag On Gags

Hear any good Eisenhower jokes lately?

Not, we bet, on radio or television. Radio and TV comedians, who never shied away from gags about Harry Truman's piano playing, are strangely silent on the subject of politics these days.

Variety, the show biz bible, asks, "Why aren't the comedians puncturing the false fronts of the preposterous politicos like they used to?"

The Reporter suggests an answer: "Sponsors have brought on the new silence by telling their comedians what they can say and what they can't . . . Comedians have brought on the silence by lacking the guts to tell the sponsors and the little bands of vigilantes where they can get off."

Well, you know who's not afraid to laugh? The British. They poked fun at the Fuehrer in 1940 and nobody's going to tell them they can't laugh at Churchill, Khrushchev, Eisenhower, H-Bomb and all in 1955.

So if you'd like a refreshing change from the trembling timidity of the great American air, we suggest a BBC show called "Take It From Here" which WUNC runs tonight at 8:30. It might offend your prejudices, but it will make you laugh—which is what we always thought comedy was for.

Freedom's Defenders

Students at Carolina, State and WC have a national reputation for unusual freedom. They have that freedom chiefly because of the University administration.

A member of the General Assembly has said he may introduce a bill requiring faculty advisors for all student publications at the University, an idea which undoubtedly grew out of the sketch of a nude male published by the WC literary magazine, Coraddi.

Said Chancellor E. K. Graham of Woman's College: "The imposition of required advisors would pose a serious threat to responsibility and freedom."

Said UNC Dean of Students Fred Weaver: "A censored student newspaper would be worse than no newspaper at all."

The Daily Tar Heel, itself completely free, believes the faculty advisor idea will not come before the General Assembly. But if it should, it is good to know who is in our corner: The University's administrators, themselves.

George Happy At His New Country Home

Louis Kraar

HOW'S GEORGE, the campus collie, making out at his new country home?

I was wondering about George the other day, so I phoned Mrs. A. M. Jordan, treasurer of the Humane Society.

"George is perfectly happy," she said. Mrs. Jordan went on to explain that the big collie has made himself right at home with his new owners, the Crane children, who live on Dr. W. C. George's farm near University Lake.

(Yes, this is the same Dr. George who has been circulating the pro-segregation petitions.)

At any rate, George (the dog, not the segregation man) was turned over to the Cranes after local police refused to let him run loose in town as a stray.

After her report on George, Mrs. Jordan recalled how she had been pulling the collie out of scrapes with towns people, the police, and other dogs for over half-a-dozen years.

★

"I'VE HAD to rescue George several times. Once the dogcatcher came, and George had no tags. We had to hurry around to get some money for his vaccination," Mrs. Jordan recalled.

As we talked on, she remembered her first days in Chapel Hill in 1923 when "the place was full of dogs." She said that then the Rev. Alfred Lawrence was Episcopal minister and his dog would come to church to sit with the choir every Sunday.

"No one thought anything of it then," she said.

"Memorial Hall used to have eight sides, and dogs would come in and out all the time whenever something was going on there. But they didn't bother anybody," Mrs. Jordan recalled.

THE UNIVERSITY requires a C average of students to participate in a "leading activity" of Carolina.

Campus politicians, in drawing up their Election Law, declared years ago (and have revised it since the semester system) that one must have the average over two terms with a minimum of 27 hours.

Last fall David Reid, an orating Student Party member with drive and ambition, returned to the campus with the C average and not the hours. But the Student Party-powered Legislature pushed through a special bill lowering the hours from 27 to 24—if a student attends summer school.

And amazingly enough, David Reid had exactly the right number of hours under the new law, exactly 24 hours.

★

WHEN THE student Legislature this week started revising the Election Law with a complicated bill that would lower the hour requirements, first thing many of Reid's opponents (both in and out of the Student Party) thought was that he was trying to be eligible for spring elections.

However, the bill was sponsored by both parties. And Reid vows that the bill now in Legislature wouldn't affect him.

★

"I HEAR the Student Party is going to have a special meeting this week to try to help Charlie Wolf get his foot out of his mouth," quipped one University Party member in Y Court.

Actually, Wolf's speech declaring that the SP has "been torn by an internal struggle for power" rings with a candor and truth not often heard in campus political meetings.

Like any active party, the SP has had its conflicts this year. That was evident earlier in the school year when SP chief Joel Felishman tried to "censure" Manning Muntzing.

However, with the election just a half-dozen campaign speeches away, the SP is working together like one big happy party—they say.

At Last, The Grim Facts

Can We Rely On The H-Bomb?

Stewart Alsop

WASHINGTON—Admiral Lewis L. Strauss, Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, has at long last told the American people the grim facts about the hydrogen bomb—facts which the Russians certainly knew already, and which were first reported in this space many months ago.

On orders from the President, Chairman Strauss has revealed that fall-out from the hydrogen bomb blankets an area of about 7,000 square miles with lethally radio-active material. (These reporters, for once in a way, were over-optmistic, when they reported the area affected as between 4,000 and 6,000 square miles). By instructing Strauss to reveal the truth about fall-out, President Eisenhower has at least made it possible for the American people to consider their national situation in the light of reality. This must be considered a major gain.

CONTINUED TESTS

In his Presidentially-approved statement, Chairman Strauss has also answered a question which has been most anxiously debated in the highest government circles in recent weeks. The question is: Should we continue to test hydrogen weapons? The Eisenhower-Strauss answer is, in effect, "yes."

There is undoubtedly an element of risk in this answer, not only to living human beings but to their descendants, as the Strauss statement itself half-acknowledges. But it is no doubt the right answer all the same. It is the right answer for the same simple reason that the 1949 decision to make the hydrogen bomb in the first place was right—because we could not take the chance that the Russians would gain a decisive advantage over us.

When the first atomic bomb was exploded in 1945, the world set out on a new road, and no one can say where the road will lead. But the physicists—including Dr. Edward Teller, the peculiar genius of the hydrogen bomb—are sure that the hydrogen bomb is not the end of the road.

Even the monstrous Super-Super, the bomb with a power more than 20,000 times the power of the first atomic bomb, will not be the end of the road. And this country cannot afford to let the Soviet Union travel further or faster on this terrible road than the United States. We must be sure, to put it bluntly, that our weapons are at all times even more horrible than their weapons. And we cannot possibly be sure of this unless we constantly test our weapons.

Yet the Straus statement leaves unanswered the most important question of all. This is, quite simply, whether we are right to rely on the hydrogen bomb as our principal offensive weapon.

HOW MUCH RELIANCE?

There are experts who believe that there are universal and suicidal dangers in the hydrogen bomb, which are only hinted at in the Strauss report. For example, the report notes that radio strontium from hydrogen explosions could fall out at great distances "later to be eaten by humans or by grazing animals which, in turn, provide food for humans."

Radio strontium has a special affinity for bone. The human foetus is peculiarly sensitive to radiation. The danger here is that radio strontium fall-out on grazing areas might reach and destroy the foetus through a complicated grass - cattle - milk - bone-foetus chain-of-death.

The Strauss report notes that studies of this radio strontium danger are so far "reassuring." But would this be true of a full scale hydrogen war in which hydrogen bombs were used in great numbers? Might not this kind of war make still-births a universal phenomenon?

This suggests only one of the reasons why some very distinguished scientists are convinced that the hydrogen bomb is a weapon with a suicidal backlash. Some scientists, for example, believe that large numbers of hydrogen explosions will greatly increase the incidents of cancer; or will cause mutations in later generations; or will even, in the word of Nobel Prize winner, Dr. Edgar Adrian, "lead to a degree of radio activity which no one can tolerate or escape," and thus "end the human race."

WILL WE USE IT?

But suppose all these experts fears are wholly unfounded. Suppose the only danger is the local fall-out described in the Strauss report. Will we really ever use a weapon which rains death on an area the size of New Jersey? Will we use such a weapon when we know that the enemy has it too? Indeed, might we not hesitate to deal such indiscriminate death, even if we knew that the enemy could not reply in kind?

No one in his senses will argue that we should stop making these weapons, as long as the Russians are making them. But relying on such suicidal weapons as the central element in our power is something else again. And it does seem time to ask whether we are right to do so. It is not at all an easy question to answer, but it is time to ask it all the same.

'Anybody Care To Have A New Look At Civilian Defense?'

Sounds—Of The Days Gone By

Tom Spain

The magic name of Benny Goodman is now appearing on all kinds of record jackets, probably due to the coming of the motion picture story of his life.

Though Goodman has had few recording dates within the past couple of years, his sides keep coming up, sometimes dressed up in new albums, or transferred to long playing or 45 rpm recordings. The old masters have been reverently lifted from the vaults and releases like the '38 Carnegie Concert, the '37-'38 radio concerts, sextet albums, and assorted dance albums have been big sellers, and rightfully so, for there are few who can offer adverse criticism of the Goodman way of music. It is felt that the bringing back of the Swing King has done much for the advancement of today's jazz enthusiasm.

RCA Victor has gone back to the very beginning of the Goodman recording days (anybody's recording days) and proudly released what they call Vault Originals, under the X label.

In addition to many of the early jazz classics, there is a delightful ten-inch LP collection of Ben Pollack originals made in the late twenties. Along with the exceptional performances of the 17-year old Goodman, a rather weak trombonist named Glenn Miller and a better one called Jack Teagarden are featured. A couple of hustling tenor sax men, Larry Binyon and Bud Freeman, add to the already lively color of the group.

A FRONT PARLOR BAND

The music is not honest jazz. It is flavored quite well with the ragtime customs and popular appeal of the day. Vocals are plentiful and humorous—"jazzy" is the term of the twenties.

One might imagine the Andrews Sisters running to keep ahead of the Beiderbecke band while rendering HE'S THE LAST WORD, a stepped-up front parlor ballad of 1926, and he'd have a fair understanding of the Pollack treatments.

But the element of popular commercialism doesn't destroy the jazz feelings maintained by the musicians.

Goodman, then not long out of the proverbial short pants, shows his technical talent and superb tone, and does more than hold his own while playing with the big boys. On the 1927 recording of WAITIN' FOR KATY, along with Jimmy McPartland and brother Harry Goodman who was then on tuba, Goodman opens with a long clear solo, not unlike those which got the big band of '38 swinging into some of the better numbers. Glenn Miller's trombone sounds disappointingly weak and loose-jointed on his first solo, but the second strain reveals a talent quite promising, though embryonic.

CLIP CLOP AND BARITONE SAX

Epitomizing the ragtime school of music, SINGAPORE SORROWS opens with a clip-clop rhythm and a baritone sax solo by an unknown. The paper mache stereotype of the Oriental fashions in music might have accompanied Laurel and Hardy through some Eastern intrigue. There are three rather similar variations on SINGAPORE SORROWS, all ending with the crash of a gong. But despite the limitations of the tune itself, there are light and airy solos by Bud Freeman and Jack Teagarden, which very closely echo the fine work they're doing today.

The "X" label is a boon to old-time jazz fans, and certainly is a technical advantage for those who are interested in the background of the music of Miller, Goodman, McPartland and the like. And there's no question about recordings made in 1928 being just plain fun.

The big band era of the early Forties is again being relived in a re-issue of Artie Shaw recordings. One and all, the numbers collected on the new Victor Album, MY CONCERTO, are representative of the style which made the Shaw group the institution that it was. From the dignified and sophisticated CONCERTO FOR CLARINET, to the Hot Lips Page vocal rendition of ST. JAMES INFIRMARY, the Artie Shaw band recalls the time when good swing music was plentiful and new.

Parts I and II of CONCERTO FOR CLARINET indicate the constant effort on Shaw's part to make popular swing a respectable and worthy characteristic of American music. Supported by jazz artists and a fine string section, Shaw demonstrates his talents thoroughly, confirming his place as a top clarinetist of the swing era. His rides over the riffs and subtle breaks are worthy of his reputation.

SAUTER IN THE FORTIES

SUMMERTIME and DANCING ON THE CEILING are done in typical Shaw fashion, the slightly off-key, blue-note element present throughout.

Interesting as well as entertaining are Eddie Sauter's MAID WITH THE FLACCID HAIR, and SUITE NO. EIGHT. Sauter, who was arranging for Shaw in the Forties, shows his progressive elements of sound experimentation in the pretty ballad.

The music of Artie Shaw has been a long favorite, and this recording is not disappointing in the least. The album contains a varied number of selections and arrangements, and it is certainly indicative of the golden era of American dance music.

We Die At 30 Only To Be Buried At 70

In these vexed days of the mid-century, our civilization shows no signs of cracking apart from any lack of engineering ingenuity: our population portends no likelihood of disappearing through epidemics resulting from lack of medical skill; our political structure will not fall because of lack of advisement in the structure and codification of laws.

Our danger, rather, is that human beings have not learned the art of living together, harnessing primeval instincts into lives of harmonious emotional stability. Not enough of us understand the process of thinking.

Too many of us do not retain vital curiosity in the great issues of the day, but, as Nicholas Murray Butler once pointed out, die at the age of 30, only to be buried at 70!

Such curiosity requires great teaching, as you are all aware. And the highest performance of the teaching art is "teaching by infection." Such teachers are those who teach of themselves, rather than merely of a discipline as a thing apart.

How needed they are, how needed is a new emphasis on pursuit of the broad, the great, the whole in our education, in a day when the whole body of learning, once so well ordered and compact, has, as someone has said, "swollen until it has burst into ten thousand fragments."

—Party Line—

UP

By CHARLIE YARBOROUGH
University Party Chairman

This article begins a series of columns about the University Party. It is hoped the student will get a clearer idea of both parties and what they stand for. The following is concerned with the general character of the UP.

The University Party has no room for "professional" politicians. Party members are seen in all phases of campus life—not just in politics. From its ranks come leaders in athletics as well as scholarship. Members feel that politics has a place at Carolina, but that place must not be overemphasized. Carolina comes first, then politics.

The University Party also adheres to the standard of "conservative progressivism." Its members do not jump on bandwagons. It is the aim of the party to preserve the best in our student government tradition to the demands of changing student needs.

Finally, the University Party is the most representative political group on the campus. Not only are dormitories, fraternities and sororities well represented, but other groups also have a stake in good student government by their representation in the UP meetings. The party does not stand for any selfish clique or faction. It stands for all the students.

I would like to say that student government is no better or worse than the students themselves make it. As long as the students continue to take an active interest in the welfare of the whole group, the great tradition of student government at UNC will flourish.

It is the combination of honor, sincerity and responsibility that is the foundation of the "Carolina Way of Life." It is the goal of the University Party to maintain and build upon this foundation and thus help pave the way to an even greater University of North Carolina.

SP

By STUDENT PARTY ADVISORY BOARD

This week we want to explain to you how the student Legislature will go about spending the $18.00 which you pay as student fees each year.

The student Legislature:

Will spend $98,948.00 of the students' money this year. Eighty per cent of this money will go to Graham Memorial, The Yackety Yack, and The Daily Tar Heel. The other 20 per cent goes to the executive branch of student government, the Debate Council, the IDC, the Carolina Forum, the Publications Board and other student organizations provided for in the Student Consitution.

Has no control over the university Administration. When a grievance comes before the Legislature involving the administration or faculty, it is passed in the form of a resolution and is presented to the administration, with arguments, by the newly-created Welfare Board or Complaint Board. The administration may or may not pay any attention to these requests.

Is composed of fifty people elected for a term of one year; twenty-five are elected in the fall, twenty-five in the spring. They are elected from ten districts.

Was set up on its present basis in 1946. The idea of the student legislature evolved from the Phi and Di, which at one time controlled student government.

Besides determining the budget, passes bills pertaining to the Student Constitution, the election laws, the judiciary set-up; elects representatives to several boards and committees; passes on most presidential appointments.

Has a regular process for a bill to become a law. The bill is introduced on the floor of the Legislature and is referred to the proper committee for discussion, study, or change by that committee. The committee reports it out favorably or unfavorably, according to their opinion on it. At the next session, the bill is brought up, discussed, and voted on. It may be defeated here. If it does pass, it is sent to the president. If he does not sign it in ten days it has been vetoed. The Legislature may override a president's veto by a two-thirds vote.

Has had very few expressly partisan bills this semester. Legislators sometimes cross party line in voting. Why, then, have political parties? We will undertake to justify the parties in the next column.

YOU Said It, Now Sign It

The Daily Tar Heel prints all letters to the editor that are signed. We have received, this week, a number of letters disagreeing with The Daily Tar Heel's position on segregation that are either unsigned or signed with the names of "students" which are unlisted as students at Central Records Office. If the writers of these letters will identify themselves, the letters will be printed on this page.

Tar Heel Swimmers Swamp Clemson, Set Two Records

CUFF NOTES

By BERNIE WEISS

The following letter came in today, anonymously:

"It is to be expected that there should be partisan behavior by a team's supporters, but at Gore Gymnasium this past Wednesday night some of the Wake Forest fans exceeded the limits of partisanship in their rabid activity after the game which was won by Carolina, 83-79.

"A stone was thrown at one of the Carolina players as he left the gym, players were called names and aspersions cast on their religious beliefs. Then stones were thrown at the Carolina players' bus.

"When a player has performed well he deserves a hand even if he be an opponent. Win or lose, I hope that here at Carolina we shall always conduct ourselves like gentlemen and set an example of fine and memorable sportsmanship."

★

Another letter, again anonymous:

"Carolina is faced with the pleasant prospect of having superb basketball teams for the next few years.

"It is unfortunate that Woollen Gym can only seat some 6,000 fans. This sad situation could be solved very simply by changing the direction in which the court now runs, making the layout correspond to the length of the gym, not the width. By doing this, we could have end zone stands and thus accommodate some 10,000 people. The cost would be negligible and the school's coffers should swell."

A good idea. It has been under consideration for some time by officials and seems to be a practical solution to another similar problem—that of eventually building a basketball palace on the site of the Tin Can.

The increased income which would be realized by a slight revision in the gym now, changing the direction of the courts, would aid tremendously toward a fund for the construction of a House of Basketball like State 's or Dook's. As the man says above, it won't be long before UNC will be a nationally recognized court power if the improvement continues at its present rate.

Terps, 'Pack Fight Tonight For ACC Lead

The battle for the leadership of the Atlantic Coast Conference and the No. 1 seeded spot in the annual championship tournament March 3-4-5 will be two items on the block tonight at the Reynolds Coliseum when N. C. State and Maryland tangle at 8:15 p.m.

State, boasting a 22-4 mark on the season and a string of six straight victories, will be out to avenge an earlier 68-64 setback at the hands of the Terrapins at College Park, Md., on Jan. 13. A win would give State an 11-2 mark in loop play. The two teams are currently tied with 10-2 records.

Swimming Nurses Win Intramural Crown

The Nurses edged out the A. D. Pi's, 36-34, to win the women's swimming intramural crown Thursday night, besting 11 teams in the tourney.

The Pi Phi's took third place, getting 30½ points, according to Robin Fuller, student chairman.

Tankmen Take Second Place In Conference

Visiting Tigers Able To Get Only 1 First

North Carolina's varsity swimming team moved into undisputed second place in the Atlantic Coast Conference here today by swamping Clemson, 63-17.

Second Sacker's Knee Injury Still Remains Questionable

By MARSHALL WALDMAN

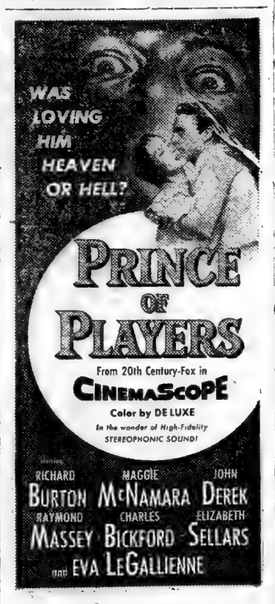
The condition of Harry Lloyd, Carolina second baseman, was still questionable today.

Lloyd was injured Wednesday afternoon during practice at Emerson Field. He twisted his knee while lunging for an outside pitch during batting practice.

There is hope that Lloyd did not tear a cartilage in his knee which could sideline him for the better part of the season. He played good ball around the keystone sack last season and was expected to carry a big load for the Tar Heels this year.

LLOYD WILL stay off his feet for a few days until the extent of his injury is determined. If he gets the doctor's nod, he should rejoin the club in about a week and be ready to play at full strength in about two weeks.

Aside from Lloyd's injury, the Tar Heels are slowly but surely getting those old winter kinks out of their arms and legs. The pitchers have been reporting earlier than the rest of the squad and are beginning to let loose. The infielders and outfielders have had their turns both in the field and in the batting cage.



Coach Walter Rabb had the boys practice the sacrifice bunt and leads from first base. The coach seemed generally pleased with the squad's work up to this point. Rabb has also been experimenting with Albert Long, who played the outfield for the Tar Heels last year. Long has been moved into the infield and is working out at shortstop, where he played during his high school days.

If training runs along on schedule and the weather remains good, there is an excellent chance that the team will be broken up into two squads toward the latter part of next week for an intra-squad game.

Two-Fold Gymnastic Rivalry Today

By CHUCK STRONG

The rivalry that heightens any Duke-Carolina athletic event will be two-fold today when the UNC gymnasts meet Duke at 2 o'clock at Woollen Gym. In addition to the natural rivalry between the two schools there is also a long history between the two coaches.

Bill Meade, coach of the Carolina gymnastics team, and Ray Sorsenson, Duke's coach, were gymnastirs teammates in high school and college. During this period they were continuously meeting each other for first place honors.

Meade has yet to lose a meet to a school coached by an ex-teammate and these include Pittsburg, West Virginia, Georgia Tech and the Illinois Undergraduate School.

PRACTICE TRACK

The Tar Heel track team will be host to the State College Wolfpack in a practice meet in the Tin Can today at 2 o'clock. The feature race will be the mile run with Jim Beatty of Carolina and Mike Shea among others battling for top honors.

Maryland May Take ACC Mat Title Today

The grappling team of the University of Maryland, which defeated Duke yesterday afternoon, will be looking for the clincher on the Atlantic Coast Conference title here this afternoon when it takes on Carolina.

The match is scheduled for 4 o'clock in Woolen Gym.

Though Carolina is heavily outmanned, the Tar Heel grapplers have steadily improved throughout the season individually and as a team. They would like nothing better today than to knock off the Terps and gain their first win of the year.

Pete McGehee, Miles Gregory and Hugh Cowan will bolster a slightly revised starting lineup which Coach Sam Barnes will send to the mat.

Big Stakes Today In AAU Track Meet

NEW YORK, Feb. 19. (AP) — Wes Santee, Gunnar Nielsen, Fred Dwyer and Co. go at it again in the mile today in the National AAU Championships, but their performances for a change won't be of the foremost concern to the track and field set.

Tank Classic Begins Today At 9:30 O'clock

Nearly 150 top high and prep school swimmers will begin trials at 9:30 this morning to open the ninth annual Southern Interscholastic Swimming Championships in Bowman-Gray Pool here.

Granby High School, of Norfolk, Va., is the defending champion in its division, but Greensboro High is expected to be a close presser today. Coach Pat Earey's Greensboro team won the Southeastern Scholastic title in Atlanta two weeks ago.

What young people are doing at General Electric

Young specialist in community relations makes friends in 101 plant cities

General Electric now has 131 plants in 101 cities, and one problem is common to all: How can the company show people in every community that it is a good neighbor?

This responsibility is shared by many and stimulated by 32-year-old John T. McCarty. His job: Consultant, Program Services in Plant Community Relations.

McCarty's work is varied, exciting

McCarty's assignment is to help each of the General Electric plants tell its neighbors what it is doing, what it hopes to do, and how it fits into the community.

He must be ready to travel to 26 states. He prepares community-relations manuals for use in all 101 plant cities. He supervises surveys of community sentiment, and tests the local effects of the company's advertising. And he helps plant management maintain friendly contacts with civic, religious, educational and other community leaders.

23,000 college graduates at General Electric

This is a sensitive and important job. McCarty was readied for it in a careful step-by-step program of development. Like McCarty, each of the 23,000 college-graduate employees is given his chance to grow, to find the work he does best, and to realize his full potential. For General Electric has long believed this: When fresh young minds are given freedom to make progress, everybody benefits — the individual, the company, and the country.

JOHN McCARTY joined G. E.'s Advertising Department as a copywriter after army service and graduation from U. of Michigan in 1947. He has held his present job since June 1952.

Show Boat In 2nd Week: Nerves, Work

By CHAL SCHLEY

A disrupted week brought cases of nerves to several in the cast of Show Boat as the musical extravaganza moved into its second week of development.

Monday saw members of the chorus trying out for the small speaking parts while the principals memorized their own lines.

Tuesday, the Salzburg Marionettes were in Memorial Hall, so the entire cast went through speaking parts elsewhere.

By Wednesday, though, the production was in high gear again. During the day, the stage crew installed the three levels of platforms on which various sets will rest. That evening the hectic business of "blocking in" began.

The principals had been studying their stage motions for 10 days, but to the rest of the cast this block-in process was a new endeavor. Scene by scene, cue line by cue line, with frequent directorial interruptions, the cast began to learn motions which will soon become second nature to them.

STRAIGHT FROM HOLLYWOOD

There was great excitement over in the costume shop Thursday. This was occasioned by the arrival from Hollywood of two dresses, one worn by Marge Champion and the other by Ava Gardner in the MGM production of Show Boat. Next week, these dresses will be on display at a downtown store.

But there was little time for excitement. Mrs. Rains, the costume director, said that there was still a big job to do. Old costumes were being revamped and new ones created at a furious rate. Starting Monday, a professional seamstress will be hired to help out. Even so, Mrs. Rains said that the end of the job probably would be in sight as the second curtain rose on March 4, the opening night.

In the scene shop, Don Treet reported real progress. The construction of the set is pretty well finished, but the painting is yet to do. According to Treet, the painting is a very time-consuming job.

Even so, if all goes as it should, the set will be up next weekend, or by Monday at the latest.

FAME SPREADING RAPIDLY

Word is spreading all over the state about this show, according to John Parker, business manager of the Playmakers.

Since this is the first non-professional production of Show Boat, many people are itching to see it who might not get the chance otherwise. Already, letters and phone calls for tickets have been pouring in at the office.

Tickets will go on sale to season ticket-holders on Monday and to the general public on Thursday. They will be sold for $2 each and all seats will be reserved.

Three performances are scheduled on March 4, 5 and 6, one show per evening.

Editors note: interviews with members of the cast will be presented early next week, together with a complete listing of the cast.

No, you're not seeing double! Above we just said that Allen Frucci was elected president of Phi Kaps and it looks like wielding the gavel must run in the family for Allen's older brother RICHARD FRUCCI (also of Albany, Ga., naturally) was elected president of Pi Kappa Phi frat. Other officers elected were RICHARD JACKSON, Jacksonville, secretary; PETE ASHE, Riversville, W. Va., treasurer; BILL RAPP, Thomasville, historian; and JACK TAYLOR, Aberdeen, chaplain.

Unique is hardly the word to describe the Tuesday afternoon party that the Chi Phis and the Phi Delts are jointly sponsoring. During that afternoon's yard party (weather permitting) dedication of the new garbage house will take place.

Other news from the Chi Phi house includes the pinnings of ROLLIE TILLMAN from Lake Wales, Fla., to MARY WINDLEY DUNN, Chi O, from New Bern. Also DOUG ROYCROFT from Madison to CAROL SUE HUMPHREY, WC student from Southern Pines.

A wining, dining and dancing group this weekend are the Lambda Chi's. Last night they were guests of the Duke chapter for a supper dance at the Carolina Inn. They'll make that their headquarters again tonight as they feast and make merry in honor of their pledge weekend. Oh well, it happens but once a year, you know.

Whoa! What gives here? The men in the little white suits and lab jackets are switching to Indian apparel tonight. The PHI CHI med fraternity is having an Apache party at Turnage's in Durham. Hope no heads are scalped so that the fellas on autopsy call won't have their evening's fun interrupted.

There's a mighty proud bunch of KA's these days and well they should be for pretty brunette SHIRLEY SIMPSON is their new KA Rose. Shirley, a Pi Phi pledge, is from Gastonia and is pinned to ALLEN JOHNSON of Ayden. She will be presented formally at the Old South Ball in April.

Recent KA pinnings include: KARL BARKLEY, Raleigh, to ALICE SMITH, WC student from Raleigh. GORDON FORESTER, North Wilkesboro, to NELL BRAME, Phi Mu at RMC from North Wilkesboro. DICK HUDSON, Vandemere, to JEANETTE BANKS, Grantsboro, student at Rex Hospital in Raleigh.

Playing the leading roles are Martha Fouse, Chapel Hill, as Magnolia Hawkes, daughter of Cap'n Andy, owner of the show boat; and John Shearin, Weldon, as Gaylord Ravenal, professional gambler who becomes leading man of the show boat acting company.

Mrs. Fouse has recently finished the role of Cherubino in the UNC Music Department's production of The Marriage of Figaro.

Shearin has appeared in numerous other Playmakers productions, including Of Thee I Sing, The Beggar's Opera and Tread the Green Grass. Abolish Senate?

Tonight at 8 o'clock the Dialectic Senate will debate a bill calling for the abolition of the United States Senate.

According to Larry McElroy, president pro tem, proponents of the bill are expected to argue that the organization of the Senate is unfair to the larger states, and that a unicameral legislature would be more democratic.

McElroy said that the opponents of the measure are expected to contend that the Senate is necessary as part of our tripartite system of government.

The Di debates are open to all students, and McElroy invited any interested students to attend tonight's meeting.

Second Book Of Poetry Is To Be Printed

The Old Well Publishers of Chapel Hill have announced the forthcoming release of a collection of poems by University student Ron Levin.

Entitled Rebellion, Levin's first book is the second publication of the Old Well Contemporary Poets Series and appears in a limited edition of 100 copies. It will be released on March 1.

The author of Rebellion is from Williamston.

In a Publisher's Note to the book, the editors of the Contemporary Poets Series indicate a purpose "to bring to the public expressions that are not the fatras of magazine and newspaper fill ins.

Another Old Well book, In This The Marian Year, appeared earlier during the year. It is a collection of 31 poems by H. A. Sieber of Chapel Hill.

Go To The Beach? Naw, Let's Go To Carolina's Back 400

Carolina students will have a new picnicking place this spring.

Chancellor R. B. House announced yesterday that over 400 acres of land at Kerr Dam have been assigned to the University for a period of 25 years.

The area, which is near Henderson, carries facilities for boating, fishing, swimming, hunting, camping and almost any form of organized sport.

Chancellor House said yesterday "It has been made clear from the start that any use of this land by student organizations will be under the same regulations as obtained on the campus of the University at Chapel Hill." In response to questioning, he said this includes drinking regulations.

Dr. Harold D. Meyer of the University faculty is chairman of a committee appointed to administer and develop the area, which is to be used both by the University and by the community of Chapel Hill. According to the Chancellor, "There are no known restrictions on our hospitality to other communities. It is a splendid opportunity for voluntary development by students, faculty and members of the community."

17 Visitors To Staff Carolina Summer Session, Says Phillips

UNC Summer Session Director Guy Phillips yesterday released the 1955 session announcement.

Seventeen visiting staff members have been selected, from institutions in various parts of the country, to supplement the instruction provided by regular staff members. The students' activity program during the session will be directed by Roy Holsten, regular director of the program.

Summer session development throughout the nation indicates considerable increase in enrollment in the future, Phillips said. Indications are that more Korean veterans will be using summer session credits to speed up their college programs, and professional groups, including public school and college teachers, will increase because of the relationship of degree programs to increase in income, he said. Special content courses in the science fields, mathematics and English are being offered in the University's program for secondary teachers. These courses, designed to fit into the peculiar subject matter needs of teachers, are of graduate nature, and fit into the degree requirements which call for both professional education and professional subject matter credit.

The 16 Du Pont fellowships, amounting to $225 each plus tuition and fees, have been granted to enable teachers to attend Summer Session. There are also 25 other scholarships available in the general area of teaching personnel, and a summer session loan fund is available to a limited extent to assist teachers and regular students who may need temporary financial help during the summer.

A number of institutes and conferences will be held on the campus during the summer. One of the most important of these, according to Phillips, will be the annual session of the Junior College Work Conference.

Dormitory space for men, women and married students will be available during the session.

UP & SP Choose Candidates For Spring Campus Elections

UP Nominates Soph, Senior Class Leaders

By CHARLES JOHNSON

Eighty persons attended the University Party meeting last night as nominations for candidates for spring elections began.

Candidates for senior and sophomore class officers were nominated.

Those nominated for senior class officers were president ,Ogburn Yates; vice-president, Ken Anderson; secretary, Judy Talley; treasurer, David Whitaker and social chairman, Kitty Coleman.

Candidates nominated for sophomore class officers were president, Jim Kimzey; vice-president Steve Phelps; secretary, Barbara Hunt; treasurer, George Johnson, and Social chairman, Amy Morse.

After Kimzey was nominated, there arose a question, What constitutes a majority in the nominating policy of the University Party? The UP voted to retain the plurality method, which awarded the nomination to the one having the highest number of votes. The majority method requires that the winning nominee have more votes than the total of the votes of all the other candidates.

The plurality method was used only in the nomination of the sophomore class officers. The method used in the nomination of senior class officers required that the nominee have a complete majority.

Bill Sabiston, vice chairman of the party, gave a steering committee report. He announced that Laura Ervin had been elected secretary of the steering committee. Sabiston said the committee wanted him to stress the importance of the attendance of UP legislature members at legislative sessions. The committee felt that this would be one way to combat the "Student Party give-away programs," which usually occur before elections, Sabiston said.

Nominations for candidates for legislature seats in men's dorm and women's dorm districts will begin next week.

N. C. State Has 4,282 For Spring Term

RALEIGH, Feb. 21 — North Carolina State College's spring semester enrollment stands at 4,282 students, the college's Registration Office reported today.

Juanita Scott, assistant registrar, explained that the spring semester enrollment is one student larger than the fall semester registration and marks the second time since 1920 that State College has had a larger enrollment during its spring quarter or semester than its previous fall term.

A summary of the enrollment figures showed that there are 53 women and 4,229 men. Among those registering for the spring semester are 941 veterans of the Korean fighting, 108 new freshmen and 125 students transferring from other colleges and universities.

The School of Engineering, with 2,127 students, attracted nearly half of the entire student body and led the five other major schools in the number of students registered.

The enrollment in each of the five other schools includes 772 in the School of Agriculture, 215 in the School of Design, 408 in the School of Education, 194 in the School of Forestry and 446 in the School of Textiles.

A breakdown of the enrollment by classes shows that there are 1,533 freshmen, 944 sophomores, 637 juniors, 601 seniors, 46 students seeking professional degrees, 401 graduate students and 119 special or non-classified students.

Dr. Reid will attend a panel discussion in Lenoir Hall at 6 p.m. with the education fraternity. At 8 p.m. he will speak to the sociology fraternity in the Alumni Building.

Thursday Dr. Reid will speak at 8 a.m. in Dr. Allen Going's history class and at 10 a.m. in Dr. Johnson's sociology class. At 12:45 he will address faculty members and the Ministerial Association. His subject will be "The Role of the Professor in Social Change." The dinner meeting which he will address tomorrow night at 6 o'clock will be held in the Episcopal Parish House and will be open to all students, faculty members and

Six Incumbents Are Included In SP Roster

By NEIL BASS

The Student Party met last night in a packed session — 100 persons — to name candidates for five legislative districts Of the 13 vacant seats, six nominations were for incumbents.

Given the SP stamp of approval as nominees in dorm men's I were Al Laughinghouse and Ted Kemp; selected to run in dorm men's II were Jim Holmes and John Heath; nominated in dorm men's III were Sam Wells (incumbent) and Jerry Clark for one year seats, and Ray Long (incumbent) six months seat; in dorm men's IV were Tom Lambeth (incumbent), Harold Downing (incumbent) Vade Rhodes and Benny Craven; dorm women's districts. Sue Fink (incumbent), Donna Ashcraft and Jan Jarvis.

The nominations appeared to create little interest while candidates were being chosen for dorm men's I and II, as only two names were placed in the running for each, but matters became more controversial as other offices were opened.

The nominees, of which there were several newcomers to the SP political scene, heard a statement from Dave Reid, floor leader, outlining the duties of a SP legislator. Reid told the group that a place in the legislature offered the student "a wonderful opportunity to serve student government."

Don Geiger, party chairman, asked the newly-chosen candidates to sign a pledge stating that they would "wage an active campaign" and "support the party platform" even if they lost.

Describing the nominees, he voiced the opinion that they were the "finest list of candidates in the history of the University."

Legislature Sets Up Board For Complaints

The student Legislature has set up a complaints board.

The board, legislation for which was passed by last semester's Legislature, was created for students who have complaints concerning any part of University life, or of the University itself, according to spokesmen for the board.

The board will air complaints and then turn them over to the Executive Committee of student Legislature for action.

Composing the panel will be Bob Harrington, chairman, from dorm men's districts; Jack Hudson, from dorm men's; Ruth Jones, from dorm women's, and Bobbie Walker, from town women's.

The board will meet at least every two weeks, according to its bylaws. Meeting places will very, according to Chairman Harrington.

First session will be held this afternoon at 3 o'clock in Graham Memorial. Students with complaints are welcome.

Petition Author Levin Asks For Signed Rolls

Ron Levin, author of the pro-integration petition, has asked that all completed copies be turned in Friday morning.

A later date will be set for those petitions which are incomplete. Levin said yesterday, "The campaign is going fairly well. We estimate between six and 800 names at present; we want at least 1,500."

A table for signing the petition is in Y Court each morning from 12 noon and in the Y offiee all day.

Levin urged that anyone wishing to help should contact him at the Y Court or phone 2031.

'These Barriers Are Remarkably Fragile'

Timothy Wood, when he wrote the letter to The Greensboro Daily News reprinted on this page, probably did not know that this is Brotherhood Week.

He didn't need to. What he had to say about segregation in the University came directly from his experience, and from his beliefs about the fighting ability of a man, no matter what his color.

In the interest of Brotherhood Week, here are some comparable statements by others, who, like Carolina's Timothy Wood, have come to know what brotherhood is.

To Brooks Atkinson, the New York Times theatre critic, the word "brother" is the most sublime word in the English language. In his book "Once Around The Sun" he says,

> Understanding between brothers does not have to be renewed by frequent demonstrations of affection, for it is permanent year after year, and unspoken clear across the globe and possibly into eternity. The finest world that people can imagine is the brotherhood of man.

Ralph J. Bunch is a Negro, a United States representative to the United Nations, one of 4,000 staff members of all colors, religions, languages, and cultures. Is this a Tower of Babel at 42nd and First Avenue in New York City, Ralph Bunche?

> . . . We find that these carriers are remarkably fragile. All of these people, so widely diversified in origin and background, work and play together in impressive harmony. Genuine friendships cut across all lines; there is an easy informality and camaraderie in relationships; and there is, of course, no little courting and marriage. It is a genial human company, enriched by its very diversity.
>
> After all, there is nothing so important in this world as people giving expression to the good that is in all of us by amity toward each other, by respecting each other and by acting generally like civilized beings.

Faith Baldwin, too, seems to talk Timothy Wood's language.

> If we're to be a united nation, consolidated in the old ideals growing only in the soils of freedom, we cannot afford prejudice. Nationality, race . . . these spring from the impartial accident of birth, reflecting neither credit nor discredit. They're as unimportant in judging the quality of an individual as the set of an eye, the color of hair. Man's brotherhood is inherent in the experiences shared by every human being; birth, pain, struggle and death; innocence and guilt; worship and love. None is unique; none escapes.
>
> Take a knife. Stab a Jew, a Christian of any creed, a Negro. Each bleeds. This is the blood spilled on many battlefields; the brother-blood. Few would attempt the experiment. But too many of us stab daily, with the light word, the criticism, ridicule, rumor, and lie . . . and in the back.
>
> God, forgive us.

Who's Running For President This Spring?

Louis Kraar

AS THE intrigue of campus politics heightens each day (for the politicans), names of presdential candidates and their supporters change. However, by now it is quite clear that the Student Party will run either Manning Muntzing or Don Fowler for student body president.

The University Party will run Ed McCurry for president.

THE REBEL Yell, the "news of Stacy" dorm, summed up the blazer situation this week quite adequately.

Blazers, as you remember are the school jackets being pushed by the Inter-Dormitory Council.

Said the Rebel Yess: "Don't think those blazers sold as well as the I.D.C. had hoped they would. We understand that only about a hundred were sold in the two days they were on sale. Probably more of the blazers would have been sold had they been a little cheaper and advertised differently."

AFTER SO MUCH talk about how Dook students invade Chapel Hill haunts (like the Rat), I decided to turn the tables on the Durham imitators of the Ivy League.

"Open to Duke students and their guests," the sign read in front of the Devil's Den. Overlooking the mispelling of Dook, I proceeded down the steps to the plush dance place and—at the same time—tried to look Ivy League.

The Den is Duke's counterpart voices of friends and critics of about twice as fancy, but also has an air of complete coolness. Even the photo murals on the walls have a detached air.

Specialties of the Den are fruit drinks (non-alcoholic, of course) with alcoholic-sounding names. It's a nice place, so if you find your week-end haunts dominated by Dookites, just swing over to Durham and repay the visit.

MOST STUDENTS remember poet Carl Sandburg by a short thing about the fog coming on "little cat feet."

Sunday night, over the NBC radio network, a salute to Sandburg was presented. And, after hearing the show, my faith in radio has been restored considerably.

Narrated by Dave Garroway, the Sandburg show told the story of an American poet through the voires of friends and critics of his work. Sandburg, the man, came through more clearly than high-C's on high-fi records.

The poet's brother-in-law described Sandburg at their first meeting: "He had a bang of hair like a big blob of snow on a pine tree." A friend observed him at work in a book store: "I don't think any human being smokes a cigar down to the minute dimension that he does." These, of course, aren't important facts about Sandburg, but they are the personal touches that round out his personality.

Sandburg's voluminous work on Lincoln seems to have established him permanently as an American literary figure. When Ernest Hemingway received the Nobel Prize, he cited Sandburg as just as worthy a recipient.

Sandburg himself joked that when future generations ask whether the poet ever won a Nobel Prize, critics will say: "Yes, Sandburg won a Nobel Prize—from Ernest Hemingway."

It's heartening—at any rate—to see radio pay tribute to authors at a time when many college English departments require an author to be dead before they can praise him.

Shape Of Things To Go

After Catastrophe, The Millenium

A World Embracing Vision

Ed Yoder

(This is the second of two columns on the Bahai Faith and Walter Wootten.—Editor.)

Must civilization be "purified" by destruction?

The members of the Bahai faith believe so—and believe that what Walter Wootten, the representative of the new faith on the Carolina campus, called a "severe upheaval" will not be long in coming.

The purge by catastrophe to to which members of the Bahai faith look will, they say, parallel the flood of Noah's time, will clear the air for the millenium.

The catastrophe will clear the air for the millenium of world government. Believing, as the Faith does, in the oneness of man, the uniform and continuous base of all higher religion, in world parliament and tribunal, it believes too that world government is the natural end of political progress.

SUPER-SPHERES

No matter what personal theological view you take of the Bahai teachings, their recognition of the need—and actual existence—of unity in the world holds an essential place. The Western world, for example, has gone a long way from isolation and city-statism in pre-Christian times to the super-spheres of influence cut out by Russia and the United States. Toynbee, the great British historian, sees federation as the true end of political advancement.

So it is not inconsistent with world trends that in a time of division Bahai stresses—and has stressed since the first of Baha'u'llah's utterances—unity; that in a time of conflict, or impending conflict, Bahai stresses peace.

BAHAI AND THE LEAGUE

Interestingly, the Bahaists believe their faith had a significant impact on Woodrow Wilson's thought in the days before his noble but ill-destined fight for the League of Nations. Wootten pointed out that Wilson, according to the testimony of his daughter, burned midnight oil over Bahai literature before 1909. The idea of world unity left its stamp on the thinking of Wilson—and one of the early sources o fthat idea, Bahaists like to think, was the writing of Baha'u'llah.

Man, according to Baha'u'llah's teaching, finds his identity in dedication to the cause of unity:

"That one indeed is a man," he wrote, "who, today, dedicateth himself to the service of the entire human race. . . Let your vision be world embracing rather than confined to your own self. . .

The fundamental purpose animating the Faith of God and His Religion is to safeguard the interests and promote the unity of the human race, and to fosier the spirit of love and fellowship amongst men. . . The earth is but one country and mankind its citizent."

MERCHANTS AND MONARCHS

But, the Faith holds, the new millenium can't be rung in until after the purification through destruction. The purification may come, explained Wootten, by the instruments of war—or by geological catastrophe—and at any time.

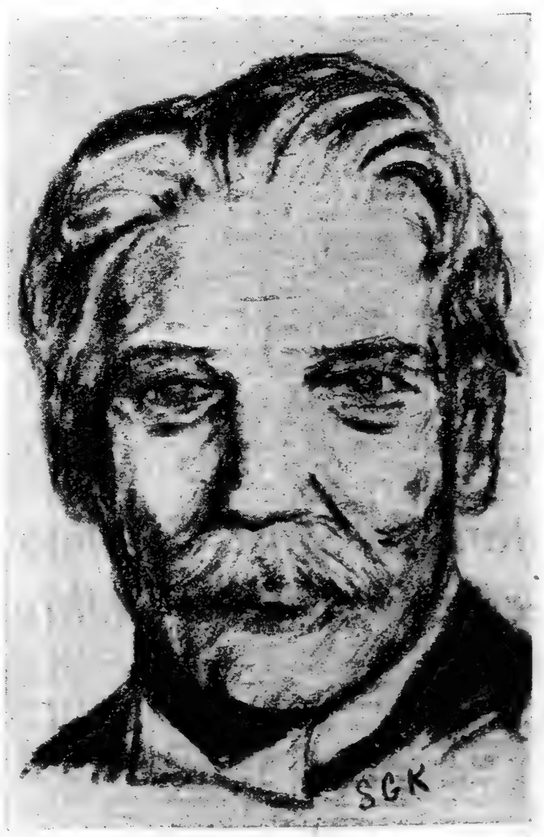
Space has not permitted much beyond a surface consideration of Bahai theology. Mr. Wootten urges those who find an interest in the faith to attend his periodical meetings.

But certainly any faith which stresses as strongly as Bahai the need for unity and harmony in the world has, by that virtue alone, a mandate on the consideration of thinking students.

Walter Wootten and the new faith he represents have, perhaps, a significant message for this hour and generation. They deserve a hearing.

Thinker, Doer, Healer, Artist

"There must, after all, be an indestructible good core in most people .Or else they would never have realized his simple greatness."



Albert Einstein said that of Albert Schweitzer; and by Dr. Einstein's yardstick, people must be getting better. For Albert Schweitzer's 80th birthday recently occasioned an international outpouring of love and respect for the "great thinker, the humble doer, the healer and the artist."

Out of that world-wide devotion have come a number of important literary contributions. One of the most insightful is a book of superb photographs and sympathetic text, THE WORLD OF ALBERT SCHWEITZER (Harpers. $5.).

Erica Anderson, who took the photographs, spent almost four years in Lambarene, French Equatorial Africa, and in Gunsbach, in Alsace, France, where Sweitzer ministers to mankind; and Eugene Exman, who wrote the text, also visited those places. The combination of their talents brings to the reader of this book a new understanding of the Schweitzer mission to the world. For in this treatment, the 169 photographs are worth almost all of the words that have been written about Schweitzer.

His life, it should be remembered, has involved no preaching to men; he has not warned, he has not moralized. He has lived, and his life's example is portrayed in this book.

Here is Schweitzer playing Bach at Gunsbach, performing surgery at Lambarene, replacing fears and superstition and taboos with faith; and not alone among the natives along his African "Hospital Street" who are afflicted with leprosy and sleeping sickness, but among others, not so primitive, but suffering from even deeper diseases.

ALBERT SCHWEITZER
. . . No man is permanently a stranger

Schweitzer's religion is the religion of love. "No man," he has said, "is ever completely and permanently a stranger to his fellow man. Man belongs to man. Man has claims on man."

That sort of belief deserves examination in the day of Total Destruction. No man, we venture, should long remain a stranger to THE WORLD OF ALBERT SCHWEITZER.—C. K.

Maryland, My Maryland: In The Classroom

Time Magazine

When Harry ("Curley") Byrd ran for Governor of Maryland last fall, his Republican opponents raised quite a fuss about one aspect of his career: his 18 years as president of the University of Maryland. As most Maryland voters knew, the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools had recently completed a through examination of the University, and rumor had it that its confidential report was far from favorable.

After keeping it under wraps for a month, the university's secret is out. The association's haymaker: unless Byrd's successor William Elkins straightens out the campus by April 1956, the university may no longer be accredited . . .

Although football players number 1.5 percent of the student body, they got 54 percent of all undergraduate scholarship funds. Furthermore, said the association, some of their academic records were a farce.

Among the cases the association cited:

A physical education student who, in spite of credits earned for passing examinations in "Varsity Sports" was dropped later his freshman year in 1949, was readmitted the next fall even though he did not report for make-up summer school. Then he flunked out again, only to be readmitted in 1953.

Another physical education student who flunked out as a freshman in January 1953 but was promptly readmitted in February . . .

A football co-captain who, in spite of cheating on a physiology exam, inched himself up—after five years—to the junior class. His "junior" year curriculum: Sport Skills (a required freshman course which he had already taken), an advanced Sport Skills (a required sophomore subject), Basic Body Control (another required freshman course), Introducton to Education (which he had taken in his first year), American Government (which he had taken in his second year), History and American Civilization (which he had taken twice before with grades of D and F).

A New View

The Petition

Timothy Wood

Editor of the Daily News:

I feel it my duty to comment on an article contained in your paper of Feb. 15 headlined, "Integration Opposed At UNC." This article stated that over 1,000 students signed a petition protesting racial integration in public schools, which includes and refers to the University itself.

The very fact that only 1,000 out of a total of over 6,000 students in the student body signed this petition is eloquent proof that by far he great majority are not in accord with the minority group.

As a former paratrooper attending Carolina on the GI Bill, I feel insulted that a fellow trooper with a different complexion is not wanted at the same school as myself. Perhaps if the cosigners of this petition had fought side by side with Negroes in combat, their views on racial prejudice might have been different. I hope so.

Both Sides Of Formosa Debate Ignoring Facts

Joseph Alsop

TAIPEI, Formosa—The amount of drivel being talked at home about a Formosa cease-fire really exceeds the reasonable public drivel allowance by many decibels. Judging by the echoes here, both sides of the debate have achieved an almost total disregard of the on-the-spot facts.

Presumably what they are arguing about is a guaranteed cease-fire down the middle of the Formosa Strait. The Chinese Nationalists would give up their remaining offshore islands. The Chinese Communists would give up their ambition to conquer Formosa and the Pescadores. And this arrangement would be guaranteed by other powers, with America and the Soviet Union in the lead.

Those like Sen. Knowland, who turn purple and bellow "appeasement" at the mere mention of such an arrangment, have forgotten the real facts of the Chinese Nationalist situation.

THE RE-LEASHING

The offshore islands are only important to the Chiang Kai-shek government if one of two things is going to happen: if there is going to be an immediate battle for Formosa itself; or if the re-invasion of the mainland is going to be attempted. But the object of the cease-fire proposal is to avert a battle for Formosa. And the talk about re-invading the mainland is dishonest, or moonstruck, or both at once.

In the first place, as Sen. Knowland must know, Chiang Kai-shek has now been carefully re-leashed. The secret protocol of the Formosa treaty absolutely forbids any Chinese Nationalist attack on the mainland without American consent. American consent will certainly not be granted unless there is a general war.

In the second place, the Nationalists would not be able to attack the mainland without the most massive outside help, even if Chiang Kai-shek were unleashed all over again. Despite the inflow of American arms in fact, the Chinese Nationalists are steadily growing weaker in relation to the Communists.

The Peking government today has something like 20 divisions of all kinds, and it is strong and growing stronger in the air. The Generalissimo's government has not more than 24 divisions, with a very small air force. Even Chiang's navy is now inferior to the Communist navy. What honest man can talk seriously of re-invasion when this is the balance of strength?

In addition, the Generalissimo's soldiers from the mainland are aging fast. Replacement with Formosan recruits has already started.

The Formosans appear to be increasingly reconciled to the Taipei government. The American military advisory group thinks they will make good soldiers. But they have no personal attachments to the mainland. And Formosan troops will surely balk at any such hair-brained adventure as a re-invasion of the mainland that is not part of some much larger effort.

These facts bluntly indicate what should be the real role of Formosa. On the one hand, there should be a strong military force here, not for dream invasions, but to constitute a permanent threat on the Communist flank just in case the Peking government decides to start a general Asian war.

On the other hand, Formosa's primary aim should be that "political re-invasion" of the mainland which Prime Minister O. K. Yui himself admits must precede the military re-invasion. Conditions on the mainland are bad and growing worse. The Chinese people are like camels, bearing heavy burdens for long periods but finally rebelling at last straws. When and if the Communist last straw comes, Formosa should be able to offer the people of the mainland a hope and an alternative.

But the error of Clement Attlee, Sen. Morse and even President Eisenhower is to believe that a cease-fire can be obtained by wishing for it. It should not be necessary to answer the Attlee-Morse theory, that they way to do business with Communists is to be nice to them—to show goodwill by giving them the offshore islands as a gracious present.

Unfortunately the theory of the President and his policy makers does not seem to be much more workable than the Attlee-Morse theory. Judging by the Communist demeanor, there is almost no hope of getting a cease-fire on the present system, by mumbling that we just may fight for the offshore islands if we happen to feel like it that day.

There will be more hope of a cease-fire if we say that unless we get one, we are ready and willing to fight for the offshore islands, period: But even then, alas, the odds will only be even. The ugly truth is that a cease-fire may well be unattainable until the conventional moment, which is after there has been some firing.

'Pack Here Tonight; Seeks No. 1 Seeding In ACC Tourney

CUFF NOTES

By BERNIE WEISS

Tonight's game against N C. State is the final home encounter of the year for two North Carolina players who have contributed much to the team this season.

Co-captains Paul Likins and Al Lifson are the ones.

The fact is they are a couple of guys whose names do not always show an outstanding game in the box scores. High scoring, of course, is the trade mark of an outstanding player, but there are many in this category with averages which do not tell the truth about their talents.

Two such people are seniors Lifson and Likins, and the proof of their ability lies in the fact that they were chosen co-captains by the men who know them best—their coaches.

Likins, who had a starting berth for much of the season, was ousted from this position by sophomore Bob Young. Young got hot, began to score, and Likins sat down. But he was sitting on one of the weakest benches in the conference and he remained the only person capable of coming into a game at its roughest spots to spell Len Rosenbluth or Young or someone else.

This occasion arose many times and Likins was always up to the job. A good example was the Tar Heels' most recent game against Wake Forest. Early in the game Rosenbluth left for a few minutes and in the second half Young fouled out with about 10 minutes to go. Both times it was Likins who came off the bench and took over.

Lifson, on the other hand, was always a starter. There were times, too, when he scored better than 20 points, and his average now reads about 14.

Al is the person who got the booing at the Coliseum when Carolina elected to play possession ball against State College during the Dixie Classic. There were other times, too, when Al caught the fans' wrath.

He seldom received their praise, but that is not because he didn't deserve it. He is probably the steadiest, coolest, and most consistent player on the team. He isn't colorful. He's just the nondescript guard who throws in four to six set shots every game and directs the play of a highly competitive and complex game.

And thus we have two Tar Heels in the twilight of their collegiate basketball careers. Likins, a Rhodes Scholar, will soon go to Oxford to continue his studies in physics. Lifson, I undersand, is about to marry and settle down

The best of luck to both.

The Indoor Games here this Saturday are getting to be bigger and better with each passing yar. The progress seems sure to continue throuh this annum.

Many of the top track stars in the south will be on hand. UNC track coach Dale Ranson estimates a participation figure of 640, plus 60 to 70 officials.

Among the stars will be Earl Poucher, a jumping jack of a pole vaulter from the University of Florida. There's South Carolina's Tommy Woodlee, Maryland's Alva Grim, N. C. State's Mike Shea and many others. Resords are certain to fall at a wholesale rate.

And there's Jim Beatty, too, a Tar Heel who ran a 4:15.8 indoor mile this past weekend in a practice meet. Another local is Bob Barden, who ran seven seconds under the two-mile record in that same practice meet.

But Barden didn't even win the race. It went to State's Shea by one-fifth of a second.

Wolflets, Tar Babies Meet In 6:30 Prelim

By BERNIE WEISS

N. C. State invades Chapel Hill tonight seeking to cement its No. 1 position in the Atlantic Coast Conference and thereby gain the first-place seedings in the ACC championship-deciding tournament next month in Raleigh.

Everett Case's Wolfpack needs only a win tonight to get that position, but they won't be getting it on any silver platter if Tar Heel mentor Frank McGuire has any say-so.

The battle, with State gunning for revenge against their Tar Heel rivals, will get under way at 8:15 o'clock in Woollen Gym. A freshman preliminary will open festivities at 6:30.

Carolina upset the highly favored 'Pack, 84-80, in the Reynolds Coliseum last month in its first regularly scheduled game against the defending conference champs. Earlier, in the Dixie Classic, it was a State victory, 47-44.

Tonight it is anyone's guess. Carolina seems to have snapped out of its post-examination slump and appears to be rolling at the pre-exam rate. The Tar Heels lost by only two points to Maryland recently and last Wednesday topped Wake Forest. State beat Maryland by 20 points Saturday night, but the Terps obviously were not up to par.

COACH MCGUIRE once again was mum on his strategy. "Neither I nor Case will tell what we are going to do until just before gametime," he said yesterday. "Even the players won't know until then. But I'm going into the game to win, not to please the customers. If I think a slow game (possession tactics) will help us, or a running game, that's what I'll use."

The same five, with the possible exception of Bob Young, which has started for Carolina in recent games will go for the Tar Heels tonight.

Paul Likins, senior co-captain of the team, will be playing his last home game and may replace Young in the starting line-up, as will Al Lifson, the other co-captain. No other changes are planned and McGuire figures to go with Lennie Rosenbluth and Jerry Vayda at forwards, either Young or Likins at center and Tony Radovich and Lifson at guards.

STATE, WHICH has 11 players of starting ability, has been switching its starting five of late. However, Case will probably put in Ron Shavlik and Phil Dinardo at forwards, Cliff Dwyer at center, and Dave Gotkin and Vic Molodet at guards.

2nd Baseman Out Of Action 2-3 Weeks

By MARSHALL WALDMAN

Coach Walter Rabb of the Tar Heel baseball team announced yesterday that second basemen Harry Lloyd will probably miss practice for close to three weeks because of the knee injury he sustained while taking batting practice during last Wednesday's warmup session.

Coach Rabb expects Lloyd to make the Florida trip but said that Harry would have to play himself into condition at a slow pace. He expects to work Lloyd back into his familiar role at second base slowly. Lloyd might be used sparingly at the beginning of the regular season but as soon as the knee is strong enough, Lloyd should be back at his old post.

Ken Keller, Will Frye and Tom Maultsby are expected to bolster the squad as soon as spring football practice is over. Keller started in the outfield last year, Frye handled first base and Maultsby did a lot of catching. All three carry big bats and should be welcome additions to the Tar Heel hitting attack.

SOPHOMORE JIM Raugh took the hill in batting practice yesterday and looked sharp. Coach Rabb is counting on Raugh to handle a good part of the pitching burden along with veteran Maultsby. Raugh had an 8-5 record in the Nova Scotia League during the past summer.

UNC Matmen End Slate With Deacs Friday, VMI Saturday

The UNC matmen swing into their last weekend of regular season competition when they grapple with Wake Forest Friday night and VMI Saturday afternoon.

The Tar Heels will have their best chance of the season to break into the win column against an inexperienced Deacon team which has just organized its wrestling program this year. However, against VMI, coached by former UNC wrestling star Oscar Gupton, the Tar Heels will have their hands full as VMI has been a strong opponent in recent years.

Despite the fact that they wrestled their best team performance of the year, the Tar Heel matmen bowed to Atlantic Coast Conference champion Maryland last Saturday, 22-6. Hugh Cowan and Miles Gregory were Carolina's only winners as each turned in fine performances in gaining decisions.

In a match that was actually closer than the score indicates, Carolina could have come within three points of victory had they won a fall and a decision in the two very close matches at the 157 and 167 pound classes. At 157 pounds, UNC's Arthur Gregory wrestled a hard fought, nip and tuck match with Maryland's Glade Felter only to lose a close 8-6 decision that wasn't decided until the last two minutes of the match. In the 167 pound class, Hugh Barwick, tied at 1-1 for two periods, was finally pinned in 7-19 by Hair of Maryland.

Tar Heel Fencers Split In Three-Way Match

The UNC fencing team tied one match and dropped another in a three-way meet with N. C. State and Augusta Military Academy in Woollen Gym Saturday.

The Carolina chargers were led by Henry Rupp, Warren Richards and Dave Garmise. Rupp copped nine of his twelve bouts with the sabre and duelling sword. Richards took three of six in duelling sword and Garmise won six of twelve bouts doubling on the foil and duelling sword.

The Carolina team will meet in another three-way meet on March 5, with State and Lincoln Memorial University, of Harrogate, Tenn. In addition to this meet, Coach Pebley Barrow is planning a four-way meet tentatively scheduled for March 19th with State, V. M. I., and aservice team from Shaw Air Force Base of South Carolina.

Weather Balmy As Spring Grid Practice Opens

By JACK MURPHY

"Today is the day of reckoning," sang frosh center Jimmy Jones of Greensboro as he treked down the hall of Woollen Gym, lugging full football gear to the dressing room.

Ten minutes later Jones was one of more than 50 athletes scurrying around Navy Field as the opening spring football practice session began with a brief warm-up under blue skies and shining sun.

Coach Steve Belchick worked with the backs while Bill Edwards sent the ends throogh their paces and Marvin Bass directed the line work. Head coach George Barclay devoted most of his time with the quarterbacks, a delicate question mark in the 1955 football figure.

Righ away the rough work started and the clashing of shoulder pads and helmets filled the air and added to the enthusiasm of the gridders and the several spectators. The work of the guards and tackles was especially heavy in the first blocking and tackling session.

Lettermen reporting for the opening practice included John Bilich, Will Frye, Jones, Ken Keller, Bill Koman, Don Lear, Darden Livesay, Doug Malone, Jack Maultsby, Larry McMulien, Larry Muschamp, Roland Perdue, Wilson Shouldars, George Stavinitski and Ed Sutton. Members of last year's team who did not earn a monogram but figure prominently in future plans included Charles Boyette, Doug Farmer, Steve Kenny, John Lambert, Tom Maultsby and Leonard Rhyne.

Freshmen who will be eligible next fall included Francis Berry, Phil Blazer, Dick Darling, Glenn Daughtry, Giles Gaca, John Haywood, Jimmy Jones, Donnie Kelly, Steve Kupchick, Jack Lineberger, Jack Llewellyn, Ron Marquette, Mike Munchak, Vince Olen, Buddy Payne, Paul Pulley, David Reed, Charles Robinson, Buddy Sasser, Hap Setzer, Dick Smith, Joe Temple, Wally Vale, Jim Varum, Howard Williams, Bill Woods, and Daley Goff.

THE LOSSES of such outstanding performers as guards Jimmy Neville and Ed Patterson, halfbacks Larry Parker and Connie Gravitte and fullback Don Klochak off the starting team of last season will handicap the Tar Heels as will the departure of lettermen Will Alexander, George Foti, Bill Kirkman, Al Long, Steve Marcinko, Marshall Newman, Sonny Ridenhour and Dick Starner.

Practices will be held at 4 o'clock each afternoon with the annual Blue-White intra squad game climaxing spring training on March 19.

Victory Is 19th Of 20 For UNC

Wake Forest (Special)—Charley Adams, not a high scorer, topped all scoring here tonight as his North Carolina Tar Babies whipped Wake Forest's freshmen, 91-78.

It was the 19th victory of the season and ninth straight for North Carolina. The Tar Babies have lost only one.

Jack "Swede" Frauson was high scorer for Wake Forest with 24. Bob Cunningham got 22 for Carolina, Roy Searcy 18, Pete Brennan 16 and Tommy Kearns nine.

Coach Buck Freeman and his charges will be looking for their 20th win tonight in the freshman preliminary at Woollen Gym against N. C. State. Game time is 6:30 o'clock and it will be televised.

Redskins Sign Guglielmi To Two-Year Contract

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21 (AP) — Ralph Guglielmi, All-America quarterback at Notre Dame, today signed a two-year pro contract with the Washington Redskins.

Salary terms were not disclosed, but it was reported Guglielmi had turned down some lucrative offers from Canadian Clubs to sign with Washington.

The Redskins' No. 1 draft choice last month, Guglielmi broke all Notre Dame passing records in a four-year career with the Irish.

Last year he ranked fourth in the nation in passing, completing 68 of 127 passes for 1,160 yards. His average was 53.5 per cent.

A resident of Columbus, Ohio, Guglielmi is a sociology major at Notre Dame. He was accompanied to Washington by the Notre Dame players' unpaid consultant, Julius Tucker.

Guglielmi stands six feet even, weighs 185. He is 21 years old.

In his last two seasons as quarterback, Notre Dame lost only one of 20 games.

Gym Team Mauls Duke

A large crowd watched the UNC gymnasts retain coach Bill Meade's record of never being defeated by any of his ex-gymnastics teammates as Carolina handed Duke a 66-29 defeat Saturday at Woollen gym.

UNC took first place in every event and, with the exception of the rope climb, also walked off with all the second place honors.

Pete Brumley was high man for UNC with 16 points, being closely followed by Gordon Hudson who gathered 14 points. Conrad Flowers was high man for Duke with eight and one-half points.

This win now gives the Carolina gymnasts a 4-2 record.

Florida's Earl Poucher To Vault Here Saturday

By RAY LINKER

The best collegiate pole vaulter of the 1954 outdoor track season heads a list of highly talented entries for the upcoming Indoor Games, slated for Woollen gymnasium this Saturday.

Earl Poucher, of the University of Florida team, is the skilled vaulter who will appear here in the non-conference division of the Games. His best jump last year, 14 feet 7¼ inches, was not bettered by any other college jumper. He has to his credit three jumps better than his 14'2" that tied him with California's Larry Anderson for first place in the National Collegiate Athletic Association meet last spring.

A junior now, he topped last year's Indoor Games here with his record-setting jump of 14' 3-7/8", and the Gator high-flyer, a top prospect for the 1956 Olympic team, will possibly go above the 15-foot mark before he completes his career, a feat which only four vaulters can claim. Already he is ranked among the top 10 vaulters of all time, and not more than six college jumpers have ever been higher than Poucher.

He was included on the All-American team for 1954 selected by the NCAA Rules Committee following the national championships last year, and the famed sky-writer was also first on the 1954 collegiate honor roll, selection being based on outdoor performances of varsity men in four-year schools, their place in the NCAA championships, their best mark of the season, their consistency, their major titles won, and their number of defeats.

POUCHER BEGAN his varsity career by taking second in the Boston AAU meet with a 13'6", followed by an identical jump in the Milerose Games, before he got up to 14 feet in the New York Athletic Club Indoor affair.

His win in the ACC meet here was his highest up to that date, but he was up to 13'9½" when the outdoor season opened with the Florida Relays. He took the Florida AAU crown with a leap of 13'10".

Then in his 10th varsity outing, in a dual meet against Auburn, he soared over the 14'7½" mark, which later proved to be the best collegiate jump of the year.

He needed only a 13'11-7/8" to win the Southeastern Conference crown, which came before his tie in the NCAA. He also tied for first in the Central Collegiate meet in Milwaukee, with a 13'10" leap.

Poucher also recorded several dual meet wins, and participated in the indoor and outdoor National AAU meets.

HE FINISHED the 1954 season—outdoor and indoor—by winning eight meets, tying for first twice, tying for second once, and taking several other places in big meets, in filling out a 15-meet schedule.

As a freshman he entered seven meets and won six and tied for first in the other. His freshman glories include the SEC championship, Florida AAU crown, Florida Relays win, and three dual meet wins. His tie for first came in the Southern Relays, where he did 13'-10". His conference winning leap that year was 14'1½".

His 14'7¼" jump as a sophomore can be favorably compared to the mark made by Cornelius Warmerdam, the first human to clear 15 feet in the vault. Warmerdam did 13'9" as a sophomore in college; and when he was a senior, his best was 14'7-5/8", which is just a fraction of an inch better than Poucher's soph jump. Facts such as these should leave no doubt in anyone's mind that Poucher is the most outstanding college vaulter today. He will undoubtedly be one of the best individual performers in the Indoor Games Saturday.

44-Year-Old Student Wins Putnam Prize For Writing

A 44-year-old UNC extension student who "turned to the novel because he found short story writing difficult" is the 1954 winner of the annual Putnam Prize.

Amos H. Paul, Rocky Mount, has been notified that his book, Outback, a historical novel which deals with life in the Cape Fear country of North Carolina, was chosen from those submitted last year and is the recipient of a special prize of $500 awarded by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Miss Jessie Rehder, English lecturer and director of the contest here, explained that Paul was presented the special prize instead of the full $2,000 award. "The publishers suggested revisions for the book and it is generally felt that once the changes rae made the novel will be published, although Putnam's have made no committments on publication as yet," she said.

The Putnam Prize is awarded annually by G. P. Putnam's Sons, book publishers of New York to the student of the Consolidated University of North Carolina submitting the best book-length manuscript, either fiction or non-fiction.

Paul, a field representative for the N. C. Employment Security Commission, is an alumnus of the University, having completed his first two years and part of his junior year here in 1931.

For the past two years he has been enrolled with the University Extension Division where he has been studying the short story by correspondence. When he submitted his novel last year he was studying with Dr. William Goodykoontz, who is now on leave from UNC and is head of the English Department at Hanover College. Paul is now continuing the course with Prof. E. R. Oettinger.

Paul says that he has had no previous training in writing, but he became interested in it while he was senior payroll inspector with the State Department of Labor for four years. "I was required to write narratives of every inspection made, when I became interested in writing," he said, "and have been trying to do a little writing in my spare time since 1949."

Finding short stories difficult and having no success with them on the markets, Paul turned to the novel because he "thought it might be easier."

His prize winner, Outback, covers the period 1850-1886 and deals with the simple backcountry pioneers of the Cape Fear Country where the author grew up.

Betty Smith, Chapel Hill, author of A Tree Grows in Brooklyn and one of the judges of this year's contest said, "I was much impressed by Mr. Paul's manuscript. The material is fresh and interesting and the characters are wonderful. The story has so much gusto and vitality and yet there is something dreamy and poetic about it."

Miss Rehder says the outlook for the 1955 contest is good with a number of writers already showing interest.

Inquiries concerning the 1955 contest, which is now under way, should be made to Miss Jessie Rehder, Box 350, Chapel Hill, N. C. All entries must be in by July 1.

Blood To Be Studied In Session

Blood evaluation by the most recent methods will be studied by physicians attending the Postgraduate Medical Course here in a session on Wednesday afternoon, March 2, in the Clinic Building auditorium.

Dr. Jeffress G. Palmer, assistant professor of medicine, UNC School of Medicine, will discuss new developments in blood study and analysis.

His lecture will be the third in the current eight-week Chapel Hill series, sponsored by the UNC Medical School and Extension Division.

General practitioners attend the sessions to keep informed on the latest diagnostic methods and aids, and to gain credit for use in fulfillment of American Academy of General Practice requirements.

The present course covers such areas as chest x-ray, gynecology, biopsy, infectious diseases and thyroid function.

Dr. Palmer, who joined the UNC medical staff in 1952, holds a B.S. and M.D. from Emory University, Atlanta, Ga. He served his internship at Bowman Gray School of Medicine in Winston-Salem.

After completing his residency in medicine at Emory from 1947-49, he accepted a fellowship in medicine at University of Utah College of Medicine, where he remained until coming to Chapel Hill.

Allied Artists' Show Is On Display In Person

The program for the meeting and accompanying institute for women's page writers was announced today by Dorothy Cameron of Raleigh, association vice president and institute chairman.

Communication Center Wins Freedom Award

UNC's Communication Center was yesterday awarded a Freedoms Foundation honor certificate for an outstanding contribution to the American way of life during 1954.

The Center's radio program, "American Adventure," won. The program is heard over FM Station WUNC.

John Clayton, director of the Communication Center, said yesterday he thought the award was "fine." The particular program which won, he said, was "King With Crown," a "study of dignity and self-sacrifice."

The program, said Clayton, was the story of a slave boy on a slave ship and the man who helped him.

Top awards on the Foundation's list went to evangelist Billy Graham and St. John's University of Brooklyn. The list was read in a flag-draped barn of colonial vintage in Valley Forge, Pa. Graham will receive $1,000 and an encased George Washington Honor Medal.

In addition to Graham and the Communication Center, 10 other North Carolina individuals and groups won awards.

North Carolina winners included:

City of Charlotte, Freedom Celebration Day, second place award in general category, $50 and George Washington Honor Medal.

Louis F. Jaeckel, Hendersonville, second place award for editorial, "This is America," in Dixie News Service, $50 and George Washington Honor Medal.

St. Stephen's High School, Hickory, high school editorial award for "Thank You, America!" in "The Torch," $100 and George Washington Honor Medal.

A. L. Brown High School, Kannapolis, honor certificate.

Herman C. Koch of E. I. DuPont plant at Kinston, George Washington Honor Medal as editor of company employe publication, "The Exchanger." The publication itself also won a George Washington Honor Medal.

Ralph Mills, Jr., 408 Stacey St., Raleigh, George Washington Honor Medal for photograph, "Human Dignity."

Max Tharpe, Statesville, honor certificate for photograph, "Thanksgiving."

Edward T. Simmons, 612 S. Main St., Winston-Salem, George Washington Honor Medal for photograph "My Land and My Home."

Clifford P. Hood, president of the United States Steel Corp., handed out the awards to the top 25 winners, and distributed $14,000 in cash prizes. All told, the foundation will pay $'1,000 toward winners for 1954, besides honoring 191 high schools. Secondary awards will be presented at regional ceremonies later this year.

Freedoms Foundation, a nonprofit, nonsectarian organization, started its project to spread the story of American liberties in 1949. At that time, President Eisenhower, then head of Columbia University, gave out the awards.

Graham, who has traveled across the world in his work for God, was cited "for his high resolve, his application of clear strength in the Lord's work and his discernment of the ways to live in Christian dignity in times that have bewildered so many of eminence."

Pharmacy Lecture

Rho Chi Society of the School of Pharmacy here will sponsor a slide exhibition and a lecture by Dr. Laurin C. MacKinney, Kenan Professor of history, tomorrow.

Dr. MacKinney's topic will be "Medieval Pharmacy As Seen in Manuscript Miniatures." It will be based on his own visits to Europe.

The lecture will be given in Howell Hall tomorrow at 8 p.m. and will be open to the public.

Crane Favors 55-Cent Law For Employees

CHARLOTTE, Feb. 22 (AP)—State Labor Commissioner Frank Crane spoke out strongly today in favor of a 55-cent state minimum wage law.

He also criticized employers paying below that level.

Addressing the Mecklenburg County Women's Legislative Forum, Crane said, "Such a law would benefit North Carolina by increasing our per capita income, which is fourth from the bottom of the list among the states."

He added that "the 55-cent hourly minimum is not high enough to affect any business establishments adversely."

In giving his views on wage minimums, Crane quoted the late Forest H. Shuford, whom he succeeded as commissioner. Crane said Shuford stated:

" 'I would be most happy to see the wages of North Carolina's lowest paid working people raised to a decent level by voluntary action and without recourse to legislation.

" 'During the last 14 years, however, I have observed that our emergence from a period of severe depression into a period of higher prosperity has not resulted in a lifting of the wage levels of our lowest paid workers to a point at which they are provided a decent minimum to sustain life, health, efficiency and good citizenship.

" 'Upon the basis of long observation, exerience, and much study of this matter I have been forced to conclude that we have a minority of employers who will continue to pay the very lowest wage which the traffic will bear, irrespective of the extent to which their businesses prosper.' " Shuford died last year.

Crane based his talk on the theme that "Rosie the Riviter Went to River Rouge and Hasn't Come Back." He said women make up 35.6 per cent of the factory labor force in this state, compared to only 32 per cent before World War II.

Two results of this directly affecting women, he added, are that wage averages are slightly reduced and that men are taking over more and more duties in the home.

Survey Shows UNC Grads Are Doing Well Financially

University of North Carolina graduates of the last several years have done pretty well in earings if the available records of the five-year class of 1949 may be accepted as a criterion.

A survey of the '49 class made by Director J. M. Galloway of the University Placement Service shows that of the members of that class who responded to questionnaires, the men are earning an aycrage salary of $5,200, the women, $3,000. A total of 411, or 40 per cent of the 1,053 sent out, replied to the questionnaire.

Director Galloway said members of the class replying "hold responsible positions amenable to their interests and training, receive appropriate remuneration and feel that their college education has made this possible."

Out of the more than 400 alumni and alumnae replying, the survey shows 214 still residents of this State, and 173 of the total group continued their formal education since receiving a bachelor's degree.

The questionnaries revealed that 202 of the 333 presently employed are working in fields closely related to their college majors, with the following types of jobs most frequently listed: sales and retailing, accounting, teaching, self-employment, insurance and science.

Emerging from college with a large crop of post-war graduates, and entering a "rather tight job market," the forty-niners have generally achieved financial success in the past six years.

According to survey statistics, the men of the class of '49 are now an average of 29 years old, 75 per cent of them are married and they have 1.7 children each.

Jobs held by the 303 men presently employed "run the gamut from missionary priest in the Canal Zone to public rlations manager for a division of one of the nation's largest companies."

RELATED

Over 60 per cent hold jobs closely related to their major field at the University, Director Galloway said, which is in line with trends of placement in recent years.

For the 183 men who accepted jobs during the first two years after graduation the survey shows starting salaries ranging from less than $2,500 to $6,000. The lowest salary, for the 303 now employed, remains under the $2,500 mark, but the top salary mark has risen to $8,000 giving an average of $5,200 per annum.

Director Galloway noted "an attempt was made to determine any correlation between various elements of the students' college life with the one measurably element of vocational success—salary.

"Unfortunately," he reported, "from the data received, we cannot produce any evidence to support predictability of financial success from either grades or extracurricular participation."

Although none of the former campus leaders reporting, such as Phi Beta Kappa members or student government officers, have done poorly financially, he said, "it is equally true that many C students and non-participators are doing as well or better."

WOMEN

Survey replies came from 65 women in the class, the great majority having majored in liberal arts. Although 71 per cent are married, half of the 65 are still working, "in jobs ranging from radio copywriter to kindergarten teacher."

A low percentage (less than 35 per cent) of the women's jobs have been closely related to their college major. Galloway attributes this to the high number of liberal arts majors, whose course relates directly to few fields.

However, almost half the women got the type of job they most wanted, in comparison of first jobs with vocational preference indicated before graduation.

"When the girls of '49 started work," Galloway said, "they did well to make $200 a month, while men started at near $225. However the girls now average $2,700-$3,200 per annum."

Israel Alumni Offer Grant For Summer

The Israel Workshop Alumni organization of New York University is offering, for a second consecutive year, a tuition scholarship for summer study and travel in Israel.

The award is made on the basis of scholastic achievement, character, financial need, and desire to promote American-Israeli friendship and understanding. Scholarship money is contributed by former participants in NYU's annual Workshop in Israel.

Jack Mandel, chairman of the group's scholarship committee, said in his announcement that the winner will travel this summer with the seventh NYU Workshop for American teachers, students, and social workers.

The Workshop is designed to provide first-hand study of Israel's language, literature, educational system, governmental and cultural institutions and way of life.

Applications for the scholarship must be made before May 2. They should be addressed to Jack Mandel at the Israel Workshop, 2 Washington Square North, New York 3, N. Y.

Whitesides Recital To Begin New Musicales

William Whitesides, tenor, will be presented in a recital next Sunday night as the first of a series of six Petites Musicales which Graham Memorial will present this semester.

Whitesides, now on the staff of the Mars Hill College music department, has taught in the music department here and also directed the Women's Glee Club and instructed individual students. He has appeared as soloist with the Charlotte Symphony, at the Brevard Music Camp and on radio and television.

"My favorite music," said Whitesides, "is natural vocal, particularly choral works. I like some opera, especially Mozart, and I enjoy singing German leider."

For his program, he has chosen two Elizabethan love songs, a set of six German leider, a cycle by Ravel and five songs arranged by the American composer Aaron Copland.

Photo Show

Prize pictures of 1954 are now being exhibited at the University Library and will continue to be shown until March 1.

The 11th annual competition and exhibition of news pictures of the year, from which these winners were chosen, is sponsored by the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri.

The photographs shown include sports, news, animals, political and human interest subjects.

Inspection Law & Whammy Bill In Legislature

RALEIGH, Feb. 22 (AP)—A bill requiring annual mechanical inspection of motor vehicles reached the Senate today while a measure to restrict the use of "whammy" sped detection equipment shuttled from one House committee to another.

Sens. Clarence Stone of Rocking ham and Claude Currie of Durham introduced the inspection bill. Although Stone said it was not "an administration bill," Gov. Hodges and the Motor Vehicles Department have endorsed mechanical inspection as an aid to highway safety.

Motor Vehicles Commissioner Ed Scheidt has expressed strong opposition to the House bill which would require the State Highway Patrol to use its electronic speed detection devices in full view of passing motorists.

ARGUMENT

Opponents have attacked the bill as a blow at enforcement of speed laws. Supporters claim it would clarify use of the "whammy."

The bill, introduced by Rep. Thomas White of Lenoir, ended up in the House Roads and Highway Safety Committee after it had been reported favorably from House Judiciary Committee 1.

Rep. A. C. Edwards of Greene was filling in for Speaker Larry Moore of Wilson when the bill was reported. After a flurry of debate, the House voted 70-38 against sending it to the Roads Committee.

The mechanical inspection bill would require inspection by July 1, 1956 and once a year after that date.

Sound and Fury Show Given For Merchants

A musical program by the Sound and Fury dramatics group of Graham Memorial Student Union and a dinner meeting highlighted Sunday night's opening session of the fourth annual Conference for merchants officials of North Carolina.

Some 75 persons—retailers as well as executives and workers in State merchants association — registered here for the meeting. A dinner session followed in the Carolina Inn with Dr. J. G. Pfaff, Salisbury, president of the North Carolina Merchants Association presiding.

How To Beat The Whammy . . .

RALEIGH, Feb. 22 —(AP)— In House Judiciary 1 Committee, they were chuckling over the ingenious "whammy" warning system which North Carolina motorists have devised — the blinking of lights and the sounding of horns to warn of an impending speed check station.

Rep. Shearon Harris of Stanly popped up to say that he had a little system that makes everyone he meets a more alert and carful driver.

"I blink my lights at everyone between here and Albemarle. I really slow 'em up."

Series Of Religious Beliefs Start Sunday

Rev. Harry Smith, director of student affairs of the Presbyterian Church, has announced that a series of three programs on the topic "Comparative Beliefs" will begin next Sunday.

Rev. John A. Weidinger, chaplain of the Catholic Church here, will speak on the topic "What Does A Catholic Believe?"

The programs will be held at the Hut (one block behind the Presbyterian Church).

Supper will be served at 6 p.m. at a cost of 50 cents, and programs will begin at 7 p.m.

On March 6, Rabbi E. M. Rosenzweif, director of B'Nai B'Rith Hillel Foundation here, will speak on "What Does A Jew Believe?" and on March 13, Dr. Charles Lynwood Brown, pastor of White Memorial Presbyterian Church in Raleigh, will speak on "What Does A Presbyterian Believe?"

Several Events Slated Honoring Gen. Ridgway

Several events honoring Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, United States Army Chief of Staff ,have been planned for his visit here tomorrow when he will deliver a public address.

General Ridgway will be heard in Hill Hall (not Memorial Hall as reported before) at 8 p.m. under sponsorship of the Carolina Forum, non-partisan student organization which brings to the campus from time to time "well-known speakers who reflect varying shades of economic and political thought." Joel Fleishman, senior from Fayetteville, heads the Forum.

The General will arrive at Raleigh-Durham Airport at 3:30 p.m tomorrow afternoon, and will be honored at a tea at the home of President Gordon Gray at 5 p.m. A private banquet honoring the speaker will be held at 6:30 in the Carolina Inn Pine Room.

Bob Young, sophomore from Asheville and Forum vice-chairman, said General Ridgway will be guest of honor at a public reception in Graham Memorial main lounge following his address.

Already well-known for his commands in Italy, Normandy and Germany during World War II, General Ridgway took over the Eighth Army in Korea in late 1950, and within four months succeeded General Douglas MacArthur as Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers, Commander-in-Chief of the U NCommnad in the Far East, and Commander-in-Chief of the Far East Command in Japan. He took over the European command in May, 1952.

Not One Complaint . . .

The new complaints board, which had its first meeting yesterday afternoon in the Woodhouse Lounge of Graham Memorial, had no student complaints brought before it, according to Bob Harrington, chairman of the board.

"I would like to see all students with complaints come to see us and air them," said Harrington concerning future meetings of the board.

The group, which was set up by the student Legislature, will meet every two weeks.

Positions Now Open On Staff Of Frosh YMCA Handbook

"Positions are now available on the staff of the YMCA Handbook," said Bill Oakley, chairman of the Y Publications Board, yesterday. According to Oakley, interviews for interested applicants will be conducted at the Y Publications office on second floor, Y building, all this week.

"This is a good opportunity for helpful service to the school and to gain experience in the journalistic field," Oakley added.

The jobs that are open include work as managing editor, assistant photography editor, photographers, secretary and artists. There are also openings for persons interested in writing about student government, campus activities, coeds, athletics, campus life and publications, Oakley said.

Chief selection will be the naming of a student to fill the editor's position. Candidates for the job, which carries with the duties of supervising the operations of a staff of 25, need not have any previous journalistic experience, but it would be helpful, Oakley said.

"As for finances, the publication will have adequate support, so that staff workers won't have to worry about that," Oakley added.

Episcopal Mission Is Scheduled

The Rev. David Browning Collins, chaplain of the University of the South in Sewanee, Tenn., will conduct a special mission in Chapel Hill February 27, 28 and March 1 under sponsorship of Episcopal students on the UNC campus.

The mission, which will be composed of four sermons, will be held in the Chapel of the Cross. Reverend Collin's general theme will be "Man's Need and God's Action." Each of the sermons will be followed by an informal discussion to be held in the Chapel Parish House.

On Sunday, February 27, Reverend Collins will speak at 11 a.m. on "Are You A Christian," and again at 8:30 p.m. on "The Christian Believes." The Monday sermon, "The Christian Worships," will be heard at 7:30 p.m.

Lazy Literates

A representative of Travelers Life Insurance will speak tonight a 8 o'clock in the assembly room of the Library.

He will be sponsored by the Lazy Literates in connection with the vocational study program which the group is presenting.

Restraint, Tolerance—& H. H. Purcell

A Virginia legislator visiting North Carolina says he is alarmed at our "defeatist attitude" toward the Supreme Court's decision on segregation.

The state of Virginia, says M. H. Purcell, is determined to keep its public schools segregated, and he is disappointed that North Carolina is not showing a similar defiance.

"In Virginia," Purcell said in a speech to the North Carolina House of Representatives, "we believe that where there's a will there's a way. We have the will in Virginia and we believe we'll find the way to keep Virginia as Southern as it has always been.

Meaning, of course, that Mr. Purcell is intent on having his state disobey the law of the land when that law is finally formulated and that he wants North Carolina to disobey it too.

For some reason—we leave it to the sociologists to tell you why—Noth Carolina has reacted to the Supreme Court decision with a good deal less hysteria than either of its neighbors, South Carolina and Virginia. Despite a legislature that is generally prosegregation, despite our John Clarks and (in a slightly different category) our W. C. Georges, we have shown reasonable intelligence and calm.

Contrast, for example, the official state studies of segregation made by North Carolin. and Virginia.

The Virginia commission (though it attempted no research and made no study of the situation) left no doubt as to its intention for the state. Its preliminary report filed last month with Gov. Thomas B. Stanley, promised only to "explore avenues toward formulation of a program designed to prevent enforced integration of the races in the public schools of Virginia."

The North Carolina Advisory Committee on Education, though it warned of effects if segregation were ended immediately, included this kind of language:

"Now as never before in this generation North Carolinians are called upon to act cooly, exercise restraint, exhibit tolerance ommends that members of all races in North Carolina approach this problem of unprecendented dirrifuclty in that frame of mind."

Restraint, tolerance and wisdom have been displayed in North Carolina since last May to a degree not noticeable in Mr. Purcell's state. The disgraceful snubbing of Chief Justice Warren when he came to Virginia coud not, we suspect, have happened in Raleigh. Such an organization as Chapel Hill's Inter-Racial Fellowship for the Schools does not, so far as we know, exist in Virginia.

As Governor Hodges has said, "It's a great tribute to the legislature, the committee and the people as a whole that North Carolina is facing the issue calmly."

And we hope the demagoguery suggested by the speech of H. H. Purcell of Virginia, if it must exist at all, will stay north of the line.

Gracious Living—XXII

Hill Hall's music listening apparatus is a monkey-wrench in the Gracious Living machine. A music student who drops by the Hill Hall Library for an hour of study must clamp uncomfortable headphones to his ears, place an emaciated spool of tape an the playback device, elbow the guy next to you in order to find note-taking room, and then listen—hard.

Because what he hears (we've heard it) is not the Brahms concerto he's trying to make out, but the unmistakable resonance of a WUNC announcer (the station is practically next door and the programs leak thru) or the even louder tones of some brassy ensemble playing on a record just across the table.

Watered-Down Thinking By N. V. Peale

Louis Kraar

NORMAN VINCENT Peale, who is busy writing books telling people how to hink, wrote a piece the other day about an unpleasant fellow he met on a train.

Peale, probably busy thinking positively, accidentally bumped into the fellow. But, thinking positively a moment, Peale apologized.

"It doesn't matter where I go or what I do, it's always the wrong thing. I put my foot into it and make a mess of everything," the fellow replied to Peale's apology.

And Peale relates: "I didn't quite know how to react to all the negativism in a stranger, so I commented on how lovely the morning was."

I'm glad Peale figured out such a fine answer to all that "negativism." What bothers me is that this man is telling people when they are thinking positively. In other words, if the view coincides with his, it is positive; if it doesn't, it's negative.

Thus, if everyone takes this exponent of how to think seriously, they'll all be thinking alike.

I have no objection to his advising people to seek power in prayer. Men have always found help that way, but this technique of merely thinking "positively" is so much bunk.

Why do people have to turn to the Norman Vincent Peale or Billy Graham type character to water down the truths found in religion and great literature? Perhaps we haven't learned to take our universal truths without dilution.

A COLLEGE student at a prominent eastern university reportedly ran into a little trouble with his father when the old man discovered the son's suitcase.

The boy's father came into the room as he was packing to return to school from a holiday. He noticed that his collegiate son had included a bottle of his liquor in the suitcase.

When further investigation revealed two more full bottles of the old man's Scotch, he took the liberty of questioning the boy.

"I thought you might want an explanation," said the college boy. "It gets awfully cold at school, and the radiator in my room is broken."

NOTE TO Y-Courters who have nothing better to do than work crossword puzzles: James Bryant Conant, former resident of Harvard University once said, "The most important single factor in a modern liberal education is education which students receive from one another. The college union, being the focus of all student activities, is thus the most important laboratory on the campus."

LOVERS OF Shakespeare (and the movies) can have a field day this week.

Thursday "Julius Caesar" will play at the Carolina, complete with Marlon Brando as Mark Anthony. Sunday "Romeo and Juliet," a boy-meets-girl story without a happy ending, opens at the Varsity.

The practice of not selling popcorn at the "Romeo and Juliet" movie is to be praised. Nothing is more annoying than great movie lines ruined by popcorn chompers in the next row. A fitting tribute to Shakespeare, I'd say.

'Oh Dear—They Seem To Be Going Right Ahead'

Elmer Davis As Nationalist

How Long Till Midnight?

Ed Yoder

Those who found in Elmer Davis's But We Were Born Free a timely defense of civil liberties, a fine grasp of world currents, and a sane indictment of the tendency toward legislative rule, will probably be as disappointed as I was at the drift of his new book, Two Minutes Till Midnight.

Mr. Davis thinks that if "midnight" can be taken as the hour of hdyrogen warfare—and it is a dismally appropriate term—we lie but two minutes away from that moment. He takes the tack that nuclear warfare—thermonuclear, at that—is riding fast on the minute hand of the clock.

Assuming the hour to be so close, Mr. Davis, proposes that we turn our attention to the necessity of winning the hydrogen bomb war. He claims no absolute surity, as no one does, that the hydrogen bomb will be unleashed—"though I confess that at this moment I cannot see why not."

NO 'ONE-WORLDISM'

Mr. Davis goes on in this very readable book—for he is one of the finest non-fiction stylists we have—to attack the idea that there can be no victor in an atomic war; and to blast the "one world idea" as unworkable.

The differenee between my viewpoint and the stand Mr. Davis takes in Two Minutes Till Midnight may be a difference between realism and belief in the impossible. Maybe so; but I think there's still room for more idealism and optimism about the problems of impending warfare than Mr. Davis is willing to admit.

Mr. Davis had damned McCarthy loudly and made a point of the ignoble senator's diabelical word-twisting device. It is ironic and unbecoming to find him using "one-world" as a label for the various movements toward world federalism. "One world" has long been used as a derogatory term by forces to which, I am sure, Mr. Davis is hostile. Mr. Davis's criticism of "one worlders" is quiet and often sympathetic; but the choosing of the label was unfortunate.

Can anyone win an atomic war? Mr. Davis says yes. But numbers of our most learned scientists say that victory in the horror of an all-out atomic war would be unlikely. Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, until recently a high official in the atomic effort, has said that a thermonuclear match between us and the Russians would be like two scorpions stinging themselves to death in a bottle.

THE CHANGE IN WAR

Almost coincidentally with the publication of Mr. Davis's book, Arnold J. Toynbee is quoted on the same question in a "Ten Basic Questions" interview in the New York Times Magazine. Whereas Dr. Oppenheimer speaks as a physicist Mr. Toynbee speaks as an historian. The atomic bomb as a weapon revolutionizing warfare is not unique, he says; but the degree of change amounts to an alteration of kind in the case of the Hell Bomb—so that "the difference, produced by the invention of atomic weapons, in he degree of the destructiveness of war is a difference that has produced a change in the nature of the institution of war as known and practiced hitherto."

"The invention of atomic weapons," writes Mr. Toynbee, who ocmmands a view of world history probably unparalleled in any time, "looks as if it may have obliterated the formerly valid distinctions betwen soldier and civilian, fron and rear, victor an vanquishe."

With the Atomic Era world shrinking, he thinks, war will have become a point-blank, confused punching of radom holes in the enemy's hide with no one knowing whether he had scored or been scored upon.

HOW VALID IS PERICLES?

It would be wrong to give an all-black impression of Mr. Davis's Two Minutes Till Midnight; the book, except in the single case where he applies a label to the advocates of "one-world," is fair and reasonable. The fault with the book is singular and basic: Mr. Davis frankly admits that he writes as a nationalist. It is quite a shock to find one of our noblest formulators of public opinion taking an extreme nationalistic swing.

Mr. Davis is, by education, a classicist, a very learned classicist. With all due respect to the study of classics, unmatched as a broadening, humane, and temperate part of human knowledge, it sems that Mr. Davis, in the new book, is thinking too much like an ancient Spartan for whom war was the final virtue. Classical learning will apply eternally to the inernal machinery of democracy and its problems; but classicism and 1955 foreign policy whether the mixing is conscious or unconscious, may react the wrong way.

"Never decline the dangers of war," said Pericles, the Athenian statesman, in his famous funeral oration. But if we are to give just credit to the warnings of present-day scientists and historians, the validity of Pericles's sentiments — admirable as they were in Fifth Century B. C. Athens—has vanished.

They belong to the beautiful classical past; but not to a speeding Atomic Age.

BETTY SMITH

I Fear It May Be Destroyed By Intolerance

Betty Smith

(The following was written by Chapel Hill's Betty Smith, author of A Tree Grows in Brooklyn, for the national observance of Brotherhood Week, Feb. 20-27.—Editor.)

It has always been my basic premise in writing, that in order to have a full understanding of characters or people, one must not forget that no person is born bad. If a person turns out badly it is because evil grows in him or evil is thrust upon him.

It is the same with intolerance. No one is born intolerant. He acquires it personally over the years or falls in too readily with centuries old-propaganda. And the intolerance is in everything. A large percentage of Protestants, Catholics, Jews, Negroes, are intolerant of each other. No one of us escapes. Each one of us is intolerant against something . . . somebody. If we like meat, we have no vegetarians; things like that.

We all know discrimination and intolerance we have all been anguished by it. Yet in return, forgetting our own anguish, we cause others anguish by discrimination and intolerance. I do not see how our civization—our world, even—can endure with religions hating each other, nations trying to destroy each other and individuals intolerant of each other.

I do not fear destruction of our civilization by the atom bomb. I fear it may be destroyed entirely by intolerance.

Reaction Piece

The Joys Of Debate In The Lusty Old Di

David Mundy

The size of The Daily Tar Heel staff is so small that when considering possibilities for editor one almost naturally assumes that the job will go to one of the members of the "inner office hierarchy." But last week I received something of a surprise, almost a shock. One of the "leaders" in one of the campus parties, no stranger to the inner workings of Graham Memorial, confided to me that several people had approached him with the idea of his running for editor of the Tar Heel. Their concern, and his, was that the paper had been becoming less and less of a student newspaper.

The voters in the spring elections may yet have a choice between two eggheads, one sunny-sid-up and the other scrambled.

The joys of public debate are many—but to a few. The very thought of standing before an audience gives most people a case of jitters. To speak without notes or even a small amount of previous thought, would cause their death of fright.

That some people find pleasure in debating may come as a surprise. Most of these people are members of two campus organiations, The Dialectic Senate and the Philanthropic Assmbly.

And what do they "debate?" The subjects are generally quite respectable ones, such as the admission of Communist China to the UN, the censuring of some individual for some action, etc. "Birth Control" and an "Omnibus Vice Bill" make their appearance in some campus debate group every year. The latter one generally proposes the legalization of liquor sales, gambling, and prostitution .

Last week the Dialectic Senate even debated a bill advocating the restoration of the French monarchy, in the person of the Count of Paris. Serious? It was indeed.

French politicians were soundly denounced. French history was reviewed from the time of the Romans. Intellectual heritages were praised and damned. Some departed from the subject to declare, as is their custom, that Coolidge and Hoover caused the depression.

This was in answer to a questioner who wanted to know about Roosevelt's 1932 promise to cut government expenditures a flat 25%. The questioner had been inspired to ask the question when the speaker, in his review of history, had declared that Poincare balanced the French budget after World War I, while Eisenhower hasn't balanced the U. S. budget. And so the debate rolled on. But entertaining?

It was that too. One questioner desired to know which had proved more important to the French troops in Korea, wine or ammunition .And the longest-winded Senator made a plea for brevity, which brought the house down. And so the performance continued.

The best of such performers is David Reid, member of the Di, campus wheel and SP leader. The Di has even been known to applaud when he assumes the rostrum, applaud until his time has almost expired.

Rotund Senator Reid is undoubtedly the most political-looking politician on campus. The big smile, the hearty greeting, his magnificent facade, all make him look every inch a real senator.

Reid, though, is a little different from most of the other campus "wheels," big and little. His behavior has considerable depth; when he says, does, or proposes something you may be sure that it is 'really Reid.'

It might look as though it were cold and calculated; ulterior motives may seem to be hiding behind it; but a closer knowledge of Reid hardly allows the existence of such hypotheses.

Whether or not the honor council "Leniency Bill" was prompted by presidential ambition, it was taken as such. The effect was to greatly decrease the possibility of Reid's candidacy for president this spring.

Reid at least has an opportunity denied other presidential hopefuls: he can settle down and begin a carrer as elder statesman now. SP Party Saints Penegar and Cook left some pretty big halos lying around when they left campus.

The bravos of this quasi institution of quasi cultoor in no-so-quasi instiution of quasi —cul- with far better aim, if less sportsmanship, than did likeable and excellent Dick Hemric's cohorts of Naismithism hurl the ball in their ritualistic roles.

This should challenge Sociologists — or do we mean Zoologists? —to observe the species closely before, and after, the removal to Winston-Salem. It might be a rewarding colateral study to observe the Winston-Salemites with like judicinal objectiveness to see, when the two groups meet, who does what to whom and who gets the worst of it. Kangaroos, Wombats, bandicoots, opossums, duckbills and echidnas long have defied Darwin's theory of evolution and survival through improvement of species. Can Winston-Salem out-Darwin Darwin?

Unfettered, unlettered and unbettered, Wake Forest marches on—on Winston-Salem, praise be! We can forgive lack of gentlemanliness since it is not an inborn trait. Lack of sportsmanship, however, suggests deeper trauma of the personality. This is not to say the situation of educationing Demon Deaks is hopeless: one hundred twenty-one years have gone by since the founding, or concoction, of Wake Forest College; and dedicated educators have given their lives to improvement of the species.

Who knows but that another one hundred twenty-one years won't see Demon Deaks hurl bricks in their anger over losing quasi — or queasy — sporting contests? At least, the brick is a refinement of a civilized peoples, while the rock remains the symbol of primitives.

But wasn't it an appeal to passions of a sort when the pressed-on Preston management perhaps cudgled its two heads in dim gropings, and came up with a gimmick of presenting the Football-Deak-of-the-Year trophy to a very fine and decent player on the same night when the representatives of the university with whose team the Football Deaks had locked in ugly fisticuffs only months before, were their basketball adversaries?

Frankly, we'd have more respect for the alleged intelligent athletic management, heretofore at least suspect as a yes-yes department, if it had done this stupid bit of staging deliberately, than if it had been indavertent. It could be that some misguided Psychologist (i. e.: a D-minus brain in Elementary Psychology) nightmared this up in the hope it would put the lads on the qui vive; and had that rock been aimed a mite better, it might have been an ugly qui mort.

The Baptist Hollow bandicoots should try to get it into their cue-ball skulls that a repetition of their Kenan Stadium buffooneries and their Gore Gym galooticisms might cut deep into their athletic incomes: the Blue Devils and the Tar Heels keep them solvent in Football; Duke and State keep them solvent in Basketball; and their Baseball — where rock-throwing and bat-swinging can be translated into good teams — rides gravy on the same State-Duke-UNC largess from Basketball and Football.

The whole world loves a good sport. By the same token, it hates a bum one. Nor will a change of locale be the whole answer but it may be a beginning: Even Camels know a limit to patience . . .

The "Honor System" at this University is a farce. There is a system, all right, but it is completely devoid of honor.

This is because those administering the system are completely devoid of a concept of honor.

Honor is an individual matter, and the initiative and responsibility for it must rest ultimately with the individual. A code of honor is also an individual matter, one that simply involves living with oneself, and acting accordingly.

As it is currently administered, the Honor System is merely a front designed to uphold a standard behavior pattern. A student is told that he is to act in comformity to a certain code, and is told that he is being "put on his honor" to do so; watch dogs are then provided to make sure that he does.

The code consists of regulations, written or unwritten, which the Administration wishes enforced; or it consists of whatever vague notion of honor may currently be held by a "council" of the student's "peers."

There has been, on the other hand, no attempt to disguise the prevalent assumption that he individual student is without honor. What difference does it make that the professor leaves the classroom during the exam, if each student has been carefully insturcted to rat on his neighbor? You have as many proctors as you have classmates.

The pledge required at the end of each paper is equally blatant. If the student is dishonest it is worthless; if he is honest it is an insult.

We are told that the pledge is a "reminder." Is honor, then, so fragile and fugitive a concept that it can be lost sight of between pop quizzes? What prepared statement do the administration propose as a reminder of our dignity and integrity?

The great fear is, of course, that a student left to his own devices may not always behave in exactly th the way the university wishes him to behave. He may start to engage in that dread subversive pastime known of "thinking for oneself." He may discover that informing on his neighbor or signing denials of guilt are at the least distaasteful at the most shameful.

As long as the students are treated as hypocrites, maligners, and miscreants, there are those who will behave as such. Not until the student is treated with the respect ha is his due as an individual, responsible to no higher court than himself, will there be Honor on this campus—or, indeed, anywhere.

Dept. of safe predictions: We will continue to have more system than honor at this University.

CUFF NOTES

By BERNIE WEISS

Daily Tar Heel Sports Editor

Spring football practice for Carolina got under way Monday at Navy Field quietly and without fanfare. Only a small number of spectators were on hand to watch the Tar Heels go through their calisthenics, then their specialties as the squad divided into groups of linemen, ends, quarterbacks and other backs to get the feel of the ball and ground again.

Head coach George Barclay ran the team through a brief scrimmage at the end of the session.

As a result of the day's activity, there were the usual aches and pains yesterday morning. End Doug Malone said he had to roll out of bed—he couldn't sit up.

But there were no serious casualties. Probably the worst injury was line coah Marvin Bass' finger, which got jammed in the knuckle and swelled to the size of a golf ball. He doesn't know how it happened.

Bass, incidentally, was feeling the aches and pains yesterady almost as much as the players. As he has always done in the past, this time he again is leading them through their exercises.

The coaching staff is looking forward to the day when it can get a look at its new quarterback Bill Ellington, in a hot scrimmage. Ellington, just out of the service, played freshman ball here a few years back.

He is of good size and has a good pair of hands, according to Barclay. The only difficulty which may arise is this: Ellington has never played Split-T football. Before, he played end and tailback in the single-wing.

The team will be on Navy Field drilling five days a week. Tuesdays, when many players have late labs, and Sundays are out.

The Swedish gymnastics team, reputed to be one of the world's best, will make its second appearance here March 2, and no one is more enthusiastic over its coming than Bill Meade, the UNC gymnastic coach.

Meade has gone wild over the crew, having seen them perform, and expects their show here this time to be even better as the girls' troupe will accompany the men.

State's Skyscrapers Sweep Boards; Rosenbluth Gets 29

Ron Shavlik Paces Sixth-Ranked 'Pack To Top Seeded Position For ACC Tourney

By BERNIE WEISS

State College's towering Wolfpack sweeped clean the backboards in the second half last night as it swept further to a 79-75 victory over North Carolina before 5,500 irate and unsportsmanlike fans in Woollen Gym.

It was State's game after intermission as the old gray fox, Everett Case, took full advantage of his heavy and tall bench strength to wear down Carolina and outjump the much shorter Tar Heels. UNC was able to get just seven rebounds in the second half.

With the win, the sixth-ranked (nationally) Wolfpack clinched top seeding for the Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament with a 12-2 record against league teams. Carolina, which will probably go into the affair seeded fourth, has an 8-5 mark.

Len Rosenbluth, who fouled out with 6:30 left in the game, was high scorer for the evening with 29 points. State's Ron Shavlik came in with 28 and was top man for the winners .

But the difference in the final score is a result of two factors, which both rode in State's favor. The Wolfpack out-rebounded Carolina, 48-23, and outshot Carolina from the foul line, 37-25. Shooting percentages from the floor were nearly equal—State having 37 percent and Carolina 39 percent.

THE TAR HEELS, who had just lost to and defeated the Wolfpack in two earlier games this season, dominated the first half although they were behind at intermission. State took a four-point lead in the beginning, but then Carolina tied it up at 6-6 and went ahead 11-8 to lead until 30 seconds before half-time. At one time it was by a five-point margin, but State pecked away and kept within distance until Nick Pond tossed in a set shot to make it 36-35, Carolina. Pond repeated with a tap-in with 30 seconds to go and the 'Pack had a 37-36 lead at the half.

After this, the lead changed hands swiftly and often until about eight minutes were left. Shavlik poured in four free throws to put the 'Pack ahead by four points as Rosenbluth fouled out. State then initiated a freeze waiting for the three-minute mark. Carolina pressed but it only got Al Lifson to leave via the foul route and that was the game.

As the winners freezed, fans tossed pennies on the court while chanting "State's gone chicken." After the game there was a flourish of unbecoming conduct on the court,but it got no worse than that.

Brumley Tallied 16 In Victory

Pete Brumley has been named as the Daily Tar Heel "Athlete of the Week" by the sports staff for his outstanding performance against Duke in Saturday's gymnastics meet.

Pete was high man with 16 points as Carolina handed Duke a 66-29 defeat. He took first place on the flying rings and tumbling and second place on the side horse.

Coach Bill Meade said that Brumley's consistency and versatility, especially in tumblnig, have been deciding factors in compiling the UNC gymnatists' 4-2 record.

Competition To Be Extremely Keen When Distance Runners Toe The Line In ACC Indoor Track Affair

Competition in the conference distance races in Saturday's Indoor Games here will be extremely keen, especially in the mile and two-mile which will feature a defending champion and a top-notch sophomore in each event.

Carolina Coach Dale Ranson expects the mile to be the second best run in the history of the Games, with the winner coming under 4:15. UNC's Jim Davis set the record of 4:12.5 in 1940.

Tar Heel Jim Beatty, who last week recorded a 4:15.8, and Maryland's two aces, sophomore Alva Grim and defending champ Larry Faass, will battle for honors in the mile.

Three harriers have recorded time in the two-mile within the last week that are at last seven seconds better than the record. Carolina's Bobby Barden, State's Mike Shea, and Maryland's Dave Party are the speedsters, all right at 9:29. Been Good of Maryland is the defending champ. Beatty has also recorded a 9:28, but may or may not be used in the two.

Ranson thinks that three men will come under the record set by Field of Maryland, a 9:34.5 in 1940.

Coach Rabb To Speak To Monogram Club

Baseball Coach Walter Rabb will be the principal speaker at a meeting of the Monogram Club tomorrow at 7 p.m. Discussion will be hld concerning the coming Blue-White football game which climaxes spring practice.

Perdue Will Captain '55 UNC Gridders

Roland Perdue, senior tackle from College Park, Ga., has been selected by his team-mates to captain the 1955 Tar Heel football squad.

Perdue, 195 pounds and six feet, one inch tall, worked his way up to a starting position on last year's team and became one of the work-horses in the forward wall. He is a pre-ministerial student.

Will Frye, one of Carolina's greatest defensive ends who gained all-ACC honors last season, was second in the voting and is alternate captain .

FOUR SENIORS

The North Carolina wrestling team will lose only four men through graduation this year. Included on the list of seniors are Karl Barkley, Arthur and Miles Gregory, and Pete McGehee. Thirteen others will return next season.

20th Win In 21 Games; To Meet Duke Friday

By EDDIE CRUTCHFIELD

Carolina's Tar Babies overcame a slow first half to wallop N. C. State's Wolflets, 89-73, before a spirited throng of Carolina fans in Woollen Gym last night.

Pete Brennan, Roy Searcy and Charley Adams were the main cogs for Coach Buck Freeman's forces as the Tar Babies pulled ahead in the dying minutes of the first half to lead State's quintet 34-32 at rest time.

Brennan, game high scorer with 28 points, controlled the backboards while Searcy with 24 points and Adams with 19 ripped the net with an assortment of shots.

From the opening minutes of the second half until the end of the game it was Carolina all the way. The Tar Babies wasted little time in advancing the score to a 16 point lead, 56-38, in their favor. In the last five minutes Coach Buck Freeman cleared the UNC bench allowing all of his men to play.

3rd Week: Show Boat's Rolling

SHOW BOAT CHORUS
. . . after blocking in, drill, drill, drill

By CHAL SCHLEY

Show Boat is now rolling into its third week and is taking shape nicely.

All 60 of the acting, singing and dacing cast now know in general what their motions on stage should be. This is a result of last week's tedious "blocking-in" process.

As of Monday night, the chorus went back to Hill Hall to polish up its numbers, the dancers went to the Playmaker Theater to drill some more and the principals went over and over their lines and actions in Memorial Hall.

The same schedule was followed Tuesday night, but this evening will see the ensemble in action again.

By early next week, dress rehearsals should be under way.

ON AND OFF THE STAGE

Acting in a large-scale production of this sort is a very time-consuming and effort-demanding occupation. In an attempt to find out why anyone would want to work so hard at it, five of the principal actors and actresses were interviewed.

RAVENAL

John Shearin, who plays the part of Ravenal, has been active in the theatre for ten years and has performed professionally in operatta, comedy, opera and drama for four years. He is at present in Chapel Hill to further his studies under voice trainer Walter Golde of New York fame.

Shearin is acting in Show Boat primarily because he likes the part of Ravenal. The way the part is written allows for individual interpretation on the part of the actor. Ravenal, a river gambler, is "a man who is gay on the surface and who lives by his wits and nerve." Beneath the surface, though, he is a man who wants to find a home, and who looks to Magnolia for a settling influence, according to Shearin.

MAGNOLIA

Magnolia will be portrayed by Mrs. Martha Fouse, who recently sang the part of Cherubine in the Music Department's production of Figaro. Mrs. Fouse has been described by several of her fellow actors as a "stage natural."

This will be Mrs. Fouse's first "real acting role," and she is very excited about it. In fact, the excitement, the glamour and the feeling of satisfaction which comes from acting are the reasons behind her doing so.

According to Mrs. Fouse, Magnolia is written as a sweet, unassuming and very young girl who puts up with a lot at the start of the play. However, after the 20-year time-lapse which the play is supposed to cover, Magnolia matures consdeirably and her "strong under-lying character" is brought out.

Mrs. Fouse and Shearin, aliases Magnolia and Ravenal, play the romantic leads of the show.

Editors note: Interviewer Schley talked to other Show Boat performers, but time and space cut him short. The next in this series will be concerned with the technical side of production.

Both men and women responded well to questionnaire sections on helpful college courses and the value of their college education, Galloway said.

The men mentioned English and accounting most frequently as "the course which has been most helpful," listing the same two, along with public speaking as "the course I wish I had taken."

Social sciences, English and other humanities headed the lists for the women graduates both in helpfulness and regret in missing them.

Director Galloway reported the girls "value their college education primarily for intellectual development, then for vocational training, social interests and personal development." Mose men listed vocational preparation first, but mentioned the intellectual, personality and social development as helpful secondary values.

State Publications' Advisory Measure Is Probably Dead

By CHUCK HAUSER

RALEIGH, Feb. 23—The rumored bill to require faculty supervision of student publications at all state-supported schools will probably never reach the floor of the General Assembly.

The gentleman who considered introducing such a measure—he is a state sentor from a northern county—has decided that such a step is unnecessary.

This legislator is among those people in the state who reacted rather unhappily to the publication of a drawing of a nude male in the fall issue of Coraddi, the Woman's College student magazine.

The drawing was innocuous enough—its anatomical details were handled in simple, stylized outline—but a number of people aparently felt it was misplaced in the pages of an undergraduate publication at a state school for girls. WC Chancellor expressed the opinion that such uninhibited art belonged in a gallery rather than in Coraddi.

The senator, who asked that his name not be revealed, does not believe in the principle of faculty supervision of student publications "unless it becomes necessary."

"You don't want to have somebody censor the magazine, of course, if you can help it," he said. "But this thing just got out of hand."

Why did the senator decide not to introduce the bill which he had been considering?

"The Legislature doesn't have to pass a bill, does it? Doesn't the Board of Trustees have the power to make that rule? Can't the college administrations make a rule like that themselves? I just don't believe it's necessary for the General Assembly to pass it."

The senator didn't think the nude male drawing in Coraddi was nearly as objectionable as a story in the same issue of the magazine.

"Did you read that story?" he asked. "It's stuff like that that leads to things like the murder of that Guilford College girl up in New York. That story's the sort of thing you might find on sale at some of these sex houses."

Reid's Speech

Dr. Ira Reid, professor and chairman of the department of sociology at Haverford College, Haverford, Pa., will speak tonight on "Implementing the Supreme Court Decision," at a dinner meeting at the Episcopal Parish House.

Budget Cuts Will Hurt Hospital, Asserts Gray

The UNC Division of Health Affairs, through N. C. Memorial Hospital, is the instrument for the realization of a great dream of the people—making North Carolina a state of good health, President Gordon Gray asserted Tuesday in a speech here.

He addressed the midwinter meeting of the Memorial Hospital Auxiliary and their guests, the Sir Walter Cabinet, composed of wives of legislators and other state officials.

"North Carolina shows its heart to its citizens here as nowhere else," the President said, adding that such decisions as hospital visiting policies are based on the belief that the hospital belongs to the people of the state.

'BIG BUSINESS'

President Gray said that "hospitals are big business, ranked the fifth largest major industry in the nation by some surveys."

He repeated the statement he made before the Legislature's Joint Appropriations Committee Feb. 2 that Memorial Hospital cannot continue to operate on its original "proper but humane philosophy" of caring for charity as well as paying patients if proposed budget cuts go into effect.

REFUSED ELSEWHERE

Reporting that a six-month study has revealed the hospital's cost per patient day as $27.21 while the average income per patient day is $14.83. President Gray cited a number of cases of needy patients, unable to pay, many of whom had been refused admittance at other hospitals in the state.

President Gray said this is a fulfillment of the need expressed by the late Gov. J. Melville Broughton when he asserted that no person should lack adequate hospital care or treatment in this state.

'EXPENSIVE OPERATION'

A main factor in high operative costs, President Gray said, is that patients are referred here from all parts of the state. "This means an unusually sick group of patients, who require more care, medicine and other attention than in the average community hospital. This makes for an expensive operation."

President Gray presented statistical reports on the various schools within the Division of Health Affairs, which are carrying out the objective set up by the N. C. Hospital and Medical Care Commission to "provide professional and technical education in all health fields for service to all North Carolina.

BETTER PHARMACISTS

"One of the greatest opportunities lies in providing more ample physical facilities for pharmacy training," he said, noting that the State ranks next to bottom among the 48 in number of pharmacists per population.

President Gray reported that such hospital facilities as the Psychiatric Center and Gravely Sanatorium for tuberculosis patients operate at almost full capacity. Of the 27,000 patients cared for to date in the entire hospital, he said, 97.1 per cent have lived to return home.

"Memorial Hospital's service to the races has been in line with population percentages in this state," he added. "Negro patients composed 25 per cent of all those served, while the Negroes total 25.78 per cent of the state's population."

President Gray was introduced by Mrs. W. Reece Berryhill, wife of the Dean of the UNC Medical School, and Auxiliary public relations chairman. His talk followed a series of reports on volunteer services in the hospital given at the business session, at which Mrs. Bruce Strowd, Auxiliary president, presided.

Following his address the Cabinet members were honored at a coffee hour and conducted on a tour of the Hospital facilities. They also convened for a brief session called by the president, Mrs. W. B. Rodman of Washington.

Village Election Bill Up Tonight

By NEIL BASS

The meeting hour of the student Legislature, moved up to 8 o'clock so that solons may listen to General Ridgway, will tick by this week without activity from the University Party. Of course the UP will debate and argue the Student Party introduced bills, but as for themselves, they say they have no legislation to offer.

According to Jack Stevens, UP floorleader, a definite emphasis will be placed on that word "argue" when a bill concerning the elections in Victory Village appears on the sessions' agenda.

The bill calls for elections in Victory Village to be carried on in conjunction with regular University elections. That is to say, the Student Elections Board will handle responsibility for carrying out the Village elections.

The Ways and Means Committee of the Legislature voted the bill out favorably by a margin of 4-3. this meant that four SPs liked it and three UPs didn't. Apparently the Village Board of Directors wants such action, but the UP says "no."

Another bill to hit the docket during the meeting, which rather promises to stir up argument between factions, is a bill to create a bi-partisan board to name candidates for the editorship of the Yackety Yack.

On this matter, according to proceedings of the Ways and Means Committee, the UP has completely reversed its stand of several weeks back. Then they wanted such a board to name the editorial candidates for The Daily Tar Heel and the Yack. Now, as the negative vote of all three UP members of the Ways and Means Committee shows, they don't want a board to choose the Yack editor.

A changing of the General Elections Law may also be enacted at the session. The change is that now a candidate for student government office must have a "C" average for his entire period of residence. Formerly the time period was set as the semester directly preceding the one in which a candidate sought office.

Summer Work To Be Talked In Y Today

Miss Anne Queen, college secretary for the American Friends Service Committee, will be on the campus today to talk with students who are interested in summer service work of various sorts with the AFSC.

Projects under the AFSC program include work camps, both in the United States and overseas; Community Service Units in Mexico and El Salvador; the Internes in Industry and in Community Service, and Institutional Service in Mental Hospitals and Schools for Delinquents.

Of particular interest to students from overseas are the International Seminars held in various parts of the United States for three or four weeks during the summer.

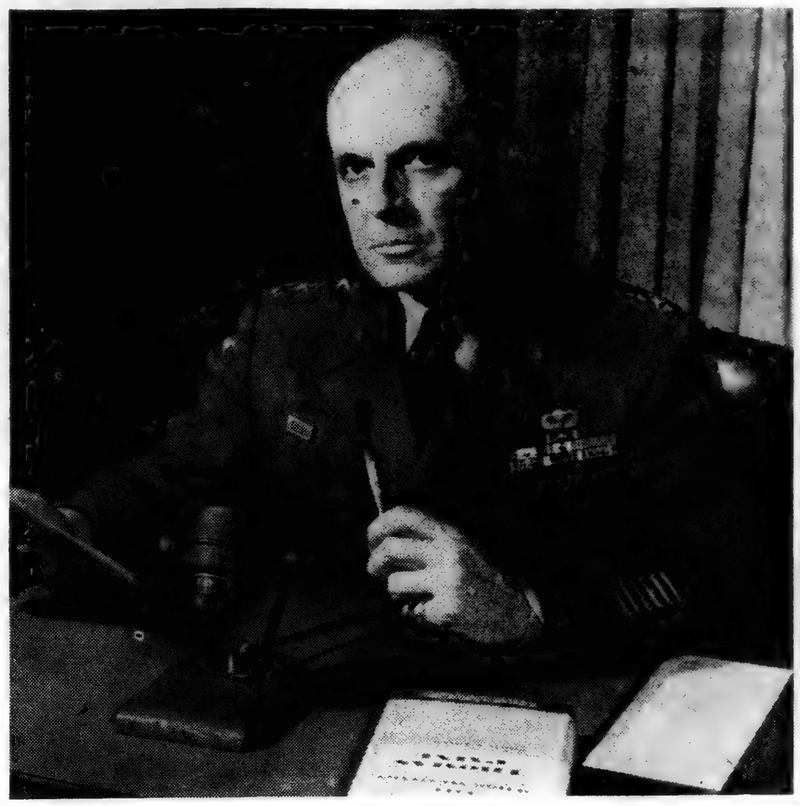
Miss Queen will be in the YMCA office from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and from 2:30 to 4:30 this afternoon to discuss projects with students who are interested.

Friends Chief To Visit Here This Afternoon

Dr. Mojmir Povolny, Director of the International Student Programs for the American Friends Service Committee, will be on campus today and desires to talk with as many international students as possible, said Friends representatives.

He will be in the Social Room of Connor Dorm from 5 to 5:45 this afternoon.

Dr. Povolny was born in Czechoslovakia, receiving his law degree from the university there. Since coming to the United States he has received his Ph.D. degree in International Relations from the University of Chicago. He has also studied in the University of Paris for one year. His office with the AFSC is in Philadelphia, Pa.



Under Dr. Povolny's direction are the International Seminars, sponsored by the AFSC. These Seminars bring together each summer 20 to 30 students of diverse national, religious and racial backgrounds to live in a small scale world community.

GMAB Film

"Blood of a Poet," the third of this semester's GMAB Film Series, will be shown at 8 o'clock tonight in Carroll Hall.

Jean Cocteau, who directed "The Storm Within," shown last semester, wrote, directed and narrated "Blood of a Poet."

This is the first movie that the famous French movieman made.

GEN. MATTHEW RIDGWAY
. . . Hill Hall, tonight, 8

Ridgway Address Is Slated At 8 Tonight

Matthew B. Ridgway, Army Chief of Staff, will speak in Hill Hall tonight at 8 p.m.

General Ridgway will speak on the general topic of foreign relations. He will be introduced by Tom Creasy, president of the student body.

General Ridgway's appearance is being sponsored by the Carolina Forum. Joel Fleishman, senior from Fayetteville, is chairman of the Forum.

Ridgway will arrive at the Raleigh-Durham airport this afternoon at 3:30, and will be honored at a tea at the home of Gordon Gray at 5 p.m. The general will be the guest of honor at a banquet at the Carolina Inn at 6:30.

Ridgway will also be the guest of honor at a public reception at Graham Memorial following address.

Dorm Votes Down Idea Of Brigadoons Dance

The bylaws in their original form were thumbed down by the dorms, so they were changed by the Interdormitory Council, sponsors of the Brigadoons dance-per-semester idea, and are now being voted on by individual men's residences again.

Manning Muntzing, council president, and a committee working on the proposal altered the bylaws after their first failure to "correct" amendments that "certain of the dorms objected to."

After the revision, the controversial bylaws were submitted to the IDC for approval before being passed on to the individual men's dorms for the final vote.)

Brigadoons is being "crammed down the student's throats," was the reaction that Raymond Taylor, president of Old West gave to the counselors at last week's IDC session. He was supported by two of his colleagues, including Frank Watkins, president of Old East.

Next the proposal goes to the dorms for approval again. Taylor said Tuesday that we're so disgusted that we don't want to have anything else to do with it.

FROM HUXLEY TO HERMAN TO SOUND & FURY:

GMAB Has A Job, But Most Students Don't Know It

By Jackie Goodman

The Graham Memorial Film Series, free bridge and dance lessons, the appearances of such people on campus as Aldous Huxley, concerts by Woody Herman, Rise Stevens, the First Piano Quartette—all of these events are presented to students here by the Graham Memorial Activities Board, and yet it would probably be safe to say that many of the students who enjoy entertainments and opportunities such as these have only a vague notion of the organization and work of the Board.

"The Graham Memorial Activities Board attempts to utilize the facilities of the student union to the fullest possible extent," says President Forester. "Our primary function is to provide as complete a program as possible consisting of educational, cultural and entertaining events. This program is designed to offer revents to some of the students all of the time."

GMAB is composed of its officers and nine committees. The present officers are Gordon Forester, president; David Reid, vice-president; Miss Sue Fink, secretary, and Wayne G. Brown, treasurer. Jim Wallace, director of Graham Memorial, is the Board's advisor.

These officers and the chairmen of the nine committees comprise the executive committee of GMAB. That committe decides on all planks the Board sponsors.

The nine committees under the Board and their chairmen are the Dance and Music Committee, headed by Miss Carol Webster; the Recreation Committee, headed by Miss Harriet Parish and Layton McCurdy; the Reception Committee, headed by Misses Margaret Nieter and Jackie Steed; the Film Committee headed by Jack Markham; the Office Committee, headed by Miss Sue Fink;

The Calendar Committee, headed by Miss Coe Brassell; the Faculty and Forum Committee, headed by Miss Barbara Jolden and Vic Sydnor; the Publicity Committee, headed by Miss Marsha Poague, and the Polls Committee, headed by Miss Annette Levenson.

At the beginning of the year each committee sets up tentative plans for its program. Each committee chairman is in complete charge of his program and his money allotment.

The jurisdiction of the Dance and Music Committee covers such things as the combo dances held in the Rendezvous Room, the Halloween barn party held last semester and any special occasion dances. The biggest project of the Dance Committee so far this year was the forming of Sound and Fury, the amateur stock company composed entirely of students. The company put on its first show, written, directed, produced and acted by students, last December. That initial presentation of the company was such a success that a second production is set tentatively for April 28 and 29.

The Dance Commtitee also carried out the Activities Board's plans for the dance instructions which were given last semester and which are being continued this semester. The Petites Musicales Series is another project of which the Dance Committee has charge.

The Recreation Committee of GMAB sponsors such activities as the free bridge lessons, the movies which are shown during football season of all Carolina games which are not played here. This Committee is the sponsor of the National Intercollegiate Bridge Tournament which is to be held here soon. Some of the events which the Committee is planning for the future include an exhibition of billiards and instructions in billiards plus a Field Day event to be held in conjunction with the physical education department. The Field Day will be for all men's and women's dorms and sororities and fraternities.

Film Committee

The Film Committee sponsors the series of foreign and outstanding American films which is presented to the students each semester. The entire film program is offered at cost. Earl Stevens, part time instructor in English here, acts as advisor to the Committee in the selection of films. Last semester the film series included the French film "Diary of a Country Priest," "Camille," "Destry Rides Again" and "The Storm Within." The program for the spring term includes "Blood of the Poet," "Eternal Mask" and "It Happened One Night."

The Receptions Committee is composed of a group of women students who handle all receptions which are held in Graham Memorial. These girls plan, buy and decorate for and serve at the receptions which are given after the talks of Carolina Forum speakers and the speeches of any other dignitaries who visit the campus.

The Faculty and Forum Committee has for its primary function the promotion of better relations between students and faculty members. The Committee from time to time sponsors functions to which the faculty members and the majors of a certain department are invited. It also sponsors informal forums featuring outstanding professors and businessmen. The appearance of Aldous Huxley on campus last semester was planned by the Faculty and Forum Committee.

One of the events planned for the future by the Committee is the appearance of a Washington correspondent on campus. Following the informal forum which will be held, a reception will be held for the correspondent to which majors in political science and journalsim will be invited.

Office Committee

The Office Committee of GMAB is composed of 10 women students who keep the Activities Board office open and provide clerical assistance. They have charge of all committee notices and correspondence which concern the Board.

The members of the Office Committee are Miss Sue Fink, chairman, Misses Louise Grey, Barbara McRee, Ann Wrenn, Marietta Everette, Lee Strickland, Jackie O'Brien, Peggy Funk, Ellen Wood and Lucia Johnson.

The campus calendars which are distributed in all dorms and fraternity and sorority houses twice during the school year are the work of GMAB's Calendar Committe. These calendars list all events, academic, athletic and social, which take place here durnig each semester. The work on the calendar for the fall semester of 1955 will begin as early as April.

Posters, handbills, radio, television, bumper stickers and loud speakers in Y-Court are the means by which the Publicity Committee of GMAB publicizes all events sponsored by the Board. The Committee has done "really a tremendous job" this year, according to President Forester. In order to carry out its job of publicity, the Committee has a special shop

The General's Warning

General Matthew Ridgway comes to the campus today with his warning to the nation still echoing around the Washington corridors: It is dangerous and foolhardy to reduce our armed forces at this time.

General Ridgway is caught in that beard-ed controversy between those who would have us rely chiefly on air and atomic power and those who insist on the importance of the soldier, even in the atomic age. The General took a tight grip on his witness chair the other day and disagreed strongly with his boss, the President. A strong, ready American Army, he said is necessary to the peace of the world.

One cruelly hard fact would seem to be enough to justify that disagreement. In the midst of indecision and uncertainty, American power in the Pacific is weaker than it was before the Korean agression, incidentally, where atomic power would have been virtually useless.

Add to that the terrifying imbalance between Western armies and Soviet armies in Europe and comparative Russian-American armed strength (which by 1960, at the present rate, will be about 2-1 in favor of the USSR) and General Ridgway's warning would seem to be more than the crying of a prophet of doom. We fail to see, in fact, how his warning can be ignored by Congress when the memory of Korea is still so clear.

But Rep. Martin said just last week that we could beat Communist China in 30 days if anything does happen over there; and that surely proves that the generals of Capitol Hill are capable of almost anything.

The Imaginative Grasp

Nathan M. Pusey, president of Harvard, is disturbed at the decline of the Humanities in American universities. In 25 years, the number of students in Harvard has risen by more than a thousand. But Humanities students have dropped 300 in number.

That statistic is repeated, more or less, at most universities, this one included. And why is that bad? Let President Pusey answer:

> A college in which the studies traditionally called the Humanities are weak runs the risk of being less liberal than it should; for our full humanity is best quickened and developed through imaginative grasp of the subtler experiences of individuals as revealed through arts and letters.
>
> The chief aim of undergraduate education is to discover what it means to be a man. A college or university will be strong, therefore, only where those studies flourish whose principal value is to arouse such awareness and where they are taught with charm and vigor, and win respect.

In All Its Violence

No sooner had we finished complimenting North Carolina yesterday for her temperance and calm in the face of the difficult segregation issue than we received, from a University graduate, the shrill epistle printed above, right.

The KKK overtones in correspondent Grimes' letter will certainly not be subscribed to by most North Carolinians, even by those who are convinced that the end of segregation will be a bad thing for the state.

We have printed the letter in all its violence, not as a representative of expression of the case against integration, but as evidence that all hate, all bigotry has not yet been purged from North Carolina's soul. Not yet, and perhaps it will never be.

But there is ample evidence that the great tide of opinion in our state prevails against the islands of venom that still exist. For that, we can be proud—and hopeful.

Star-Crossed Lovers In Technicolor

Louis Kraar

"GO HENCE, to have more talk of these sad things;
Some shall be pardon'd and some punished;
For never was a story of more woe
Than this of Juliet and Romeo."

The closing lines of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" ended J. Arthur Rank's movie of the same name with appropriate advice for all viewers at a special preview showing.

Since watching the beautifully-filmed production Tuesday night, I have gone hence and talked of the tale of the "star-crossed lovers" in Verona. It's a movie worth talking about, worth seeing.

★

WITHOUT GOING into the plot (an old, but beautiful one), this reporter can say that Susan Shentall as Juliet seemed to portray many of the childish sides of Shakespeare's Juliet.

Romeo (Laurence Harvey) played the balcony scenes convincingly, omitting the sophomoric, love-sick air that so many Romeos have in a production this play.

And Verona in the summer—ah, Verona—the color of 'f'air Verona" is the most noteworthy thing in the film. Filmed in Italy, and with the costumes and other accoutrements of the High Renaissance, the movie imparts an atmosphere of life — even when it strays from details set down by Shakespeare.

All the scenes, traditionally played on the stage with a minimum of scenery, were filmed at the places where they could have actually taken place.

★

THIS IS a movie that the English grad students will not all be happy with. In short, it isn't a scene for scene adaptation of Shakespeare's play. However, this doesn't keep it from being a fine movie.

Miss Shentall (Juliet) while not looking entirely like the 14-year-old she is playing, is—at 20—a young enough actress to be convincing as Juliet. She falls for Romeo in a giddy 14-year-old manner which is both beautiful and 14-year-oldish.

As the final stages of the tragedy fall at the end of the movie, one almost wishes it could end a little happier, yet—after it is over—you realize that it couldn't have ended any other way. But this is a quality in both the play and the movie.

I think it can be safely said that while the movie errs from the strictly Shakespearean course, most of the essence of the play is reflected in the movie.

★

NOW IF YOU don't like Shakespeare, perhaps the flashy sword fighting between the feuding houses of Montague and Capulet will catch your fancy.

When Juliet is thought dead by her parents, but isn't, there is a solemn scene showing her burial. Just when the viewer is about to cry, a quick shift of scene to Romeo on horseback galloping towards Verona is made. Romeo, as you remember, didn't know his love wasn't actually dead, but the thundering hoof beats after the music of the funeral ceremony shook me a little.

The music, particularly in the monastery sequences (filmed on the Venetian cloister of San Francesco del Deserto), is quite beautiful.

"Romeo and Juliet" opens for a three-day run at the Varsity Theatre this Sunday. The undergraduate flick-goers will see it and like it. The Shakespeare scholars will see it, be awed with its beauty, then retire to their studies to pick its accuracy apart. But none will dbat its bauty, its atmosphere.

It's just that kind of movie.

'You WILL Cease! That Is A Fact'

(The writer of the following letter, a 1954 graduate of the University, now lives in Smithfield. —Editor.)

At the risk of being tagged as a "Letter Writer" by the Chapel Hill apostles of international socialism, I will tell you a few facts related to you, your nigger-loving friends, the University and the State of North Carolina.

You, Kraar, Levin, Fleishman and company are rapidly becoming a ball and chain around the University neck. You, with your nigger-loving socialism, are turning the people of this state against their leading educational institution. Because of your putrid liberalism you are causing them to regard the entire University with suspicion.

I graduated last year and actually have had to become cautious about letting people know where I received my education, for fear of being looked on as a Red. For, you see, those who have not attended the University have no way of knowing that the tripe which spouts forth from such sources as The Daily Tar Heel, the Phi, the Di, the Carolina Forum, etc. is in no way related to the collective opinion of either the student body or the faculty.

They do not know that it is emitted by a handful who have gained access to the University voice only because the down-to-earth student will have nothing to do with your stupid, petty politics.

You have gotten away with it too long. You are getting cocky and now even dare to write cheap editorials berating such state leaders as John W. Clark. Mr. Clark, an intelligent, aggressive businessman, pays the taxes which send kids like you to school. It is he who does, and by all rights should, control the University and should remove you from it.

At a time when the University's leaders are before the legislature asking for the money needed to make this institution one of the nation's greatest, you are spouting forth your incessant stream of liberalism.

You are getting much too loud. The people of the state do not like it and they are the University's pocketbook. You WILL cease! That is a fact. Those who put the future of the University ahead of the propagation of socialism and the destruction of the Germanic races in the South are going to cut you off. John Clark is the voice of this group.

You had better listen to Clark. because if he takes too long to eradicate your school of thought, you may go the unfortunate way of all niggers and Reds who have stepped out of line in the South. Go north, young man.

Editor:

I am a student in the B.A. School.

As I have spent many hours in accounting, I would like to voice my opinion concerning the credit given for B.A. 71 and 72, two accounting courses required of every student in B.A. school.

A student gets three semester-hours credit for spending four hours in class each week and must take an hour exam on his own time every other week.

This requires a total of 65 hours actually spent in class each semester. This is, for the three semester hours credit given, far more than the 44 hours spent in any other 3-hour course. It is also more than the 58 hours spent in some of the courses for which a student gets four semester-hours credit.

In view of these facts, it appears to me that something should and must be done to equalize credit given in the different schools of the University.

I suggest that students be given more than three semester-hours credit for courses in which they spend considerably more than the number of hours required of a three-hour course.

GM Brings Great Films To Campus

By Ebba Freund

"Blood Of A Poet," the third in the Graham Memorial Activities Board's Film Series, will be shown tonight at 8 in Carroll Hall.

It is another in the laudable series which brings the world's great films to the campus—films which students would not likely see unless they took a trip to New York.

That is the purpose of the Film Series. Jack Markham, Series chairman, says that the film committee selects motion pictures that do not make the rounds of the commercial theatres but are still good movies. Of the eight films shown this semester, four are relatively new foreign films.

Tonight's offering is an outstanding example of the work of the film committee. "Blood Of A Poet" is written, directed and narrated by Jean Cocteau; it is an attempt to combine surrealism with the art of the film.

Cocteau, who has done such movies as "The Storm Within" and "Orpheus" calls "Blood Of A Poet" "a realistic document composed of unreal happenings."

Lineup

Like your art on the screen? Here's a lineup of top motion pictures being brought to the campus by GMAB:

Blood Of A Poet—Tonight.
Rocking Horse Winner—Mar. 10.
My Little Chickadee—Mar. 24.
Rigoletto—April 14.
Eternal Mask—April 28.
It Happened One Night—May 22.

In the movie he has created a world based on symbols juxtaposed with familiar objects. The film should interest those who regard the movies as an art medium—and who like strange experiences.

About one-fourth of the film series ticket holders are townspeople, one-half graduate students and one-fourth undergraduates. Why such a small percentage of undergraduattes? Markham says students may think the motion pictures are of too limited appeal.

A BROAD RANGE

But there's a broad range of interest manifested in the selection. "The Eternal Mask," a story of a young doctor's fight to regain his sanity, should interest those concerned with psychology and medicine.

Opera lovers should find "Rigoletto" rewarding. Virgil Thomson said of this film, "This is what Verdis 'Rigoletto' looks like when performed by the best contemporary artists. Those who like Clark Gable can find him in the role for which he won an Oscar in "It Happened One Night."

Although the movies in the film series are older—and in some cases "artier"—than, say, "Underwater!" they should appeal to anyone interested in motion pictures. Except, perhaps, for "Blood Of A Poet," they were mde for average audiences. The only difference is that some of the films were made abroad and 10 to 20 years ago.

WHAT HAS JANE GOT?

But then what has Jane Russell got that Mae West hasn't? (Mae West is in "The Little Chickadee," a burlesque on westerns.)

The ticket for the series costs $2 for the remaining six movies —about 35 cents per film. The reason tickets are not sold singly, according to Markham, is that GMAB gets the films for less if they are presented on a membership basis.

DETAIL FROM CAROLINA QUARTERLY COVER

The Quarterly Is Worth Your Forty-Five Cents

Ed Yoder

Our more liter'ry colleagues from the mezzanine at the other end of the G.M. hall have sent us down page proofs from the new Carolina Quarterly, which Editor J. A. C. Dunn and his staff will distribute beginning today.

Here's a brief run-down of what to expect when you buy your copy:

NOT UP TO SNUFF

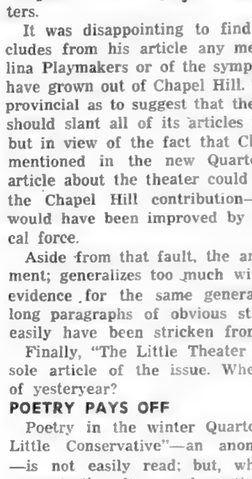
The lead article, "The Little Theater In America," by Archie Hess presents more difficulties than any of the Quarterly's winter offerings. The writer can't help but feel that it doesn't mach up to Quarterly standards which have been set by a tradition of good articles in the past. Mr. Hess writes with a couple of ideas in mind: (1) You can't buck the tastes of Broadway with the grass-roots theatre; and (2) the college and university campuses are he proper locales for little theaters.

It was disappointing to find that Mr. Hess excludes from his article any mention of the Carolina Playmakers or of the symphonic dramas which have grown out of Chapel Hill. This is not to be so provincial as to suggest that the Carolina Quarterly should slant all of its articles toward Chapel Hill; but in view of the fact that Chapel Hill is seldom mentioned in the new Quarterly—and that any article about the theater could do well to mention the Chapel Hill contribution—Mr. Hess's article would have been improved by consideration of local force.

Aside from that fault, the article lacks arrangement; generalizes too much without giving proper evidence for the same generalities; and includes long paragraphs of obvious statements that could easily have been stricken from it.

Finally, "The Little Theater In America" is the sole article of the issue. Where are the articles of yesteryear?

POETRY PAYS OFF



Poetry in the winter Quarterly, except for "A Little Conservative"—an anonymous composition —is not easily read; but, while requiring some concentration, it pays the patient reader well after several concentrated examinations. If the reviewer could attempt to characterize the poetry in one easy word, he would call it "dionysiac"—for whatever that's worth.

"Libation to The Lesser Gods," and "How Loyal Is My Fear" could have come to life on paper after some Germans week-ends. Overall, Mr. Rivera, who must have succumbed to the "X-Claw-hammers" attack of last year, has again given us some good poetry.

Comedy bursts into the pages of the Quarterly with a loud hoop-and-holler with W. David Ashburn's "The Salesman Ruptured By A Streetcar." In this sophosticated one-act play. Mr. Ashburn, who took MA here last year and now teaches at Union College, has some fun at the expense of drama critics—played in the piece by three critic-images, Stink, Stank and Stunk. The whole thing is full of Freud, futility, soul-selling, the "isms" (mainly material—and nihil-) and it is guaranteel to give you some good laughs.

AN OLD TALE WITH A NEW TWIST

Perhaps the most polished piece of work in the new Quarterly is "Suttee," a story by Robin White. The story, set in India, where Mr. White was born, brings together the conflict of Western technology with an age-oid Oriental religion and with resurgent nationalism and a boy-who - cried - wolf tale with a new twist; it is a serious and moving story, and worthy of anthologizing. David Elliott's story, "Journey Before Dawn," is good, whimsical, and very readable.

Quarterly Illustration

Ever wanted to cut anybody's throat? If you have any plans along that line, read "Tell You Me," a story by Carl Cook in "The Best Freshman Writing Of the Fall Semester"; the psychology of throat-cutting gets full exposure here. Mr. Cook's sory was selected along with James A. Oldham's duck-hunting vignette, "Opening Day," for inclusion in this new and valuable feature of the Quarterly. A recognition of the younger writers on campus is long overdue: and "The Best Freshman Writing of The Fall Semester" is perhaps the most serviceable part of the new magazine.

Review Editor Jim Graves's book review section is highly competent again this time. One thing, though: Mr. H. A. Sieber's "In This The Marian Year" didn't excite me nearly as much as it seems to have excited Mr. Rivera, who reviews it.

If you don't happen to be a Quarterly subscriber, forego the next C-Movie downtown, pay a slim 45 cents, and treat yourself to one of the best hour's reading to be had. You'll be glad you did.

Shankle Goes After Five Firsts In Indoor Games Saturday

UNC-Wake To Vie In Acc Meet

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The night doubleheader of next Thursday's four-game program opening the second annual Atlantic Coast Conference basketball tournament is now set.

North Carolina State's defending champions, playing on their home court at the Reynolds Coliseum in Raleigh, will meet Clemson at 7:30. The 9 o'clock game will pair North Carolina and Wake Forest.

Pairings are made automatically under conference rules. The team finishing first (State) plays the No. 8 team (Clemson) in the first round and No. 4 meets No. 5.

North Carolina (8-5) plays Duke Friday night at Durham and Wake Forest has road games at South Carolina Friday and Clemson Saturday. Wake's record is 6-6. A North Carolina loss and two Wake Forest victories would tie the teams for fourth place. ANY OTHER combination would leave North Carolina alone in fourth and Wake Forest fifth. But since the No. 4 team meets No. 5 the outcome of their remaining games cannot change the first round tournament pairing.

It's the afternoon program that has yet to be settled. Team No. 3 meets No. 6 and No. 2 plays No. 7.

Duke is second at 10-3 and Maryland has finished its season with 10-4. If Duke beats North Carolnia Friday night the Devils will clinch second place and meet South Carolina at 4 p.m. Thursday in the tournament and Maryland will open the event against Virginia at 2 p.m.

If Duke loses to North Carolina to drop into a second place tie with Maryland a draw will be required to determine the placings.

Frosh Tankmen Go Undefeated

The Tar Heel freshman swimmers won their eighth and ninth meets of the season as they downed William and Mary (Norfolk Division) 68-16, and Granby High School 59-16 on Monday and Tuesday to finish their dual meet season undefeated. It was the 31st consecutive victory for the freshman swimmers and the third straight year that they have gone undefeated in dual meets.

Eight pool records fell to the Baby Dolphin splashers . . . four in each meet. Walt Rose and Bill Roth led the way with three records each. Rose set new marks in the 100 and 440 freestyle and was a member of the 200 relay team which lowered the pool standard. Roth established a new record in the 50-freestyle and anchored the 300 medley in the first meet and the 150 medley relay in the second to new records.

Bill Zickgraf, a fine varsity prospect, set a new mark in the 200 backstroke and Tom Maury lowered the record in the 200 breaststroke.

Parker Ward and Mac Mahaffey were members of the two medley relay teams with Roth, while Bill Rand, Sonny Shelf and Kelly Manness completed the 200 freestyle team with Rose. Ned Meekins' diving was outstanding in both mets.

Great Duke Ace May Set Record In Three Events

Blue Devil Senior Gets Last Chance

By RAY LINKER

If Duke's ace trackman, Joel Shankle, can win five events in the Atlantic Coast Conference Indoor Games here Saturday, he will become only the second person in the 26-year history of the gala affair to accomplish such a feat. UNC's "Wild Bill" Albans turned in the first such performance in 1949, as he cracked two records, also.

Shankle has been steadily improving since he entered the 1952 Games, and this, his fourth year, may well be the one in which he takes first in all five of the events he enters, and he could also break three records.

In 1952 he scored only five points as he failed to win an event as a freshmna. His 21'4½" in the broad jump was good for a second place, and he scored a third in the 70-yard low hurdles.

By his sophomore year, 1953, he had improved his broad jump to 22'6¼", good enough for a first place, and came into his own in the high hurdles 70-yard event, winning with a 8.9 time. He improved only one notch in the low hurdles, to finish with a second, to complete his scoring for that year, a total of 13 points.

BUT IN HIS junior year he earned the label he now carries, that of being the greatest trackman in Duke's history. He amassed 22 points in chalking up wins in three events, tying for first in another, and taking second in a fifth.

His 8.6 in the high hurdles that year was just one tenth of a second under the record set by Corpening of UNC in 1940, and is one event in which he may better the record this Saturday.

It was the first year that he won the low hurdles, but he did it, as in the high hurdles, in just one-tenth of a second under the record, a 7.6 by Albans in 1949. Shankle will go after the record in this event also.

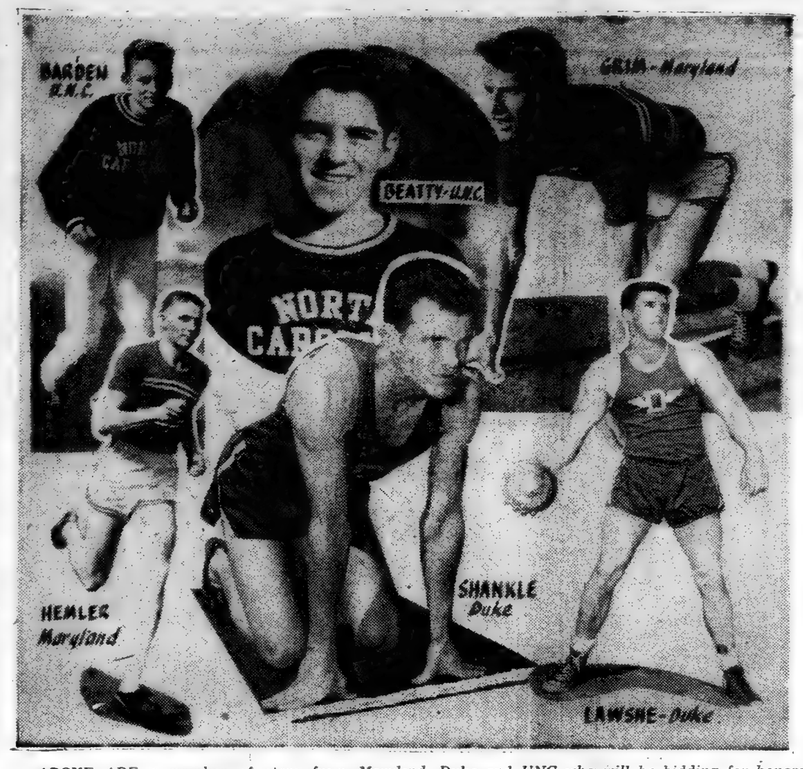
SHANKLE'S BROAD jumping ability had improved more than two feet since his freshman year, and he needs to jump only 2⅜ inches more this year than his 23'5⅞" to equal the record set by Charlie Hubbard, UNC, in 1935, the oldest standing record in the conference division.

Ray Quillen of Virginia, jumped 6'1" in the high jump last year to tie Shankle for first place, and this is one event in which the record appears considerably safe, as the winner will have to jump over 6'4⅛ to better Albans' 1949 mark.

Shankle's second place came in the pole vault behind the record-breaking Mel Schwartz of Maryland. Schwartz cleared 13'3¾" in establishing his record. If Shankle claims a record here or even a win this year he will have to beat the defending champ and record holder.

IF ALL GOES according to the form sheet, Shankle will win four events and place in a fifth, but if he can get by Schwartz in the pole vault, it appears that he will walk off with five first places, as the other events all point in his favor.

Swedes Praised Highly On Tour



By CHUCK STRONG

West Point said, "It was the greatest gymnastic show ever witnessed. After the synchronized calisthenics, the cadets stood up and cheered for 15 minutes."

Penn State went even further in its praise. "It was one of the most thrilling, precise and well-coordinated events ever staged on this campus and drew what is believed to be the largest indoor sports audience on record."

These words of praise were referring to the Swedish national gymnastics team which toured this country last year. The Swedes will perform at UNC on March 2 and in addition to the men's team, they now have a woman's troupe to give the show even more color.

The record that these two teams have compiled leaves no doubt that the Swedes are among the best in the world. At Helsinki, in the 1952 Olympics, the women's team won the gold medal. The men's team won the World's Exhibition Championship at Rotterdam in 1953.

ABOVE ARE a number of stars from Maryland, Duke and UNC who will be bidding for honors Saturday in the second annual Atlantic Coast Conference Indoor Games here at Woollen Gym. All will compete in the conference division. There will also be competition in the non-conference freshman and scholastic divisions. Some 627 athletes have been entered in the all-day affair, with more than 50 schools represented.

Paller, Gravitte Continue Torrid Hitting Pace As Diamonders Drill

By MARSHALL WALDMAN

Yesterday's early morning rain did not hinder the Tar Heel baseball team from having its usual afternoon practice session in Emerson Stadium.

Coach Walter Rabb had his players take their cuts at the plate and then moved them into the field where they practiced handling ground balls. Each player got a chance to hit and outfielders Bob Paller and Connie Gravitte continued their torrid hitting to all fields. Gravitte played center field for he Tar Heels last year and should be back at his old post when opening day rolls around. Paller saw limited action in the outfield last year, but with Albert Long moved into the infield, Paller should be a starter in left field.

Jimmy Love, sophomore catcher up from last year's freshman squad has been handling himself very well behind home plate and will give Jack Maultsby a tough battle for the starting berth. Maultsby is busy with spring football practice and will rejoin the baseballers as soon as grid practice is over.

If today's weather is clear, Coach Rabb hopes to break up the team into two squads and hold a practice game. Rabb will try to get all of the boys into the game, which is scheduled to start at about 3:30.

Country's Tennis Brass Says Little Mo Connolly Won't Quit

FOREST HILLS, N. Y., Feb. 23 (AP)—Uncle Sam's tennis brass refused to take too much stock today in Maureen Connolly's retirement announcement—they think she'll be back.

"I believe this is just temporary," said Lawrence Baker, a leading figure in the U. S. Lawn Tennis Assn. "She'll take a year off for her marriage and then we'll be seeing her on the court again, I'm sure."

"The champions always come back," commented USLTA Secretary Ed Baker. "I don't believe Little Mo will be able to resist the urge to compete again."

Little Mo, at 20 winner of three national and three Wimbledon titles and recognized queen of the world's courts, surprised friends with the announcement yesterday she is through with tournament tennis.

She said she didn't have the "keen interest" any more, that her injured right leg is still giving her trouble and, besides, she is going to marry Norman Brinker in June.

However, she hinted she may be lured back some time later after she is well settled in domestic life.

Mrs. William Kalt, for 20 years head of the USLTA's Women's Tennis Ranking Committee, said she felt Little Mo's retirement was more the result of her accident than her wedding plans.

Blackwell May Appeal If Yanks Don't Act

TAMPA, Fla., Feb. 23 (AP)—Ewell Blackwell said today he will appeal to Commissioner Ford Frick if the New York Yankees don't give him a contract or his unconditional release.

Asserting he still is the property of the Yankees, the former National League pitching great, harassed by recurring arm trouble, said:

"The Yankees refused to give me a contract last year .

"If they don't want me to play, why don't they release me from my contract? I think I can pitch again .If not with the Yanks, with some other club. I know I can pitch in the Pacific Coast League. I'd love to pitch there."

THE BULL SESSION

I wonder if they still make bull sessions the way they used to. Well do I remember the bull sessions of my own undergraduate days. How cogent they were! How informative! How the good talk crackled and our young hearts leaped and the hours sped by as swiftly as minutes!

Our discussions were always led by Jack Femur. (Good old Jack! I hear he's in the extruded aluminum game now.) We would sit cross-legged in a circle around Jack and he would fill his pipe with his own private blend — burley, latakia, and shredded coconut. The rest of us preferred tobacco, so we would light up Philip Morris. This is a procedure I recommend without qualification to everyone who prefers tobacco because Philip Morris has the tobacco that tobacco-preferers prefer the most — mild vintage leaf with a clean, cool flavor that soothes and steadies, that gladdens and enlivens and refreshes.

Jack would puff on his pipe and we would puff on our Philip Morris and the bull-session would begin its meandering journey. The talk would touch on every subject known to man, on every conceivable thing beneath the sun, but no matter how far the conversation wandered, it would always return to "Topic A." I refer, of course, to gardening.

But, as I say, the discussion would cover many subjects before it came to the inevitable gardening. Jack would open each session with a provocative question of a general nature, like: "What's the most important thing a man can get out of college?"

"Girls," Harold Clavicle would reply promptly. (Good old Harold! I hear he's in the frozen lobster tail game now.)

"No, I don't think so," Ben Fibula would say. "I think education is the most important thing you get out of college." (Good old Ben! He's still in school.)

"Listen, guys, I've got a question," Clyde Ilium would say. "If you could spend a week either with Ava Gardner or with Albert Einstein, which would you choose?" (Good old Clyde! I hear he's in the unclaimed freight game now.)

"Albert Einstein, of course," Will Mandible would say. (Good old Will! I hear he's in the jack handle game now.)

"What?" Cleanth Patella would cry, astonished. "You would rather spend a week with Albert Einstein than with Ava Gardner?" (Good old Cleanth! I hear he's in the unclaimed freight game with Clyde Ilium.)

"Natch!" Will Mandible would answer.

"But why?" Sol Sacrum would ask. (Good old Sol! I hear he's a parking meter in Deal, New Jersey.)

"Because," Will Mandible would cry, "if I spent a week with Albert Einstein, maybe I would get so smart that I would be able to figure out a way to spend more than a week with Ava Gardner!"

Well sir, we laughed until our little uvulas were sore and then we went on to a host of other topics. "Do you think it's important to join a fraternity?" Murray Tarsus would ask. (Good old Murray! I hear he's in the mica game now.)

"Only if you are a boy," Bob Turbinate would answer. (Good old Bob! I hear he's in the sheared raccoon game now. The raccoon, incidentally, was invented by Milton Raccoon, whose career should be a source of guidance and inspiration to us all. Mr. Raccoon arrived in this country in 1907, penniless and not speaking a word of English. Today he is the Mayor of four of our principal cities.)

But to get back to the bull session—"What's the best thing to do when the girl you are dancing with insists on leading?" Eric Ulna would ask. (Good old Eric! I hear he's in the flutter valve game now.)

"Hit her with a folded newspaper," George Vertebra would answer. "Never hit a girl with your hand. They learn to associate the hand with food, and you must not confuse them." (Good old George! I hear he's in the folded newspaper game now.)

And so it went — the talk ranging the worlds of the arts and the sciences and the social graces, until we would climb, spent but happy, into our little hammocks . . . I wonder if they still make bull sessions the way they used to.

MOREHEAD PLANETARIUM

More Than You Think

MANAGER JENZANO
. . . 588,000 visitors

By ARCHER NEAL

How would you like to take a rocket ship to Mars? Or go back in time billions of years? Perhaps you'd like to see the skies over Bethlehem on the night that Christ was born.

You can do all of these things by visiting the Morehead Planetarium and seeing the shows that are offered there. There's a new one coming up in a few weeks.

The Morehead Planetarium is a fascinating place to visit, as the estimated 588,000 who have been there can testify.

Actually, there's a lot more to the Planetarium than just the theatre that most people think of in connection with the shows. The building also houses scientific exhibits, the Capernicum Orrey, which is one of two of its kind on the world, the Memorial Rotunda, two art galleries, two reception rooms for official UNC functions, a dining room and various offices.

The Memorial Rotunda contains a permanent exhibit of works from Mrs. Morehead's collection. Flanking the Rotunda are two art galleries in which exhibits are changed about once a month.

The manager of the various activities which go on in the Planetarium is A. F. Jenzano, who came here in 1949 to install and open the Planetarium. He was formerly associated with the Fels Planetarium in Philadelphia. In all there are about 20 persons on the staff, part and full time. Several of them have other connections with the University as students and faculty members.

The permanent staff has three cleaners, headed by Custodian Hubert Robertson, who used to be with Frank Porter Graham, and is the first Negro ever to be on the town council of Chapel Hill. The head technician is John T. Brittian, of Chapel Hill, and the assistant technician J. W. Gates, also of Chapel Hill. Mrs. Nancy Holder, wife of a medical student, is secretary.

In addition to the permanent staff there are 14 others working on a part time basis at the Planetarium.

There are four narrators on the staff. They are Professor Norman W. Mattis of the department of English; Dr. Otto Stuhlman, Jr., of the physics department, and former president of the North Carolina Academy of Science; Harvey Daniell of Chapel Hill, former secretary of the Chamber of Commerce; and James V. Burgess, a UNC senior from Elon, who started work as a guide on the Planetarium staff.

MR. MOREHEAD'S PLANETARIUM
. . . from Chapel Hill to Mars to B. C. to Bethlehem and back

In addition to the lecturers, there are two cashiers, Mrs. Sue Burton and Mrs. Elizabeth Stone. The captain of the guides and assistant technician is Bill Padgett, UNC student from Shelby. In addition there are six student guides. Dr. Morris Davis, asst. professor of astronomy, serves as consultant.

Jenzano pointed out that each staff member shares an almost equal importance in his job. All of them have to come in contact with visitors, and it is important for each of them to be able to answer questions.

The narrator is the man in charge of an individual show. He works completely in the dark in the console. He has about five dozen operating switches and controls at his disposal, and about half of these serve multiple purposes. There are eleven miles of wire between the console and the projector, located in the center of the theatre.

The Zeiss planetarium instrument can project the heavens as they appear in both the northern and southern hemispheres. Each globe on the end of the dumbbell shaped apparatus contains 16 star field projectors. Occulating devices keep the stars from being projected onto the floor and walls. There are separate projectors for the planets and for other special effects, such as the Northern Hemisphere Lights, meteor showers, and comets.

There are seven motors on the projector. Two of these provide diurnal motion, one for latitude change, one for processional motion, and three for the annual motion of the sun, moon, and some of the planets.

The narrator is assisted in his presentation by a technician in an unseen control room. Synchronization between these two is achieved by visizle and audible means, and by sequence cues within the show.

It takes a lot of planning and preparation to produce the Planetarium shows. The staff has already begun to work on the Easter show which will open March 22. Jenzano said the new show, entitled "Easter—The Awakening," will require about 3,000 man hours in preparation, and expenditures for special equipment and devices will run into thousands of dollars.

Much of the space behind the steel dome will be utilized for scenes in the Easter show. There are two rooms behind the dome for scenery, but all of the space can be used if necessary. The dome is perforated for accoustical purposes, but can be used for dramatic effects as well, when lighted from behind. In the Easter show, about half of the space will be used.

"The programs that are presented in the Planetarium vary in nature over a several year period to accomodate people of every age group and in all walks of life," Jenzano said.

So far there have been 588,000 paid admissions to the planetarium since its opening, which averages out to about 80,000 persons a year. About 35 percent of these are elementary school children, with an additional 20 percent of them being high school students.

People come from all over the eastern part of the country to see the Planetarium. It is one of the attractions on bus tours of the eastern part of the United States.

The Polls Committee is an agency of the Activities Board which is available to any group or organization on campus. It will take a student poll on any question of national, state or campus significance. The number of polls which the Committee takes averages about one per month. One of its most recent polls was taken for the department of radio and television and motion pictures on the use of WUNC-TV. The Committee is planning on two more to be taken in the near future.

Allotment

GMAB is given its own allotment by the Board of Directors of Graham Memorial. The allotment is approximately $5,000 for the events of the entire year. All of the financial work of the Activities Board is handled by its treasurer.

The GMAB officers and committee chairmen will will soon be chosen for 1955-56. According to Forester, no job on the Board requires previous experience. The only requirements are time and interest.

Forester says that the Board is "looking for people who have new ideas and who have been on the outside and can see changes and improvements that need to be made."

Applications for any position on the Board are now obtainable in the information booth of Graham Memorial. From March 1 to the 15th interviews will be held for applicants. The interviews will be conducted by Forester, David Reid, Jim Wallace and Jim McIntyre, assistant director of Graham Memorial. During the interviews the applicants will be talked with about their interests and their plans for GMAB.

By March 15 the Board wants to have all the new committee chairmen working with the old ones in order to get acquainted with the Board and become familiar with the work. They are to take over their positions by April 1.

The final function of the 1954-55 Activities Board will be the annual banquet at the Carolina Inn for the entire Board. At that time the outgoing officers and committee chairmen will be recognized and the new ones introduced.

BAD WEATHER:

No Airplane; No Ridgway; Plenty Brass

The Raleigh-Durham Airport was covered with military and University dignitaries yesterday afternoon—the only person who was missing was the man who was to have been the guest of honor.

Due to inclement weather, the plane which was bringing General Matthew B. Ridgway here to speak last night was forced to turn back to Washington. According to an aide to the General, the plane, which was due to arrive here at 3:39 p.m., arrived back in Washington about 5 p.m.

Among those waiting at the airport to welcome General Ridgway were General Farrell, commanding general of the 82nd Airborne Division; Colonel Settle, chief of staff of the North Carolina Military District; Roy Holstein, director of Student Activities, and Charles Shaffer, assistant to the Chancellor.

Joel Fleishman, Jim Turner and Bob Young were there to welcome the General on behalf of the Carolina Forum which was sponsoring his speech.

Bob Young, vice-president of the Forum, said that the speech would "probably not" be rescheduled.

A series of studies on "The Life and Teachings of Jesus" will start Monday night in the Hut of the Congregational Christian Church.

Slingshots Darts And Blunderbusses

RALEIGH, Feb. 24—(AP)—Sen. John Kerr Jr. of Warren told the upper House of the General Assembly today that North Carolina hunters should be allowed to stalk game with blowguns, slingshots and blunderbusses.

Kerr proposed to add that list of weapons to a bill providing for legalized hunting with boks and arrows. The measure, introduced by Rep. George R. Uzzell of Rowan, had already been passed by the House.

Seagulls Mess With C.P.&L.

MOREHEAD CITY, Feb. 24—(AP)—They've found out what's been causing the lights here to flicker momentarily twice a day for several weeks. It was all the fault of hungry seagulls.

Carolina Power and Light Co. workers had been looking for the cause of the flickering for three weeks. They even dispatched an airplane to patrol the lines.

Then came a clue—a report that seagulls were either being shot or electrocuted at the city dump. CP&L Manager George Stovall, an old hand at fishing, immediately figured it out. With fishing boats idle because of cold weather there were no fish scraps for the gulls. They flocked to the city dump. There were so many the overlapping wings short-circuited the 33,000-volt lines serving the city. It happened twice daily because city trucks dumped garbage there twice daily.

A visit to the dump confirmed the diagnosis. Dead seagulls were under the power lines. The remedy was simple. The lines were spread farther apart.

GMAB Starts Talent Board For Students

A new project is soon to be sponsored by the Graham Memorial Activities Board.

The Dance Committee of GMAB is going to establish a talent bureau which will be at the disposal of people who are interested in performing and any organization that is looking for entertainers.

The first step in setting up the bureau will be tryouts which will be held on March 7 in the Rendezvous Room from 4 until 5 p.m. and from 8 until 9 p.m. Anyone who does any type of entertaining or performing is urged to come to the tryouts, according to Gordon Forester, president of GMAB. The purpose of the tryouts will be to judge the ability of performers so that they may be rated by the bureau.

After these tryouts, a file of all performers and entertainers will be compiled. The file will contain the name, type of entertainment, address and fee of each person listed.

The file, which will be kept in the GMAB office, will be at the disposal of any campus or other organization or any group desiring entertainment for any occasion.

"We think it will offer a good service to people on the campus as well as other people off the campus," said Forester.

Use of the talent bureau will be free of charge to everyone.

Water Means A Lot, Says Senator Medford

"Our future—industrially, agriculturally, our whole state life economically—depends upon the proper use of our water," State Senator William Medford, Waynesville, said here this wek.

In planning our state's life in education for the conservation of our natural resources, he said, "we have almost completely ignored water and its importance in the development of our state. The fact that water is our most valuable, most vital, natural resource has only recently been recognized in North Carolina."

Senator Medford, chairman of the Conservation and Development Committee, addressed the local chapter of the Delta Sigma Pi, professional and business fraternity, at its regular dinner meeting. Aubrey Burroughs, Reidsville, president of the group, presided.

Discussing the intense drive in North Carolina to bring industry into North Carolina, Senator Medford cited examples of water usage in which he said, "It takes 67,000 gallons of water to produce one ton of coal burned in a steam generator plant; 90,200 for a pound of rayon, and 240 gallons for every pound of meat packed."

He also discussed water shortage caused by drought and the effects of irrigation upon the state's water supply.

"In recent years areas have reported a drop in the water table—that is, the drop in the amount of water stored under the ground," he said. "This is serious, when we consider that 2,800,000 people of North Carolina depend upon groundwater for their water supply."

The Senator presented the context of the recently submitted Water Code which is now a bill pending before the Legislature. The committee's studying the water problem set up in the Water Code "rights in the use of water, an orderly procedure for apportionment—for the acquisition of vested rights, and creates a Water Commission and gives it broad powers to plan for the use of water for the state."

North Carolina has tackled the problem, Senator Medford said, and has recognized the necessity for a planned water use. "We hope it is not too late to get an effective plan in operation."

Tri Delta Grant

The 1955 Tri Delta scholarship competition will begin next Monday, according to Miss Carol DuPler, president of the sorority.

Application blanks may be obtained from the Dean of Women's office. All women students of UNC are eligible, and the deadline for application is March 23.

Scholarships amounting to $300 will be given.

Judges of the applications will be Miss Katherine Carmichael, Dean of Women; Dean E. L. Mackie; Mrs. W. O. West, alumnae advisor; Miss Carol DuPler, and Miss Joanne Christian, service projects chairman.

Brecht Is New Prof Club Chief

Prof. E. A. Brecht, Dean of the School of Pharmacy, was elected president of the University Faculty Club at its regular meeting here this week. Dean Brecht succeeds Dean Arthur Fink of the School of Social Work.

Other new officers are Everett W. Hall of the Philosophy Department, vice-president; Miss Katherine Carmichael, dean of women, secretary, and Alexander Heard of the Political Science Department, treasurer. Elected to the board of directors was Earl Slocum of the Music Department. Holdover members of the board include J. M. Saunders, Alumni Secretary; Clifford Lyons of the English Department, and Arthur Fink, retiring president.

Dr. George Ham, head of the Department of Psychiatry of the University's School of Medicine, was the speaker for the day. He was introduced by President Fink.

Explaining to the faculty members the role of psychiatry in contemporary society, Dr. Ham traced significant developments in that science since Freud and discussed its relationship to psychology, sociology and biology. "The discovery of the dynamic subconscious," he said, "has changed the concept of man's behavior as much as the discoveries of Darwin and Copernicus changed other concepts.

Effective Desegregation Requires Governmental Support, Says Reid

A desegregation program undertaken by public schools is most effective when it has the open approval and support of all arms of the government of which it is a part, a nationally-known sociologist said last night in an address here.

Prof. Ira Reid, head of the Sociology Department at Haverford College in Pennsylvania, spoke at a public dinner session held at the Episcopal Parish House, on "Implementing the Supreme Court Decision."

While visiting the UNC campus Wednesday and Thursday, sponsored by the YMCA-YWCA Human Relations Committee, Dr. Reid addressed a number of University classes and groups, including a faculty luncheon Thursday on "The Professor's Responsibility in Socially Changing Situations."

In his discussion last night, he said that "effective implementation of the decision will be determined, in part, by the ways in which a balance of interests, groups, persons and institutions is maintained."

The "good" community, he said, is one that effectively maintains and, when necessary, shifts this balance. Adequate citizenship education prepares the community to "meet new social inventions, such as desegregation, and to recognize differences without using them as tools for divisiveness," he continued.

"The community that locates, identifies and discourages patterned evasions of the implementation program will find it easier to effect community acceptance than will the community that seeks to ignore or that refuses to expose these practices," Dr. Reid said.

In his address to faculty members, Dr. Reid termed teaching "a privileged profession, the only major one swathed in a wrap of 'freedom,'—academic freedom."

He enumerated three freedoms of the profession: "The freedom to learn, the freedom to teach and the freedom to test ideas, principles and programs through scientific procedures in the market places of theories and actions."

Interrelationships of these freedoms are maintained by the professor "through the privilege he possesses of communication with his students, much as that of physician and patient, minister and confessor," Dr. Reid asserted.

"Beyond the professional responsibilities," he added, "the professor must be a man of integrity and a creative citizen. In this area, I fear, our profession as a whole has received its faintest praise."

Student Legislature Votes Down Proposal For Village Voting

Simultaneous Election Wanted By UP Brass

By NEIL BASS

The student Legislature last night voted against the wishes of four University Party leaders to have the elections in Victory Village carried on simultaneously with the campus elections. The Victory Village Board of Directors had asked the solons to take such action.

There was mild discussion concerning the matter until Beverly Webb, former floor leader of the UP, rose to his feet to call it the "most insidious bill ever to appear before the Legislature." Previous to Webb's statement, Dan Wallace told the Legislators that he hoped that they would vote on the measure "nonpartisanly."

Webb asserted that if the Villagers didn't have enough "interest of their own, then they should not depend on the student government to get the vote out." He went on to say that spending money to carry out an election in the Village was spending student government funds "unrightfully."

David Reid (SP) defended the motives of the measure by saying that the Village was "as much a part of student government" as the dormitories or the fraternities" and thus were entitled to student government benefits.

The final tabulation showed that four UP's were against the side of opinion of the whole body. These were Jack Stevens, UP floor leader, Beverly Webb, Jim Exum and Luanne Thornton.

The primary objection that the UP had to the bill was an amendment which allowed the students' wives in the Village to vote for the veteran's settlement board of directors.

The second bill on the docket of the body was one which "clarified" the Elections Law. It was passed by the solons after a good bit of discussion about the desired scholastic standards for a student before he could participate in extra curricular activities. The big change was that now a student must maintain a "C" average for his entire period of residence instead of the former requirment of keeping the average just the semester before the student becomes a candidate.

Church–JC ABC Battle Shaping Up

By EBBA FRUEND

The latest development in the controversy over the recent Chapel Hill PTA resolution calling for a liquor referendum is a meeting of the Chapel Hill Ministerial Association to determine that group's stand on the issue.

Several churches have come out opposing the call for a vote. The Rev. Henry Morgan sent a letter to County Commissioner Edwin Lanier stating that the Mt. Carmel Baptist Church had voted to present a petition opposing the vote to the board.

The Rev. Charles Hubbard of the University Methodist Church also spoke against the proposal. The idea, he said, was "immoral" and "un-Christian."

Meanwhile another minister, the Rev. Charles Jones, said he would not oppose the establishment of ABS stores in Chapel Hill on a trial basis. He suggested two years as a suitable time span to study the results.

The Jaycees in a resolution passed last Thursday night, unanimously supported the PTA's call for a vote but did not take a position concerning ABC stores in Chapel Hill. Included in the resolution was a call to other civic groups to do likewise.

LANIER AGAINST

County Commissioner Edwin Lanier, the only member of the board to take a stand, came out against the motion. Declaring that the question was basically a moral one, Lanier defended his position by pointing to the high cost of law enforcement necessitated by liquor law violations. Clarifying his stand, he said that he will urge the Commissioners to refuse the call for an election.

If the Commissioners fail to call for a referendum, a petition signed by 15 per cent of the voters in the last gubernatorial election will make the referendum mandatory.

PTA President J. L. Godfrey said the question involved was "whether the county is to get any revenue." The PTA called on the Commissioners for a vote because of the need for money for local schools.

Committee Approves Sex Bill

RALEIGH, Feb. 24 —(AP)— The Senate today received a watered down water bill and sped a judicial redistricting measure on its way to the House by a one-sided voice vote.

A House Judiciary Committee, meanwhile, gave its approval to a bill allowing up to 10 years in prison for sex deviates convicted of molesting children.

A Senate and House committee heard a warning from a former House speaker against passing in its present form a bill to completely rewrite the state's corporation laws.

W. Frank Taylor of Goldsboro told the Senate Judiciary and the House Corporation Committee that the proposed corporation law represents "too much of a get tough policy."

"If this law is enacted in its present form," he added, "without more amendments than this Legislature will have time to consider it is just a notice to hang on the state line to persuade new corporations not to come into the state."

Sens. C. Settle Bunn of Nash and Arthur Kirkman of Guilford introduced the watered down bill. Bunn said the purpose of the measure was to educate the people on the need for water conservation and to provide for emergency actions in the case of water shortages.

The Bunn-Kirkman bill is much less drastic than a measure, proposed by a gubernatorial water study committee, which was introduced about 10 days ago. The water committee's bill would create a board of water commissioners with far-reaching powers to allocate the state's water resources for "beneficial purposes."

The Bunn-Kirkman bill also would set up a board of water commissoiners, composed of seven persons appointed by the governor. The board would be charged with the duty of carrying out "programs of research and education to the end that the people" of the state "shall be informed concerning matters having to do with the conservation of water resources . . ."

In cases of water shortage the bill would give the governor power to proclaim an emergency at the request of local authorities. The board would then have the power to adopt regulations allocating water in accordance with a strict priority schedule.

Gray, Others Generally Approve Education Bill

RALEIGH, Feb. 24 —(AP)— Although they found flaws in a bill creating a state board of higher education, heads of state-supported institutions of higher learning generally expressed agreement with the idea Wednesday.

Their criticisms were unfolded during a hearing on the bill by the Joint Education Committee.

As the hearing got under way, Gov. Hodges presented what he called "amazing and appalling statistics" showing that the state is not "getting what it is paying for in higher education."

He stated that in 1950-52, North Carolina was 10th among the states in the percentage of personal income devoted to higher education, that between 1947-53 it spent 72 million for permanent improvements at its colleges — third among the states — yet in 1950 "it ranked 47th among the 48 states as to the proportion of its population in college."

The Governor said that an increasing percentage of college students is entering state supported institutions. He added that in the next 15 years college enrollments would double.

"We must stop unnecessary duplication of effort," at the state institutions, he declared. "We must get our money's worth and plan for the future in a coordinated way."

The Governor took his figures from a report of a Commission on Higher Education which recommended the creation of the higher education board. "With this recommendation, I strongly agree," he declared. "I am talking about the basic plan. There may be detailed changes you wish to make."

The proposed board would coordinate the functions and fin-

Profs' Meeting

The UNC unit of the American Association of University Professors will hold a meeting Monday night at 7:30 in the faculty lounge of the Morehead Planetarium.

A panel discussion will be held on the report of the commission of higher education, and Leonard S. Powers, executive secretary of the commission, will be guest for the meeting.

The meeting will be open to all faculty members.

Paradox

A paradigm of our present-day soft living: the paragon of paratroopers, paramount on the military paramo—paralyzed yesterday, a mere parasang from Raleigh-Durham Airport. Why'nt he jump?

'Domination' Or Representation?

It doesn't surprise us that the presidents of Appalachian and East Carolina Colleges, representing their own rather obvious interests, object to the membership arrangement of the proposed North Carolina Board of Higher Education.

President B. B. Dougherty of Appalachian calls the projected group, of whose nine members six could be graduates of the Greater University, a "super-boardl."

Both he and Dr. J. D. Messick, president of East Carolina, have expressed fears that the Consolidated University will "dominate" the proceedings of the new board—since its representatives could conceivably be in the majority.

But we would like to ask, why shouldn't the Greater University, which must attend to the interests of three large branches and of some 13,000 students, get heavier representation than the smaller institutions? That is not "domination;" it is proportional representation.

The group which drew up the plan for the proposed Board of Higher Education, working under the chairmanship of Trustee Victor Bryant of Durham, had in mind the need to preserve the legitimate functions of state schools.

The true function of East Carolina College is not that of the University at Chapel Hill; until our eastern contemporary began to swell a few years ago, it was known as East Carolina Teacher's College.

There has been talk of graduate programs at the Eastern college which would overlap programs already working in Chapel Hill and Raleigh. Clearly, that would result in a diffusion of funds and effectiveness which could seriously damage higher education in North Carolina. Thus it would be the duty of the proposed board to make sure that no costly overlapping of functions, resulting in unnecessary double expenditures, comes into being.

"What will be the relationships between the board and the existing boards of trustee?" President Gray has asked, raising another question. It is a wise question; but as long as the duties of the new board are clearly outlined before its power becomes effective, no destruction of the autonomy of the boards of trustees or of the Consolidated University office need result.

Again we stress that if the principle of proportional representation is to be obeyed in the work of the Board of Higher Education, the Consolidated University, by historic right and logic, is entitled to the giant's voice.

"THERE'S NO clear, hard and fast rule about segregation. The main argument against it is that it is outmoded."

That's what Dr. Ira Reid, Negro sociology professor from Haverford College, told Dr. Rupert Vance's class the other morning.

Dr. Reid is head of the Sociology Department at his school in Haverford, Pa., and—like most sociologists—prefers to couch his discussions in scientific terms.

"I'm not speaking on the pros and cons of segregation . . . This is just a problem in group relations that has to be met," Dr. Reid explained.

He termed both segregation and integration as "social inventions." ("Neither is a natural process in group behavior . . . Each of them is a device for the purpose of regulating behavior.")

Dr. Reid reviewed the history of one of the "social inventions" —segregation: "Segregation was an invention, beginning in 1870, for the purpose of isolating groups. It took a long time to get set up and has existed in full effectiveness for fifty years in North Carolina.

"Segregation has not worked completely in the last fifty years. There is the idea that the bugs must be removed from this invention . . . The invention (segregation) is the property of the owner. And apparently, the owners (centers of power, like the Supreme Court) are ready to abandon it."

Dr. Reid only talked a few minutes, then he asked students for questions.

"What is the best way to go about integration?" one student wanted to know.

"There's no one answer to that question," opined Dr. Reid. "I would start off with the hypothesis that integration has been taking place all during our lifetimes . . . I think the easiest thing to integrate is an institution."

"How long do you think integration will take?" another student asked.

"It depends on how dull the people are," answered Dr. Reid, and then the class bell rang.

GRAHAM Memorial's sandwich dispenser is not another enroachment of machine on man, but just an effort to keep the student union from losing its pants on sandwich sales.

Previously, sandwiches sold for 20 and 25 cents, and were dispensed from an ice box on the "honor" system. After losing almost $40 last month, GM decided to mechanize its sandwich selling.

Sandwiches are now only 15 and 20 cents, a nickel cheaper, thanks to the advance of the machine age over students' lack of honor.

'It Fell To Earth I Knew Not Where'

'Some Graduate Mirabile Dictu'

An 'Ironing Out Of Creases'

(The writer of the following letter received her education at Wellesley, Columbia and the London School of Economics and says she is thus untainted by the UNC education referred to yesterday in the letter to the editor from William G. Grimes.—Editor.)

Editor:

The University of North Carolina has reason to be happy because William G. Grimes is, as he says, cautious about letting people know where he received his education. Indeed, one wonders how any human being can graduate from a University without evidencing any appreciable ironing out of creases in his brains and character.

It is well to remember what former President Taft said: "Some persons graduate summa cum laude, and others mirabile dictu."

It is not difficult to place Mr. Grimes in the proper category.

If the University was not this, but the sick old lady Mr. Grimes tries to make her then the enrollment would have dropped. But the enrollment has risen and this can be considered a tribute to the grand lady, old with wisdom, wise with knowledge, and great with truth.

I do not know what category you fit into, Mr. Grimes, but I know one within which you do not fit—American.

How Divisible Is The Nation?

Editor:

Four score and seven years ago our forefathers set forth upon this earth to create a nation indivisible—but after reading Mr. Grimes' letter I realize that this nation is divisible into little hate groups.

It is apparent, Mr. Grimes, that your social, moral, environmental, childhood, teen-age, and college educations have failed. They made you a frothing non-thinker.

Obviously you have not learned what constitutes a democracy. Your conception of a free nation is one which leaves no room for individual thought, no understanding of the many cultures that go toward building this nation into a strong home for the many, not a straw hut for the hates and misunderstandings of the close-minded.

Enclosed in the definition of a democracy is the right to express oneself as one sees fit. It is because of this, Mr. Grimes, that The Daily Tar Heel has printed your letter and it is also because of this that troops or citizens do not come to your door and stamp you and your ideas out.

In your hate-writing, reference is made to the nigger-loving liberals. Looking into the phrase, it can be seen that you do not believe in solving problems; instead you believe in hating them if they are in opposition to you.

The Negro problem in the South is acute, but it must be realized that Negroes are within their rights in trying to gain equal recognition as citizens of this nation so they can act and be thought of as first class citizens and not as a second class inferior race.

You probably think that your words are the right ones. The difference between your supposed truths and the truths of a conservative or a liberal is that they have tried to ferret out the truth, but you never twitched a mental muscle in that direction. The liberals and conservatives may have failed in instances to find what they sought, but the fact that they crawled the alleys of life in trying to find it is all important. This shows that both ways of thinking, acting as checks on each other, are worthwhile as they grapple with life trying to clutch what is best and true.

This University stands for both liberalism and conservatism. It is an arena for expression, an arena for thinkers to find out whether their ideas are strong or weak in view of the truth.

Back To The Heel-Clicking Days

Editor:

To William G. Grimes:

Let us all regress in time to 1939. At this point in history, a group of men were clicking heels in uniform, Heil-Hitlering to a crazed man, and framing lethal plans of devastation of minority groups or "free thought" groups.

Young children were drained of blood for a war effort, living human beings were melted in ovens so that their skin might be used as lamp shades or bars of soap, and anyone who disagreed with the Nazi theories was murdered in cold blood.

It wasn't long before freedom-loving people all over the world promised their countries that they would never stand by and permit the devastation of free lives and free human thought.

Time has a way of erasing the injuries left in its path. But there are still people who realize that these injuries may open up once again. There are several ways for a free people to prevent the reopening of this mass ideology of hate and fear.

First, every person in our country is free to express himself as he wishes, just as you did, but never can a free mind be stifled with "You will cease; that is a fact." Secondly, it is wise to have diversified opinion so that we may take into consideration the good points of any issue and reach a free, mature conclusion.

To quote from your letter, "I graduated last year and actually have had to become cautious about letting people know where I received my education for fear of being looked on as a Red."

Yes, I'm certain you mean this. You, like a few other people, are riddled with fear and are therefore willing to trade your freedom for a false security vested in adictatorial philosophy.

As I have tried to point out, this fear and dictatorial philosophy can very easily lead to hate, murder and the devastation of free lives and free thought.

The thing we have to fear most is fear itself.

Reaction Piece

Segregation Must Go; But Not Too Fast

David Mundy

PART I: Segregation is bad. Segregation is evil. That a race should be considered inherently inferior is foolish. That a person be denied jobs, or other social priviliges because of his race is more than a blot on what we like to regard as a "democratic way of life."

It matters not how the person be denied these privileges, whether by laws or by public opinion, as that of the South which is specifically directed against his obtaining them.

In short, I can consider racial segregation nothing but a moral evil. I have had, and you will probably insert "admittedly," comparatively few contacts with members of the Negro race. Those with whom I am acquainted are teachers and students, plus one or two representatives of the "respectable Negro" class.

Just talking to them, or merely meeting them on the street causes me pain: why should they be considered "inferior?" By almost any standards of intelligence or behavior they are likely better than I. And that injustice is painful.

The Supreme Court decision on segregation in the public schools is of course a just one, both from a moral point of view and from a legal one. And it will eventually have to be obeyed.

★

PART II: What about those who feel differently about the whole matter? They come almost exclusively from areas with large Negro populations, a population which in some areas even outnumbers that of the whites.

Despite what is termed their 'bigoted' point of view, they do have to be taken as something of an authority on the subject. They have the most to lose, or to give, in the ending of segregation.

Their vehement objections to desegregation, while sounding quite asinine, do have a very real basis which must be considered in any attempt at desegregation, no matter how just the attempt may be.

Their point, obscured by their complaints about "those dirty, stupid niggers," is that there are differences between the negroes and whites in many areas of the South.

The student anti - segregation petitioners appear to ignore the existence of the differences which are recognized by most Southerners, white and Negro. I can't quarrel with the intent of the petition, which expresses support of desegregation. Yet I know well that the Supreme Court ruling shouldn't be flatly applied to the South as a whole.

The initial reaction to such an application of what is legally just would be most frightful. The question is really a 'weighing' of the physical violence which would result and the continuation of injustices to a large part of the population.

Presumptuous and offensive as it may seem, the second pathway gives promise of a wiser course. "The meek," says the promise, "shall inherit the earth."

★

Until recently I would have recommended stern measures against those who sought to evade desegregation; but then I met some of them. Despite allegations to the contrary, they aren't low-browed backwoods neanderthal specimens who hate the Negro just because he is a Negro.

They would offer violence to a fusion of the "cultures," which in reality is desegregation. And a reasonable view must recognize that such a fusion would now be undesirable.

Many Southerners have at long last realized the evil of injustices to our Negro second class. It will be impossible to abolish racial antagonisms by court decree, no matter how legal it may be. The antagonisms will be decreased only by more Southerners realizing the injustice of their social system. And such realizations cannot be reached or encouraged by the pro and semi-pro agitators of either side.

Brotherhood is more than making speeches, signing petitions, and passing laws. It is on its way; may the agitators only not retard it.

Asia: The Fix We're In

Joseph Alsop

TAIPEI, Formosa. It is high time for people at home to face the full seriousness of the fix we are in out here in Asia. The leaders of world communism are now conducting an elaborate nerve war on the Formosa issue. It may be the prelude to a decisive showdown. Or it may only be intended to put the courage of the members of the Western Alliance to an acid test.

Either way, the danger to the United States is incalculably great. For the Eisenhower administration's foreign and defense policies have painted the United States into an almost inescapable corner in Asia.

HAG-RIDING PREJUDICES

For two years, Washington has paid no attention to the prejudices that hag ride the Formosa issue in Britain and Western Europe. Only last week, Secretary Dulles' important speech received the usual acknowledgements—jubilation from Sen. Knowland and doleful cries from London.

Even now, no serious effort is being made to form a united front in Asia with our allies. Thus the Communist nerve war has an excellent chance of isolating America on the issue of this controversial island

TREASURY POLICY-MAKING

This would not be so disturbing, if the Eisenhower administration had ever bothered to match its bold talk with an equally bold defense policy. From Korea onwards, there has been a good case for going it alone to halt Communist aggression in Asia. But going it alone costs a lot of money for defense; and our defense policy has been made in the Treasury Department.

The result of simultaneous efforts to please Sen. Knowland and Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey is the fix we are in.

WASHINGTON—Even if he wins again Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon may not be swing man in the next Senate. Nonetheless, his switchover to the Democrats which enables him to control this Senate makes him the Senator Republicans most want to beat in 1956.

Morse is his own best asset in any balance sheet of his chances. The Democrats are coming up in Oregon and the election of Senator Richard Neuberger last fall seems to justify their claim that they are successfully appealing to the younger voters. But by any realistic appraisal, the state is still Republican.

Morse has won twice with slashing campaigns and he is set for another. His formal registration as a Democrat sets him free to criticize the incumbent President, which he has done in the past, in spite of his former Republican label.

MORSE'S GOOD BREAK

Public power will again be an issue in Oregon since President Eisenhower is sticking by his "partnership" policy and Oregon Republicans have signified their agreement with him.

Democrats regard this as a great break for Morse since Neuberger upset the veteran Guy Gordon in a campaign largely based on what the "partnership" policy would do to the state. Morse is hard to outtalk on any subject but on power he is especially eloquent and well-informed.

Senator Neuberger and his wife, Maurine, a state legislator and the best vote-getter of them all, will campaign for Morse. They ought to be

AMY'S POP

. . . whither the '56 campaign?

Oregon is a long way from Washington. Other Senators have found that national reputations are not always reflected in the county courthouses, especially when the party organization is in the hands of rival helpful at the grass roots which they have just combed so intensively for themselves.

Those same grass roots are probably Morse's greatest problem. He has been a Senator 12 years and politicians. Gordon, though backed by a state organization, suffered badly from his long absences from Oregon.

Morse's probable opponent, Gov. Paul Patterson has the inevitable advantages which go with control of the state. He is also a pleasant, folksy character who gets along well with people. While Morse must be on the job here the governor can cultivate his garden. It is a circumstance that has changed Senate seats many times.

HARD-CORE POLITICS

It is rare in U .S. politics for men to shift their party allegiances and still achieve power, particularly when it is rather late in the game as with Morse. How it will affect his chances is a matter of some dispute.

By and large, over the country, party allegiances are less compelling than they were. It is the opinion of most experts that the Republicans have a hard core of about 30 perecent of the people, Democrats a slightly larger one, with 30 or 35 percent of the voters moving from side to side as a particular issue or candidate moves them.

Len Rosenbluth Injured, May Not Play Tonight At Duke

Sprained Wrist, Bruised Hip Against State

McGuire Won't Gamble; Game Slated For 8:30

By BERNIE WEISS

North Carolina's Tar Heels wind up their regular season tonight against Duke in the Blue Devils' Indoor Stadium, but the team may ring down the curtain without the services of Lennie Rosenbluth.

Game time is 8:30 o'clock, and the varsity contest will be preceded by a freshman clash at 6:15 o'clock.

Rosenbluth was injured Tuesday night in Woollen Gym when Carolina dropped a close one to State, 79-75. While he was taking a jump shot, he was hit by Phil DiNardo and another Wolfpacker and knocked to the floor.

He came out of the fracas with a bruised hip and a sprained wrist and spent all day Wednesday in the infirmary. Yesterday he was having trouble walking and missed another practice.

COACH FRANK McGuire was unable to say late yesterday whether or not Rosenbluth, who scored 29 points against State, would be ready for Duke. McGuire, however, was certain that he would not take any chances with his brilliant sophomore forward. "If he isn't ready to play, he won't get in the game. We would like for him to be ready and in good shape for the tournament.

"Right now it looks as if he won't play against Duke, but things may change. If he doesn't start, Paul (Likins) will take his place."

Rosenbluth has been the key figure in nearly all of UNC's wins this season. He has averaged 25.8 points in 19 games with a total of 491.

The game will mean nothing as far as seeding Carolina in the ACC tournament is concerned. The Tar Heels have already been scheduled against Wake Forest at 9:00 in the first round activity.

THE IMPORTANCE of tonight's game is the rivalry issue. Duke and Carolina have each won a single game from the other, Carolina dropping the Blue Devils in the Dixie Classic and the tables being turned here early this month.

Without Rosenbluth tonight there will be much trouble brewing. Duke, a constantly improving club, went over 100 points in defeating Virginia Tuesday. Junior Morgan, a sure starter for the Blue Devils at center tonight, tallied 33 points. Other starters will be Ronnie Mayer and either Herky Lamley or Bob Lakata at forwards and Joe Belmont and Jack Kalbfus at guards. Mayer is the team's leading scorer with 995 points.

The Carolina team will be made up of Bob Young at center, Jerry Vayda and possibly Rosenbluth at forwards, and Al Lifson and Tony Radovich at guards. If Likins starts for Rosenbluth, he will move to center and Young to forward.

Intercollegiates, ACC, Northern Trip Top Slate

Fourteen matches in a row here to open the season, the annual northern trip in competition against Williams, Amherst, Harvard, Yale, Princeton and Virginia, the Atlantic Coast Conference champions and the United States Intercollegiates!

They are some of the highlights of the 1955 North Carolina tennis schedule announced today by Director of Athletics C. P. Erickson.

It's the usual imposing lineup of competition for Coach John Kenfield's tennis team, which last year won 22 matches while losing two and which, year in and year out, is one of the strongest in the nation.

"The schedule builds up all the way to the Nationals which have been awarded to us here at Chapel Hill," said Coach Kenfield. "We are proud that we will be host to that event." The Nationals are scheduled June 20 through June 25.

The Tar Heel team opens the season March 29 here with Michigan State and then will be host to a succession of eastern and midwestern teams before it moves to Wake Forest on April 23 for its first meet away from home.

The schedule:

March 29, Michigan State; 31, Dartmouth.

April 1, Dartmouth; 2, Swarthmore; 4-5, Harvard; 6, Williams; 11-12, Notre Dame; 13, South Carolina; 14, Kalamazoo; 15, Maryland; 16; Presbyterian; 20, Duke; 23, at Wake Forest; 26, Davidson; 29, Miami.

May 2, at Williams; 3, at Amherst; 4, at Harvard; 5, at Yale; 6, at Princeton; 7, at Virgniia; 9, William and Mary; 10, at N. C. State; 12-13-14, Atlantic Coast Conference championships.

June 20-25, U. S. Intercollegiates.

Rain Washes Out Grid Drills; Coaches Eyeing Quarterbacks

A heavy rainfall yesterday afternoon washed out North Carolina spring football practice on Navy Field.

Approximately 65 candidates are doing off-season labor under the watchful eye of a number of coaches, who are being aided by Andy Miketa, star offensive center for the Detroit Lions. Miketa, a former Tar Heel gridder, is a pre-dental student here this semester.

The mentors are giving special scrutiny, however, to a half-dozen quarterback aspirants.

It is no secret that this old bug-a-boo post at Carolina is the one of most concern. If the Tar Heels expect to get back into the winners' circle and make a fair grade on their upcoming murderous schedule, the team must have good quarterbacking.

The six marked men are letterman Leonard (Teedee) Bullock and non-lettermen Doug Farmer, along with rising sophomores Buddy Sasser, Roland Marquette, David Reed and Bill Ellington.

Bullock had to miss the first few days of practice because of an engagament with the Carolina Playmakers, he being a thespian as well as an athlete. It's a combination that looks good on paper, since a quarterback's repertoire includes quite a bit of acting.

Bullock finished the 1954 season as a regular quarterback and turned in some good work. He was especially effective in the smashing 26-14 victory over Virginia. For the season as a whole he had an excellent passing record of 31 completions in 55 attempts, three of his throws going for touchdowns. He suffered five interceptions. He is not a long passer, with most of his payoffs being on the shorter heaves.

Bullock's ball carrying last year was confined mostly to sneaks and he was not outstanding with the "keep" play. For the year he carried 77 times for 110 net yards, a 1.2 average.

Farmer, who had stood out as a freshman, saw only scant service last season. He did complete six passes in nine heaves for 59 yards and one touchdown. He ran only nine times with a minus average.

Sasser was the regular quarterback for the freshmen last season and was most impressive with his ball handling. In the South Carolina game his running was reminiscent of the fancy capers of Charlie Justice. His biggest handicap is his size, for he weighs only 155 and looks fragile. He is an unorthodox passer but is a good marksman.

Marquette is the most impressive looking of the sophs. That is, he has a fine build, 6-2, 190 pounds. He is green but may turn out to be an excellent prospect. Reed's biggest game as a freshman was against Virginia, which he won almost single-handedly with two touchdown passes. Injuries kept him out much of the season, but he has been pronounced in first class shape now.

Ellington is the big High Point boy who played end as a schoolboy, doubled at end and quarterback as a freshman here before he left school and went into the Navy. He played for the Norfolk Naval Air Station in the service, both at end and quarterback.

UNC Fails To Make Life's Cage Display

There were many disappointed faces today on the Carolina campus. The reason: Their Tar Heels didn't make Life Magazine.

The February 28th issue of the publication hit the newstands yesterday and waiting students thumbed to the pictorial essay on the growth of basketball in the south expecting to see a shot or two of the Duke-Carolina game early this month. Life sent a crew of photographers here for the game and took from 100 to 200 pictures. Announcement was made that a few would appear in the February 28th issue.

But none of them were published. Instead, Life devoted a number of pages to N. C. State, Maryland, George Washington and a few other southern teams.

No mention was made of Carolina.

Want Something Different?

Want something a little out of the ordinary? A little off beat? Then be sure to go to the Varsity Theatre Sunday afternoon or nite for a very unusual experience in moviegoing. You will be part of an experiment; part of something that has never been attempted in Chapel Hill before and might never be again, depending on your response to it. Andy Gutierez, the theatre manager, has thought that you may be getting just a little tired of waiting on long lines, of having people crawl all over you trying to get to their seats, of hearing nothing but crunching popcorn for 90 minutes, and even of having to sit so close to the screen to get a seat that you couldn't enjoy the picture. To alleviate the situation, there will be no selling of tickets for a performance once it has started, thus no waiting on line. No one will be allowed into the theatre after the feature starts, no toes stepped on. No popcorn will be sold, hence no annoying crunching. To top it off, the first 100 seats in the theatre will not be sold. This is to add to your enjoyment of the picture.

As you can see, the theatre is going out of its way to assure your comfort. Not much needs to be said about the picture, since it speaks for itself. It is undoubtedly one of the finest pictures to ever come out of England, and no one can surpass an English presentation of Shakespeare.

This special attraction will be for Sunday's showings only, and does not include Mon. and Tues., when the picture will be showing in the usual manner. The features start at 1:00, 3:40, 6:20, and 9:00. There are still ample tickets left for all performances but if you plan to see the 1:00 show, you should purchase your ticket immediately, to avoid any rush on Sunday. Remember, NO TICKETS WILL BE SOLD AFTER THE PERFORMANCE STARTS.

UNC Gymnasts Looking For 4th Straight Win At Duke Saturday

The UNC gymnasts will be trying for their fourth straight victory as they meet Duke in a return engagement tomorrow at 2 o'clock. The meet will be held at Duke.

In the first encounter of these two teams, Carolina handed Duke a 66-29 defeat with Carolina taking every first place. Although optimistic about the outcome, Coach Bill Meade does not believe the score will be so lopsided this time.

The Carolina gymnasts have now compiled a 4-2 record with wins over Georgia Tech, Duke, University of Illinois and the New Jersey Recreation Department. Their two defeats were by Army and Navy.

He figures for the future

It's James Kirchhoff's job to look ahead. As a Plant Engineer with Illinois Bell Telephone Company, he helps estimate telephone equipment needs years in advance.

For example . . . when a new real estate development is in the planning stage, Jim figures how much telephone equipment it will need when it reaches its full growth. His estimate is based on his knowledge of the equipment's potential plus forecasts provided him of the area's rate of development. He then makes a complete report that becomes the basis of plans for the future.

Jim can take a look at his own future, too. In telephone engineering he can see a great many opportunities opening up in the next five years . . . ten years. He can pick the one he wants and start working toward it.

Jim graduated from Northwestern University as an E.E., class of 1952. His progress since then is typical of college men who have chosen telephone careers. If you'd be interested in a similar opportunity, see your Placement Officer for full details. There are also openings with other Bell telephone companies, with Bell Telephone Laboratories, or Western Electric and the Sandia Corporation.

AMENDMENT FAILS, THOUGH:

IDC Approves Revised Bylaws

The Interdormitory Council in a session Wednesday night approved its set of revised bylaws. Primary change in the bylaws was the rewording of an amendment concerning individual dorm officers and the officers of the council itself.

The change regarding members of the council merely removed a technicality stating that the IDC be composed of the "presidents of each men's dorm and a counselor appointed by the University." The revised bylaws now read that the IDC will be composed of the presidents of each men's dorm and an IDC representative from each dorm.

A second change stated that the intramural managers of the dorms and the University Club representatives be appointed by the dorm executive committee. An amendment that called for the election of these officers by the residents of the dorms passed 13-11, but as a two-thirds vote was required to change the bylows, the amendment was killed.

A committee report at the session stated that the council sold, during the recent fittings, 105 blazers. Men's coats, it was reported, will be shipped from the Rawling's Blazer Co., in four or five weeks. The women's coats will be back in nine weeks.

A financial statement given at the meeting said that the IDC spent $2326.73 last semester and has in its treasury this semester $2553.73.

A final report was issued that the election of new IDC officers will be held on March 23.

New TB Drug Discovered

New hope for victims of tuberculosis in North Carolina may be seen in the discovery of a new streptomycin drug — cycloserine, the medical director of the North Carolina Sanatorium System said here yesterday.

Dr. H. Stuart Willis of Chapel Hill, who is also president-elect of the American Trudeau Society, said that "no decisions or conclusions can be made until the drug has been studied for at least six months or a year."

Officials at Gravely Sanatorium said hope to receive a supply of the drug, known by the trade name of "Seromycin," in the near future.

Dr. Derwin Cooper, Durham, has announced that the Veteran's Administration Hospital there expects to obtain the drug soon and carry out studies on its effect.

Preliminary results from the use of cycloserine on tubercular patients were revealed at a meeting of the Veterans' Administration Hospital Directors in Atlanta, Ga., which Dr. Willis attended.

"The drug is under extensive experimental study," Dr. Willis said, "and will be subjected to careful study in both animals and man."

He warned that there is "no justification for any change in the nature of the treatment of tuberculosis because of cyclocerine, and the basic problem in TB control of finding active cases is still with us. The attack on tuberculosis must still go on both from the standpoint of diagnosis and treatment.

"Last year in North Carolina," Dr. Willis reported, "there were about 100 more new cases of active TB reported than in the previous year. Although deaths from TB have greatly diminished, we must keep our guard up to find and treat every patient, in the hope that one day tuberculosis will be eradicated."

—Education Bill—

ancing of the 12 state-supported institutions of higher learning.

GRAY CRITICIZED BILL

Gordon Gray, president of the Consolidated University, gave nine criticisms of the bill, which was introduced by Reps. Oscar Barker and E. K. Powe of Durham, Grace Rodenbough of Stokes, and I. H. O'Hanlon of Cumberland.

Dr. John Messick, president of East Carolina College, who tossed a few barbs at the Consolidated University, also offered suggested improvements after stating "I concur almost 100 per cent with what President Gray said." However, he asserted "If you think this bill will save money by eliminating duplication, you will be disappointed."

Perhaps the strongest statement in the way of opposition came from a letter by Dr. B. B. Dougherty of Appalachian State Teachers College which was read to the committee by Dr. J. D. Rankin of the college.

"It seems to me that we have enough laws and boards to carry out the coordinating work," said Dr. Dougherty. "The University's three branches could have a monopoly under the proposed board of 9 members, no more than two coming from any one institution. This would mean the University could have six members."

Dr. Rankin, in answer to a reporter's question, said "I guess you could say Dr. Dougherty is for the bill in principal."

IMPROVE ACADEMIC SIDE

Dr. Ralph Wellons, president of Pembroke Teachers College suggested "this (proposed) board should have as its special responsibility improving the academic side and leave the financial side to Budget Bureau and the Legislature."

Gray said the proposed board "should have a ringing declaration" of its goal and that should be "to promote and secure for North Carolina the greatest" educational system, on a comparative basis.

He also would: Give the Board specific duties as well as specific powers: Clarify the relationship of the board to the Budget Bureau and the college authorities in obtaining appropriations.

Gray also expressed concern over the possibility of governors' abusing their powers in making appointments to the board as the bill now reads.

Dr. Messick pointed out "the powers of local boards aren't spelled out" which, he said, "could lead to a trend to curtail initiative and effort of local institutions."

Dr. Messick noted the education commission made much note of the great number of French courses offered at ECC. The Commission report contained some "prejudicial slanting," he stated, in that it did not explain "there is only one French teacher at the school."

He said he did not believe in a college's "gaining prestige through masses" and as for duplication of effort, "One per cent of our classes are under 10 students."

At the conclusion of Dr. Messick's remarks, Gray asked for the floor again. "I want to correct the impression left by Dr. Messick. He left the impression," said Gray, "someone had said the University depends on masses for prestige. The University has never claimed that."

Dr. Messick said his statement was based on a paragraph in the Study Commission report.

Victor Bryant of Durham, chairman of the Commission and member of the Executive Committee of the UNC Board of Trustees, said the more "pressing questions" which the study group uncovered were:

Should college physical facilities be increased or more intensive use be made of present facilities? Should new facilities be built at present institutions or at new sites? What should be the status of institutions to each other? Should there be further development of two-year colleges? Should there be increased emphasis on vocational training? What is the proper role of the former teacher college? What effect will the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling have on the white, Negro and Indian colleges? What changes should be made in admissions policies?

ONE UNBEATEN SEASON

In its 44-year basketball history, the University of North Carolina has produced but one undefeated team, in 1924 when Coach Norman Shepherd led his team to 23 victories without a loss.

Bylaws To Be Revised

Student body President Tom Creasy yesterday announced a codification of the student body Constitution. It is the first correct one to be made since 1950, Creasy said.

Creasy said that codification involves "including amendments that have been passed and approved since 1950, and in general, bringng the Constitution up to date. The basic elements of the Constitution have not been changed."

Last semester Creasy appointed Jim Turner to study the old Constitution and propose changes, including the amendments that have been passed since 1950. With the help of Miss Pat McBane, who helped with the technical work involved, the revision was completed.

After the new constitution was put in order, it was turned over to an approving committee composed of Creasy, Rueben Leonard, Don Geiger and Graham Rights.

Creasy said, "I am very happy with the results. It's something we have needed for the past five years. Pat McBane and Jim Turner are to be commended for a fine job."

Visiting Committee Reports Automobiles Are 'Problems'

The Visiting Committee of the UNC Board of Trustees has reported that student-owned cars at Carolina and State College

(1) "Present difficult problems" to the universities;
(2) May have some "effects" on "academic work and general behavior of the students;"
(3) Recommended that the administration "attempt to improve the regulation of the use of cars and that it consider seriously the question of possession of automobiles by undergraduates particularly by those living on or near the campus."

The Board of Trustes will meet Monday at 11 a.m. in the Hall of the House in Raleigh. Each member of the Board has received a copy of the Visiting Committee's report.

The report for the year 1955, lists the topic, "Students' Automobiles," under the general title, "Matters Affecting the Whole University."

Members of the Visiting Committee who compiled the report are Mrs. Ed Anderson, West Jefferson; James Clark, Elizabethtown; R. Floyd Crouse, Sparta; P. B. Ferebee, Andrews;

R. L. Harris, Roxboro; John Larkins, Trenton; Mrs. B. C. Parker, Albemarle; H. L. Riddle Jr., Morganton; William Saunders, Aberdeen; D. L. Ward, New Bern; Hill Yarborough, Louisburg, and Victor Bryant (chairman), Durham.

THE REPORT

The report states that at State College, "44.6 percent of all sudents have registered automobiles with the college authorities; at Chapel Hill, 21.3 percent have registered the possession of cars.

"The officials at Chapel Hill believe that their records of registration are incomplete," the report says.

"When total numbers are considered," according to the report, "the size of the traffic and parking problem becomes apparent immediately. There are 1,932 student-owned automobiles at Raleigh; 1,492 at Chapel Hill.

"More important, of course, is the question of the effects of automobiles on the academic work and general behavior of the students. This influence may be especially critical with respect to underclassmen. At Chapel Hill, 17.3 percent of all freshmen and sophomores have automobiles. At State College, 42.8 percent of the freshmen and sophomores have automobiles," the report states.

Further, "A hard and fast prohibition of automobiles is unlikely to be effective. Aquitable enforcement would be almost impossible. Nor does it seem reasonable to deny some married students and graduate and professional students the right to have automobiles. In addition many students of all classes use their cars in commuting.

"The Visiting Committee does recommend, however, that the administration attempt to improve the regulation of the use of cars & that it consider seriously the question of possession of automobiles by undergraduates, particularly by those living on or near the campus."

ESSENTIAL DETAILS

The report listed "essential details of the registration of students' automobiles" at Chapel Hill as follows;

Out of 2,615 freshmen and sophomores: 466 cars.

Out of 1,587 graduate and professional students: 387 cars.

Dorm Shortage Termed 'Acute'

The Visiting Committee of the Board of Trustees said in its annual report that the shortage of dormitory rooms here has "become acute."

At Chapel Hill 2,804 students are occupying rooms meant to accomodate 2,484 by putting three in a room, says the report. Some 200 rooms are needed to meet existing needs, the committee said.

The situation concerning housing for married students is much worse, added the report. There are 1,300 married students here; Victory Village has 352 units. "Chapel Hill simply is not equipped to accomodate the remainder satisfactorily," says the report.

The report continues, "The married student and his wife are making a great effort to obtain an education . . . The state in turn should help them, if possible, by providing adequate, low-rent housing."

Misusing Authority Charged Official

D. M. Horner, superintendent of maintenance, said "No comment," concerning a report in The Durham Morning Herald yesterday concerning misuse of authority for personal gain. An official said Horner had been charged with using University personnel to build a $25,000 home. The official stated Horner said he had used University people, but only on Saturdays and off hours, and that he had paid them out of his own pocket. Horner said that he had uncancelled checks to prove it.

Business Manager C. E. Teague said that the office of operations would "look into it and . . . find out what the facts are."

The matter was first called to the attention of Chancellor Robert House, who referred it to Teague.

A newspaper reporter came to Teague, saying he had received a letter suggesting that there was mis use of funds. Teague said, "We will be seriously handicapped in the nvestigation unless the people who tell others about these things will tell us as well." He promised protection to those who wodld talk.

Teague said he would check with he personnel manager, the auditing department and other groups before proceeding. He promised a full report of the investigation will be made public.

Arboretum Movement: House On 'Lycidas'

In his discussion of the poem "Lycidas" with Dr. Macon Cheek's class on John Milton yesterday, Chancellor R. B. House covered everything from presenting the poem's theme on a modern basis to the description of some of the poem's lines as "sort of an Arboretum movement here."

Chancellor House's lecture on the poem was by no means his first. The custom of inviting him to discuss and interpret the poem was begun some 20 years ago by Dr. George Taylor.

("Lycidas" is the poem which Milton wrote following the death of his friend Edward King and which was included in a volume commemorating his death.)

In his lecture on the poem the Chancellor said that its author was "one of the greatest intellectual and moral powers" of the world and the "greatest in our own language."

He said the question which the poem treats, that of the meaning of a life which is suddenly cut short by death, 'applies to you more than any other generation." In giving an explanation the Chancellor said that today the problem is "What use is it to do your work and to make a good record in college with the draft breathing down your neck?"

In describing the two lines of Milton's poem which read

"To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Neaera's hair?"

Chancellor House painted a more modern picture of the words by calling the scene a "sort of an Arboretum movement here."

The Chancellor displayed a wide knowledge of Greek mythology by explaining several of Milton's allusions to Greek gods and goddesses.

He described "Lycidas" as "one of the greatest poems of western litrature" in its use of symbolism.

John Larkins To Talk At Phi's Inauguration

A man who holds three top-ranking jobs in North Carolina will speak here Tuesday night.

John Larkins, who holds the offices of Legislative Counsel to the Governor, chairman of the State Legislature's Advisory Budget Commission and state Democratic Chairman, will be guest speaker at the Tuesday night inauguration of Frank Warren Jr. as speaker of the Philanthropic Literary Society.

Larkins, a native of Trenton and graduate of Wake Forest, is a member of the Visiting Committee of the Consolidated University Board of Trustees.

Warren is a junior from Snow Hill. He is sergeant-at-arms of the Student Party. The other officers which will be installed at the inauguration ceremonies are Lawrence Matthews, speaker pro tem; Harold Downing, parlimentarian; John Curtis, critic; Dick Albert, clerk; Hill Johnston, sergeant-at-arms.

A reception will be held following the inauguration in the main lounge of Graham Memorial from 9 until 10 p.m. It will be open to the public.

The Phi, founded in 1795, is one of the two oldest debating societies in the United States, the other being the Dialectic Senate. Hinton James, the first student of the University, was one of the first members. Among past members of the Society who were prominent in their later lives are Charles B. Aycock, past Governor of North Carolina; William Rufus King, one time vice-president of the United States; James J. Pettigrew, the Confederate general who led part of Pickett's charge at Gettysburg, and James Dobbins, U. S. Secretary of the Navy from 1853-57.

According to Warren, the Phi and the Di were instrumental in starting student government on the Carolina campus.

Warren said that the occasion from which the beginnings of student government arose was the expulsion by the Faculty Council of a member of the Phi for drinking The Society appealed for the student's reinstatement, saying that he had promised to stop drinking. The Phi at that time promised the

NEXT WEEK

The Technical Show Boat

By CHAL SCHLEY

In any production there are many people who are never seen by the audience, unless indirectly.

These people have talents, and they are hard workers. In their hands rest the technical sides of the production. Through their efforts, the audience sees dawn, daylight, night, and a variety of geographical settings and time lapses without ever leaving the building and all in a couple of hours.

The wizards behind the play work in four fairly specializedfields.

The products of the stage crew will be the most obvious to the audience. There will be nine scene changes in all.

The settings were designed by Jim Riley, who is officially the head of all phases of technical production, and by Don Treet, who is Riley's assistant.

The precision and techniques employed in building the sets was amazing. Perfectly flat pieces took on depths and curves. Wood turned to cloth under the paint brushes.

Actual construction of the sets was performed in the Playmaker Scene Shop near Caldwell. The parts were then taken to Memorial Hall for assembly. By Monday, this process should be complete.

The Construction Crew, according to the Playmaker Business Office, is composed of Dan Mowery, Walter Creech, Lew Goldstein, chief, Flora Roebuck, and Bill O'Sullivan (alias The Horse, DTH).

The stage crew which will be handling the switching of scenes in the show itself is headed by Larry Braveman with Len Bullock, Bill Casstevens, Mary McGuire, and Christian Moe as stage hands.

Perhaps the next most obvious feature of back-stage work will be the costumes.

Mrs. Irene Rains and company were hard at work yesterday afternoon, as they have been for weeks. Asked how things were coming, Mrs. Rains replied, "We're down to the slow tedious part (frills, braid, designs, etc.); we'll have a good first dress rehearsal, anyhow."

Suzy Kramer, the assistant costume director, was busy in several places at once trying to fit costumes to actors and dancers who arrived every few minutes as scheduled.

Off in one corner of this beehive of activity sat the director of Sound and Fury, Miss Bo Bernardin, stitching gold braid to a black sleeve.

When day changes into night, and vice-versa, on the stage, it's the result of the electricians' work.

Lights for Show Boat have been designed by Harvey Whetstone. "Basically," he said, "we want to create the 'jewel effect' without footlights."

"The jewel effect" which tries to make the people on the stage look like they're glowing is a professional technique based on slanting the lights from all directions at once.

Miss June Eschweiler, assisted by Misses Nancy Henderson and Betty Bostian, will be handling the highly complicated switchboards. Robert Holzberlein and John Ulmer will work the follow-spots from the balcony.

The property department concerns itself with "anything that isn't nailed down," according to Miss Gene Overbeck, Properties Director.

Miss Overbeck is also a chorine and plays Captain Andy's companion in the Trocadero Night Club scene.

She and her staff are responsible primarily for having the right object ready for the right entrance. There are about 150 props, which cover everything from hats to bottles to pier pilings.

The crew also has made many of the props themselves. The crew consists of Jim Heldman, Lloyd Skinner, Miss Louise Fletcher, and Bill O'Sullivan.

Village's Bill Passed At Legislature Meet

By NEIL BASS

The much-argued Victory Village elections bill was passed 23-4 at a drawn-out legislative session Thursday night. The four opposing votes were by University Party leaders.

The gist of the bill was simply that the Villagers requested the University Elections Board to carry out voting procedures for the veteran's settlement Board of Directors at the same time that the residents voted for student government officers.

Student Party legislators were solidly behind the measure and it appeared to be on the rosy road to acceptance until suddenly Beverly Webb, always one of the chief spokesmen of the UP, jumped to his feet, assumed the rostrum and shouted "insidious," referring to the motives of the legislation.

Webb, in so many words, accused Villagers of hanging onto the shirtails of the student body to get out a larger vote of its folk. He said that they "lack interest." All this followed on the heels of a statement by Dan Wallace, a member of the Village Board of Directors, that they merely wanted to have both their elections at the same time to save time.

David Reid (SP) defended the bill, and perhaps it was his speech calling Webb an "attacker" which encouraged several of the indecisive to okay the measure.

30 Feet: 5 Hours

Gentleman walked up to the general delivery window of the local post office yesterday and told potsman on duty this story:

"I came in here this morinng and mailed a letter to myself. I put it in the local slot at 7:30 this morning. Here it is, 12:30 p.m.; and you haven't put the letter in my box yet." The gentleman's mai lbox was about 30 feet form the mail slot.

"I don't know," allowed the postman. "They're supposed to collect the mail from the slot every hour or so.

"This has happened before, and it'll happen again," the postman said.

The gentleman looked at his watch. "That's five hours," he noted. "What we need is to get the Democrats back in office."

"I reckon you're right," the postman agreed.

Please, Mr. Trustee— Spare That Car

According to latest reports, the Visiting Committee of the Board of Trustees plans to make another complaint about the abundance of student cars on campus.

If any restriction is to be made, it would, to deal equitably, have to include members of the student body whose need for cars is vital to their college welfare. Married students, the campus's 1,000 veterans, and town-dwellers who may not live within convenient walking distance of their classrooms, may suffer.

Anyway, the statistics released by the Committee don't seem to provide real grounds for complaint. The figures show that only 17 percent of freshmen and sophomores and 23 percent of juniors and seniors keep cars with them in Chapel Hill.

In a university community the size of Chapel Hill those figures seem reasonable enough to us.

All Puffed Out

The doors of the Morehead Building flew open and one of those bands of bobbing heads, nervous feet, and tireless voices—the North Carolina school children to whom the University plays host on weekdays—passed through.

The shepherding teacher passed along the ranks, pushing stragglers into line.

"Is that Roman architecture?" asked one wide-eyed youngster, basking in the pleasure of learning acquired in sixth-grade ancient history.

We didn't catch the teacher's answer to that scholarly question. Just then South Building's bell clanged over the sound of her voice, and our attention moved to the wearied students who trudged out of Alumni Building. A spokesman for the group rubbed his eyes and asked:

"When the crossword puzzles are finished, what do you do in these classes?"

Apparently, academic steam, like youth, is a stuff that will not endure.

Emilygration

The Haverford College sociologist, Dr. Ira Reid, speaking on the problems of implementing the Supreme Court Decision on segregation, struck a vibrant and troublesome string when he spoke of "patterned evasions."

"Patterned evasions" are not limited to proposals to abolish the public school systems, to attempts to fight integration by elaborate paper work—all the typical byways being invented in quarters openly hostile to the Decision.

There is another, deeper and deadlier "patterned evasion." And Dr. Reid touched briefly on that evasion when he mentioned those who make their tolerance of minority rights a matter of etiquette or "democracy." For them, as the sociologist said, racial justice becomes a matter of shaking hands gracefully; or of sitting beside a member of a minority race in a classroom because Emily Post would perhaps approve.

From Dr. Reid's remarks, we can gain this: Compliance with moral obligations may become as false, as perfunctory, as doctrinaire, as defiance.

The picture of racial justice we lay before the peoples outside our own boundaries will stand on weak legs if our actions are but doughfaces for attitudes which remain unchanged.

Prejudice, diluted and concealed by a thousand pages of Emily Post, covered by procedures followed only because they are "noble" or "democratic," is still prejudice.

Student Cars A Lost Ad & Lazy Friday

Louis Kraar

WHEN THE University's bosses—the Board of Trustees—meet this Monday, they'll hear a firm statement on the "difficult problems" caused by student cars.

The Visiting Committee will tell the board that the influence of autos "may be especially critical with respect to underclassmen." At the same time, the Trustees will be told that "a hard and fast prohibition of automobiles is unlikely to be effective."

Thus, it's unlikely that the Trustees will take any action against student cars other than telling the local Adminisration to look into the matter.

However, this reporter sees the mention of student cars in the Visiting Committee's report much in the light of a hint. Saturday classes were mentioned for several years in the reports of this same committee—then, all at once, they were passed.

★

WHEN THE Trustee visitors came to campus, they met with President Tom Creasy and other student officers.

Monday the Visiting Committee will report that Creasy and the other officers "indicated that in general the spirit on the campus was good and their own representations illustrated wholesome relations among the students and between students and teachers."

THE LOST AD in the paper this week that read: "Lost, black scarf with white trim, near the library. Not worth much to you but of great sentimental value to me," I was intrigued.

The ad was placed by our own Advertising Manager Dick Sirkin (who apparently believes in his own product). "My girl at home knitted the scarf for my birthday. I figured if she saw me on a cold day without it, she'd wonder. But I've found it now,' explained Dick.

★

IT WAS JUST an ordinary lazy Friday afternoon when I heard the hacking sound of the local fire alarm.

Charles' Dunn, of the Chapel Hill Weekly, and I headed toward the sound of the fire engines, and soon we were standing in front of a wooden shack in Carrboro that was already burned almost to the ground.

Faint outlines of a bed and tables stood out behind the flames as the tiny shack burned closer to the ground. I asked someone near me whose house it was, and he said it belonged to the Arthur Smiths, a Negro family.

I had walked up a hill away from the heart of the fire. A police car slid up silently, and a trembling Negro woman stepped out. She took one long look at the burning house and broke into loud sobs. Everything she owned, I though, was burning before her eyes. She cried and cried.

An elderly Negress with white hair put a comforting arm about the sobbing woman. "It could have been worse Lucile. I told you about going away and leaving the children here. At least, they got out okay," the elderly woman said.

Lucille stopped crying and walked slowly down the big hill toward what was left of her home. Soon her husband arrived. He's a cook at the Monogram Club, and they called him from work.

The husband took a long look at the house, too, then walked with his head down to join his wife.

I've had a hard time this week getting the look on their faces out of my mind, and maybe that's a good thing.

SOUNDS

Clayton Jams On BG Tunes

Tom Spain

John Hammond and George Avakian, Columbia's entrepreneurs of better jazz, have seen to it that another of the memorable Buck Clayton jam sessions have been released. The first two, HOW HIGH THE FI, and THE HUCKLE-BUCK AND ROBBINS' NEST, met with great success during the past year, not without reason. An honest jam session, caught on record, is bound to be of interest to any jazz enthusiast, especially when the jamming is done by Clayton and his worthy all-star line-up.

The footloose recording sessions, in which the promoters gave the groups plenty of time and miles of tape, have an easy air about them, most conducive to what might be termed, expressive relaxation. The veteran musicians were told to do as they pleased, and apparently, they did. The results of the first two releases were sheer delight, and now the new album, BUCK CLAYTON JAMS BENNY GOODMAN FAVORITES, shows a similar quality, lacking only in the unique wonder which was drawn by the first two.

DUE CREDIT

Hammond and Avakian deserve due credit for proving that the best jazz is the natural kind, that is wihout any regulations whatsoever. The Clayton groups had no time limits, no arrangements, and, in effect, no leader. Because of this, the recordings run as long as 25 minutes, giving the musicians time to warm up as well as to have their complete say. The lovers and promoters of jazz have for many years dreames of catching jam sessions on recording machines, but the thought never occurred to them that they can set one up quite easily. This done, Hammond and Avakian have given us not only some of Buck Clayton's best, but a three-hour collection of some of the most rousing and expressive solo interpretations, riffs, and rhythms.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS features the same group as did the former albums, and in fact was recorded at about the same time. That all-Basie rhythm section of Jo Jones, Walter Page, Freddie Green and Sir Charles Thompson, has a name almost reverent on the jazz world. The others are equally notable: Trumpets—Clayton, and Basie's Joe Newman, a versatile-plus figure who found a more than warm reception here in Chapel Hill; Trombones — Henderson Chambers and the highly-thought-of Urbie Green; Reeds —Lem Davis, Julian Dash, and on baritone, Charlie Fowlkes, who also wowed 'em in Chapel Hill. All these musicians are qualified veterans, and many are graduates of the Count Basie band.

It is with the Basie influence that Sir Charles Thompson opens CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS, and his short and subtle piano introduction sets a swing mood that is quickly picked up by the entire ensemble. Rhythm, key and mood established, the group tosses the melody back and forth with its leader, who then turns it over to Newman, who takes two swinging solos in front of a mild riff. Newman's trumpet work is clear and sure, working in and out of the riff, with a coy touch, generally characteristic of Clayton.

SO IT GOES

And so it goes for twenty five minutes. CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS, of course, is an early Goodman classic, noted for its easy swing. Written by Chu Berry and first featured by the Fletcher Henderson band, the tune is a natural for the Clayton group because of its varying melody, which leaves ample room for open interpretations.

On side two, recorded some months after side one, there are some changes in the line-up. Billy Kyle, Trummy Young, Coleman Hawkins and Milt Hinton sit in for the second and third numbers, DON'T BE THAT WAY, and UNDECIDED.

Kyle's light and airy piano work presents a notable contrast to Thompson's Basie style of the first side, adding a stepped up quality to the easy swing of the two Goodman standards. Hawkins' tenor sax solos bring back the days of the dogging sax and the big swing bands. Though DON'T BE THAT WAY opens just as Goodman would have wished, the group loses no time in turning the old favorite into a first class after-hours session.

HOT GOODMAN

The new album is not an attempt to bring back the Goodman days of the thirties, but simply a new and different treatment of three of Goodman's favorite and most popular numbers. There is not one touch of the former renditions, save the quick introduction to DON'T BE THAT WAY, and the group does not even possess a clarinetist. The Clayton group differs from Goodman's bands in every conceivable way. It is not a highly organized swing band, but rather a group of superb soloists which maintains the talent of ensemble musicianship. They do not present the interpretations of one arranger. Each man, however, is allowed to offer his own interpretation —several times if possible. In effect, each is an artist, and these jam sessions present the talent of each, all being outstanding.

The Buck Clayton jam sessions have come about as close to real jazz, in the exact sense, as anything since the days of Jimmy Noone. Individuals and even small groups have approached pure and creative improvisation, rightfully deserving the credits for honestly making jazz, but the Clayton group of authentic all stars is the only large group to reach that goal in this decade. BUCK CLAYTON JAMS BENNY GOODMAN FAVORITES deserves the attention of all who appreciate any kind of jazz. It's perfectly enjoyable no matter how it's classified.

ALRIGHT OR ALL RIGHT?

Merriam-Webster lists 'in so far' as three words and then explains that it can "properly" be written either way. (Some authorities also object to the use of 'in' in the phrase 'in so far as,' stating that the phrase should be 'so far as.')'

The analogy between 'already and 'all right' is a more common illustration of the same problem; confusion caused by similiarity Here again Fowler says there is no such form as 'alright,' and Merriam-Webster lists 'alright as a "form commonly found but not recognized by authorities as in good use."

There is, however, reason to believe that 'alright' will someday be considered acceptable. If 'already' and 'altogether,' why not 'alright?'

The similarity that causes what we today label an error may someday be described by linguists as a change (from 'all righ' to 'alright)' by analogy with 'already.' A similar confusion results in the use of 'meantime' and 'meanwhile.' Because the phrase 'in the meantime' is standard and probably more idiomatic than the single word 'meantime,' some people are led to use the unidiomatic 'in the meanwhile.' 'Meanwhile' is, of course, the preferred form.

Word Study

YOU Said It

More Power To 'Liberal Views'

Editor:

This is in reference to the letter written by Mr. William C. Grimes which appeared in The Daily Tar Heel on February 24. Dear Mr. Grimes:

After reading your letter of February 24th to The Daily Tar Heel, we felt compelled to answer it. At first we became angry. Later, our anger turned to pity, disgust and embarrassment.

We were angry because we could not see how an educated human being could believe and write such tripe. Did you honestly believe what you wrote, Mr. Grimes, or did you just want to see your name in print.

We pity you, Mr. Grimes, if you are unable to express yourself without using the word "nigger." In your mind, does a person automatically become a Red if he expresses liberal views.

We were disgusted with you, Mr. Grimes, for such narrow minded thinking on your part. What courses did you take while you were attending the University? Narrow Mindedness 22 and White Supremacy 53? Did you take a course in Religion in which you are supposed to learn to live with your fellow mankind? How about Political Science? Were you not taugh that all men are created equal under the Constitution of the United States?

Finally, Mr. Grimes, we were ashamed and embarrassed to learn that you hold a degree from the same university that we are attending. As for your suggestion "to go North young man" we might decide to follow your advice. We would go anywhere to escape such narrow minded thinking as you exhibit.

Mr. Grimes, if you happen to take your own advice and go North, please don't associate your views with those of the University. If people ask you where you received your education, just tell them that you never attended college. It would be much easier for them to believe this and it might save us some embarrassment in the future. It is you, with your narrow mindedness that is becoming a ball and chain around the neck of the University.

More power to Kuralt, Kraar, Levin, Fleishman for their "liberal views." What this University needs is more people like them and fewer people like you.

Student's Wife Sends Suggestion On Vacation

Editor:

As a wife of a student I am writing about vacations and their rather poor timing. When I was in college in another state, vacations started on a Wednesday or Thursday and ended on a day in the middle of the week to prevent students from traveling over a weekend when traffic is heaviest. This University's vacations almost always necessitate weekend travel.

Easter vacation ends on Monday, but students who live any distance must travel Easter Sunday in order to be here in time for classes on Monday. This is not quite fair when it is realized that the reason students go home is to celebrate Easter, a religious holiday, and then U. N. C. asks students to spend most of the day on a train, or in a bus or car in order to report to classes 8 a.m. on Monday.

I should think moving the vacations forward a day so that the same number of days are allowed, but the last day falls on a Monday instead of Sunday, would allow students to have all of Easter at home. This arrangement would also prevent students from traveling on a weekend, when accidents are most frequent and traffic is heaviest.

Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse see imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others.—Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

I HAD THE HORSE backed into a corner of his stall and I was working him over with a whip. He sort of lazies up when I let him get away with an Oat-Bag Gleanings piece, as I had last time out.

"Blame it on the linotyper," The Horse argued, as he nimbly evaded my worst blows. "Why should I or another guy work hard when youse bandicoots at the printery louse it up?"

Ohhhhhhhh, what Horsie had said. Wham!

"Well, that's what Kuralt blames it on," The Horse dodged successfully. "Zounds, isn't he paying several demon proofreaders to cull errata?"

So, The Horse laid it to mechanical difficulty?

"Naw, I mean bi-ped linotypers, not the machines which they mismanage," The Horse shrugged when I belayed laying the lash in lusty licks. "But it is always nice to provide folk with something to beef about."

Was that good, To provide a beef?

"Better'n horse-meat about it," The Horse put in a plug for more live plugs and less Brisket of Seabiscuit. "Remember what Teddy Roosevelt said when Mrs. R., in the White House, mourned that things had not gone smoothly for some house guests."

What did Teddy say . . . - Delighted . . .?

"Nope," The Horse stated. "Ol' Teddy said, 'My dear Mrs. R., you have been the perfect hostess, you have sent our guests away happy in their ability to criticize something. Nothing gives greater affront than perfection.'"

I thought there was little likelihood of ye printers of the DTH ever affronting with perfection, or even with understandable flaws due to haste or badly concocted copy.

"Take this here now gradooate who wrote what he perhaps hoped would be an earth-shaking document." The Horse pointed with a reasonable hoof. "The one who eheu-ed and alack-a-dayed over how we are all Communists here at The Hill, God bless it."

Ugh! That Grimey-letter writer?

"Well, now, the lad has a right to his ignorance, bad manners and lies," The Horse saw it. "All I ask you to consider is, how horrendous would he not be had he not learned something here at this Seat of Southern Cultoor & Erudition?"

Then The Horse thought this friend of the Clark claque of clucking clackers correct?

"I didn't say that," The Horse reminded me, thus infuriating me by being right. I despise him when he is right! "I said he had a right to his ideas; but why bring the Clarks into this?"

Well, the author of the Grimey letter had!

"Okay, okay, so leave him be responsible for his own guests," The Horse chittered. I hate him when he chitters, too. "I don't drag them in."

No; they were put in by Legislature.

"That shows you," The Horse smiled pleasantly. "The only way they could get connected with this here now—

Seat of Southern Cultoor & Euridition?

"—would be to have a law passed," The Horse stated. "Just toss it off as a tribute to their great and good father, Judge Clark. And leave us not get too grim about Grimes."

The Horse amazed me with his tolerance and gentlemanliness! How cool, how calm, how objective!

"But of course he is a bow-legged, cock-eyed, double-dealing duck-billed wombat when he says we are Reds, or anything approaching thereunto," The Horse double-crossed me. "And he is a liar. I regret the days of duello are past, or I should call the echidna out to give me satisfaction."

What would the weapons be?

"Spittoons, at ten paces," The Horse specified. "Grimey-Boy can't do nuffin' but sputter, and I'd win in a single-foot." He looked me over very carefully and added: "Roger, can't you sorta guess what the deal is with Grimey?"

Venom, hate, fury, rage—

"I mean, why?" The Horse said. "Me, I see it as either: 1) Grimey is trying to borry moola from his friends; 2) Grimey works for them and is bucking for a raise; 3) Grimey is an interested kinsman; 4) Grimey wants in on The Board and is currying favor with his buddies; 5) Grimey and eddycation didn't see eye-to-eye; 6) Grimey maybe is a frustrated Journalist.

But, he claimed to be an alumnus! Maybe he had gone through with Straight-D's?

"I would not," The Horse mused, "tag him with any classification, no matter how lowly, which contained in its adjectives the word 'straight,' no, I would not. His thinking is not straight, and his aims are questionable, to say the least. Perhaps he has a number of frustrations which make him less than a reasonable man. If so, our learning teaches us to look the other way and hope he recovers his mental balance. His language bespeaks an acute trauma of the ego, aggravated by hypertension, and not lessened in any way by reflection. His words mirror his solitude. He is a person who has resigned from the human race, and all I can say is, I am sorry his there is no external relief."

Maybe he liked to see his name in print?

"I think Chollie-Boy Kuralt should not print such missiles as this," The Horse said. "It shames the writer, and it is no feather in our caps to have matriculated and graduated any such ensample of disloyal Tar Heel without doing him some small good."

Grimey had said he was ashamed to admit he had schooled here, did The Horse note?

"His secret," The Horse said mildly, "is safe with us, and we promise not to let it go farther than the linotyper, and God wot, after he gets a-holt of Grimey for Prexy- He is hereby accorded The Grand Double-Cross of the Lowly Order of Wump . . . and God-speed."

"Wump!" seconded Mr. Wump from deep in The Horse's stall.

Duke Tops Tar Heels, 96-74; Mayer Breaks 1,000

Vayda Is Big Scorer; Frosh Lose

By The Associated Press

Led by Joe Belmont's 21 points in the first half, Duke's Blue Devils tuned up for the Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament next week by romping to a one-sided 96-74 triumph over North Carolina in Durham last night before a crowd of 4,500 fans. The win closed the regular season for the Blue Devils and booster their season's mark to 18-6.

The win gave the Blue Devils undisputed possession of second place in the ACC with an 11-3 mark and earned them the right to meet South Carolina in the tourney. Belmont, playing one of the best games of his Duke career, set a torrid pace for the Dukes in the first half as he hit from all angles in amassing his 21 point total. Sitting out a good portion of the second period as Coach Harold Bradley employed his reserves, Belmont ended the game with a total of 32.

The other half of Duke's one-two punch, forward Ronnie Mayer, trailed Belmont with 28 markers. Mayer needed only five points to put him over the 1,000 point mark for his three year Duke career. In reaching the coveted figure, Mayer became the fourth player in Duke cage history to reach the mark.

Carolina jumped into a short-lived lead largely on a field goal and three free throws, but then the fast-breaking Dukes went ahead 8-7 and continued their torrid pace until they had a commanding 19-7 advantage. Carolina went over six minutes in the early stages without a field goal, and by the time they began to hit, the issue was all but settled.

Forward Lennie Rosenbluth, who played until he fouled out with a little over ten minutes remaining, had 12 points at the half and left the game with 16. Jerry Vayda was high scoerr for the Tar heels with 18, followed by Rosenbluth, and then Al Lifson with 14.

Bob Lakata had 13 and Junior Morgan 11 for the Blue Devils.

The loss made Carolina's record 8-6 in the Conference.

The Duke University freshman basketballers won their 12th game of the season at Duke last night with a 76-68 victory over North Carolina's Tar Babies. The win evened play between the two rivals this season, each winning two games.

Bucky Allen sparked the Duke scoring with 23 points, and was followed by Tony Buhowsky, who bucketed 21.

Tankmen Meet State Today

Victorious in six of eight meets this year but still looking for the big win over kingpin N. C. State, the North Carolina tankmen gets that chance this afternoon when it takes on the Wolfpack in Bowman-Gray Pool here.

The Tar Heels dropped a narrow 49-35 victory to the 'Pack at Raleigh earlier in the season, with the meet being decided in the final relay event of the day. The Tar Heel team was hampered by illness of two team members in the first meeting with State, but should be in top form for today's event.

Coach Ralph Casey of North Carolina will probably go with the same line-up he has used in previous meets this season. That line-up has taken wins over Bainbridge, Duke, South Carolina, Virginia, Georgia and Clemson while losing to Michigan and the Wolfpack. The Tar Heels' 4-1 Atlantic Coast Conference record is good enough to qualify them for second place behind the undefeated State club.

Hodges Presides At Games Finals

By RAY LINKER

North Carolina Governor Luther H. Hodges and Mrs. Hodges will be on hand for the Second Atlantic Coast Conference Indoor Games here today and tonight. The governor will bring a small party to view the finals of the day-long track classic, which are slated to begin at 7 o'clock this evening in Woollen Gymnasium.

Over 600 athletes representing more than 50 schools and colleges are on hand to perform in the 34 different events listed for the four divisions of the meet—confernce non-conference, freshman, and scholastic.

Many top-notch performances are expected to come out of the meet, as 14 events listed will have the defending champs from last year's affair in the running for honors again along with a host of new challengers.

THINGS WILL get under way at 9:15 o'clock this morning in the Tin Can with the finals in the scholastic and freshman high jump and the scholastic shot, and the activity will continue throughout the day until the last event is run at 10 o'clock in the evening. However, no events will be run off between 11:15 in the morning and 1:30 in the afternoon and between 4 and 7 o'clock in the evening.

Action in Woollen gym starts with the finals in the non-conference at 10:30 this morning, with trials and semi-finals in the scholastic high hurdles and 60-yard dash also slated for the morning session.

The afternoon card lists the shot put finals in the Tin Can for non-conference, conference, and freshmen entries at 1:30 while simultaneously the conference broad jump finals will commence the activity in the gymnasium.

FINALS WILL be held in the conference and non-conference high jump at 3:10, while all the other afternoon events—mostly dashes and hurdles—will be trials and semi-finals.

Pole vaulters in the two college varsity groups start the evening events at 7:10, and shortly after 10 o'clock the final results of the meet will be known.

The freshman 3-4 mile run at 7:25 will draw a top field, including UNC's Ben Williams, who toured the distance in near record time recently. There has been much speculation concerning the Weil Mile event, to come off shortly before eight o'clock. Carolina's Jim Beatty and Maryland's Alva Grim get top billing along with defending champ Larry Faass of Maryland.

FRANK RUST
. . . Georgia Tech hurdler here today

TAR HEEL two-miler Bobby Barden is one one of four conference runners who have recorded a time seven seconds under the record, making this another good vent to watch. Eyes will be on Joel Shankle of Duke to see if he can equal the record of UNC's Bill Albans of winning five events. He can possibly break some records, also.

Mel Schwarz of Maryland will likely top his record jump in the pole vault, while Duke's Durham Lawshe is trying to better his own record in the shot.

Georgia Tech will bring back Frank Rust, who will be attempting to better his showing of last year —a second place in the low hurdles, and a third in the high hurdles.

BEN ANGLE of the defending non-conference team won the mile and placed third in the 880 last year while Georgia's Kermit Perry was turning in a like performance in the high and low hurdles. Both are back for more fine action. Georgia Tech's Carl Vareen will defend his title (non-conference shot), as will America's No. 1 pole vaulter, Florida's Earl Poucher. Florida's speedy sophomore, Bumper Watson, will be a standout in the dashes.

The team champs in each division from last year will all defend their crown.

HAPPENINGS ON THE HILL:

Pledge Weekends Find Carolina Students Socially Awake

By SUSAN ANDES

Pledge weekends and sorority initiations are the frequent topics of conversation these days around The Hill. Tri Deltas duly initiated their pledges earlier this week by presenting them with their crescent and stars; while the Pi Phi pledges will receive their golden arrow pins from their big sisters during initiation ceremonies today.

The Washington and Duke Hotel in Durham was the scene of much merriment last night as Chi Phi pledges and their dates were presented at a formal dance. Dinner was served them beforehand; and today's events include a shipwreck party.

Newly-elected officers of Chi Phi are: Jack Stevens, Asheville, president; Roger Hubert, Portsmouth, Ohio, vice president; Bill Sanders, Asheboro, secretary, and Bill Warwick, Wilmington, treasurer .

I bet many white sheets and other odd assortments of apparel were used last night for the Roman toga party that the Phi Kaps had at the house. They will be hosts to the Tri Deltas at a party on Tuesday.

Along a more romantic vein several pinnings have taken place recently at the Sigma Nu house. These include John Stallings, Wilson to Sandy Benton, Wilson. Jim Hurley, Seaford, Del., to Walds Lou Reed, Milville, N. J. Then too, Lyman Melvin from Rocky Mount is engaged to Rose Messick, also of Rocky Mount, and Julian Ross of Elizabeth City married to Florence Small of Elizabeth City.

Newly initiated actives of Sigma Nu are Bob Brawley, Mooresville; John Stallings, Wilson; Al Smith, Swansboro; George Watkins, Henderson; Foy Shingleton, Wilson; and Harrell Everett, Williamston. New pledges include Charles Bolton, Rich Square; Abe Walston, Walstonburg: Bill Latham, Bethel· Lambert Hooper, Sylva; and Bill Street, New Bern.

SPEs also recently elected their new officers for the coming year and those now serving an apprenticeship are Bill Brown, Roanoke Rapids, president; Bob Benson, Indian Head, Md., vice president; Charles Johnson, Lenoir, secretary; Charles Daniel, Roanoke Rapids, historian; Jon Dawn, Gastonia, senior marshall; Dennis Pope, Coates, junior marshall; Butch Smith, Raleigh, guide, and Dick Spivey, Raleigh, guard.

SAE pledges gave their brother actives a party at the Schoolhouse on Thursday, but their weekend activities were vague; although they say they'll all be busy doing something 'r other.

Pi Kappa Phi pledges are entertaining the actives tonight with a party, while Ken White, Charlotte, pinned Pat Warlick, a WC student recently. Pi Lam actives will take their troops to the Saddle Club in Durham tonight to do their partyitng. Sunday they'll be hosts at lunch for the Duke AE Phis. There won't be nary a female at the DU house this afternoon when the guys have their annual stag party.

A newly engaged KA couple are Allen Johnson, Ayden, to Shirley Simpson, Pi Phi from Gastonia. Some new pledges added to their roster are Bob Staton, Hendersonville; Phil Hamrick, Mount Holly; Jack Jarmon, Plymouth; Bill Hunt, Lebanon, Tenn., and Jim Cole, New Bern.

It's a busy weekend for the Kappa Sigs for all the chapters in North Carolina and South Carolina are meeting in Durham for an annual conclave. Tonight there will be a formal dinner and dance at the Washington Duke Hotel in Durham.

New Kappa Psi officers to be installed on Wednesday are Van King, Wilmington, president; Don Miller, Raleigh, vice president; Doc Perkins, South Boston, Va., secretary, and Frank Lowder, Albemarle, treasurer.

Those Lambda Chis have got parties up their sleeves again this weekend. Last night it was a party at th house and tonight they've named the Castle in Durham as their dancing spot.

Their new officers are Bill Westbrook, Charlotte, president; Bill Elder, Siler City, vice president; Willis Hannah, Gastonia, secretary; Thomas Watts, Bryson City, treasurer, and Tom Barclay, Brevard, social chairman. Their contribution to the newly pinned department is Robert Bell, Virginia Beach, Va. to Suzanne Ringer, KD from West Hartford, Conn.

New Deke officers are: Al Short, Winston-Salem, president; Bill Temple, Highland Park, Ill., vice president; Bill Barnes, Wilson, secretary; and Tommy Shores, Hickory, pledge master.

Pawlik Taken Into Fleece

Harry Pawlik, graduate student from Albemarle, was tapped by the Order of the Golden Fleece in a special pre-dawn ceremony this morning.

The ceremonies were held by the oldest and highest men's honorary organization on campus in order to tap Pawlik before he leaves school this month to go on active duty with the United States Air Force.

Pawlik received his B.A. degree majoring in Physical Education and was granted a special leave until this month to work on his masters degree.

He was twice president of the Monogram Club, is a member of the Order of the Grail and vice-president of the Order of the Old Well.

During his undergraduate years he was on both the soccer and wrestling teams. He has coached the freshman soccer team this year.

Last year Pawlik was awarded the Benjamin Solomon Memorial Award, which was instituted last year to go to the man "who has best demonstrated the qualities of character and personality which are developed by wrestling."

HARRY PAWLIK
. . . into the Fleece

Pawlik, who came to America in 1947, was found in 1944 when he was 14 years old by the 11th Armored Division of the 3rd Army when it overran a concentration camp of the enemy in Belgium after the Normandy invasion. By that time he had already been in concentration camps in Poland, Austria, Czechoslovakia and Germany. When he was found by the Army he was placed in a field hospital, a victim of amnesia.

Pawlik remained with the 11th Armored Division until the war ended. At that time he was asked to go to Vienna, Austria. He went and became part of the 505 Military Police Battalion.

In 1947 he was asked by Lt. Raymond C. Carpenter of Albemarle, who was in the outfit, to come to the United States and live with his family. He came to Albemarle, graduated from Albemarle High School and came to UNC.

Hutson To Speak At Di's Inaugural

Dr. Harold Hutson, President of Greensboro College, will speak at inaugural ceremonies of the Senate of the Dialectic Literary Society tonight at 8 o'clock in Di Hall.

At that time Beverly Webb will be inaugurated as president. Other newly elected officers who will also take office are Larry McElroy, president pro tempore, a junior from Marshall; Jim Turner, critic from Winston-Salem; David Mundy, clerk, from Black Mountain; Steve Moss, treasurer from Bethlehem, Pa.; Freeman Grant, sgt. at arms, from Bethesda, Md.; Clyde Smith, chaplain, from Greensboro.

Dr. Hutson, the speaker for the occasion, was born in Spring Hill, S. C., received his A.B. from Wofford College, his B.D. from Duke and his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago. He became president of Greensboro College in 1952.

President-elect Webb is president of the Debate Council, president pro tempore of the Student Legislature, member of the Ampoterathan Society, Phi Eta Sigma and the Order of the Grail.

Hester Chairs Group To Aid Honor System

Scotty Hester, junior from Reidsville, has been appointed by student body President Tom Creasy to lead a committee to aid the honor system.

Other committee members named were Kendrick Townsend, Walt Joyner, Charlie Katzenstein, Ogburn Yates, Bill Calvert and Luther Hodges Jr.

Areas in which the committee has been specifically asked to inspect with a view toward improvement include:

(1) Better presentation of the Honor System to new students and faculty members;

(2) Making students more aware of our self-imposed Honor System;

(3) The jurisdictional extent of the Student Council and the Women's Council.

The group had its first meeting last week, at which it outlined the program to be considered in the next few weeks. The group will welcome and consider all ideas presented to any of its members, Chairman Hester said.

More Petitions Stolen, Says Author Levin

Two more pro-integration petitions that are being circulated on campus have been stolen, reported Ron Levin, sponsor of the documents, yesterday. According to Levin, the two were taken from Connor and Spencer Dormitories.

Levin also requested that persons circulating the petitions who think they have as many signatures as possible turn them in at the YMCA office.

Of the 10 or 15 petitions that are being carried around, said Levin, approximately 500 names have been collected.

Organist Slated For Recital

An organ recital by Arthur Howes, director of the Organ Institute in Andover, Mass., will jointly be presented by the Music Department and Graham Memorial on Tuesday, March 8, at 8 p. m. in Hill Hall.

Besides directing the Institute, which is an internationally known school for organ study, Howes has given concerts throughout the United States, and is one of a group of contemporary organists who have brought about a renaissance of organ music in recent years. He began playing the church organ at the age of 12, and made his debut as a concert organist at 14.

Howes is particularly known for his interpretation of the music of J. S. Bach. His program here will include Bach's "Fantasia and Fugue in G Minor;" Kellner's "Chorale Preludes;" Buxtehude's "Passacaglia in D Minor" and "Prelude and Fugue in G Minor;" Pachebel's "Prelude," "Fugue" and "Chaconne;" Brahm's "Chorale Preludes;" and, as the finale, Widor's "Second Symphony for Organ."

Pres. Gray Fears 'Crisis' In Annual Report On UNC

RALEIGH, Feb. 28—"We appear, largely unheralded, to be approaching something of a major crisis in the educational life of North Carolina," said President Gordon Gray of the University of North Carolina in his annual report presented to the Board of Trustees at a meeting here today.

This observation is made in a section devoted to "budget requests" for the three institutions—the University in Chapel Hill, State College, and Woman's College—usually referred to in the past as units of the Consolidated University or Greater University but more recently simply as the University of North Carolina, as the report pointed out.

"Two lines of development are converging," President Gray told the trustees. "As is well known, state tax revenues have been declining during the current year. The prospect is that, far from having a surplus as in recent years, present revenues will just barely meet current expenditures. On the other hand, increasing enrollments, and other equally pressing imperatives, require that the public schools and the University not only proceed at current levels of expenditures during the next biennium, but also seek certain specified increases."

Discussion of the monetary phase of the institution's needs, now before the current General Assembly, is only one of many items brought out in the report, President Gray's first general message on status and propress since his five-year report delivered last year. In all it embraces 20 different facets of University operation.

"In conclusion," the 20-page printed report states, "it is the judgment of the President that our institutions have, by and large, continued to make progress during the year. We face the large problems of the future with dedication and hope."

SERIOUS TO REQUEST MONEY

On the appropriations theme, Gray said, "It is a serious matter to ask the taxpayers of North Carolina to give more money for education. The state is doing a great deal in proportion to its means. In 1950-51, we spent $.43 per pupil in average daily attendance in the public schools. Among the states, our rank was 45. Yet the total amount spent on public schools was 3.02 percent of the State's income payments of that year. Only six other states spent a larger proportion of their income on public schools. The simple truth is that North Carolina is making a great educational effort.

"This is true also with respect to higher education. In 1949-50, 1.42 percent of the personal income received by the people of the State was devoted to higher education. In the Southeast, only Mississippi put more of its income into higher education; elsewhere, only eight states did as well or better."

Gray saw three main jobs in the upbuilding of the state, which he lists as "One, to improve agricultural practices and increase agricultural production and income. Two, to industrialize and diversify at a good rate, and three, to educate and train our people, for personal satisfaction, for citizenship, and for the increasing demands of the modern world."

He pointed out the per capita income remains so relatively low that these conditions "are reflected in education, where, for all of our efforts, we provide our young generally with something less than the national standard." He thinks the state has come a long way but warns "I do not see how the agricultural, industrial, political or educational leadership of the State can recommend to the people that we relax our efforts now. We must continue to go forward."

MANY CHANGES

Gray listed in his report many administrative changes in the University, including the appointment of Dr. J. Harris Purks as vice-president and provost in the consolidated office and Carey H. Bostian as chancellor at State College. The recommendations of the Cresap, McCormick and Paget survey were studied, he said, with some adopted, others disapproved.

"One of the most fundamental recommendations was made with respect to State College and the University in Chapel Hill." Gray pointed out. "For both institutions, it was recommended that the positions of vice-chancellor for academic affairs be created" because of the greatly increased scope of duties in the offices of the chancellors. Gray approved these principles, stated that administrative groups recommended that the position of dean of faculty be created, rather than that of vice-chancellor. This was approved by the Executive Committee, but denied by the Advisory Budget Commission. Another request is now before the Legislature. No action has been taken at State College, and at Woman's College the position of dean of instruction "conforms in principle to the position recommended at the other two institutions."

President Gray emphasizes the importance of excellent faculties, which is why funds for faculty additions and replacements occupy top priority in requests to the General Assembly. He darkly points out that "at Chapel Hill several departments are in truly critical condition." He outlines specifically the needs in physics, geology, geography, sociology and anthropology and the Institute of Government.

Apropos University size and admissions policy, he said there are

No Mention Made Of Coraddi, Automobiles

By FRED POWLEDGE

RALEIGH, Feb. 28—More than 70 trustees of the University of North Carolina met here today in a session which went along smoothly. Only exception came when John Washington Clark, aided by another trustee, complained about admitting Negroes to a three-week summer refresher course at N. C. State College.

The questions of student-owned automobiles, Coraddi and increased dormitory rent did not come up.

The meeting, which began here this morning at 11 o'clock, lasted until 1:30 p.m. Gov. Luther Hodges presided.

The trustees who complained about State's summer course referred to a portion of the trustees' Executive Committee report. The whole report was up for approval or disapproval by the body today.

The portion, a statement by Chancellor Carey Bostian of State College, stated:

"We are facing the problem of furnishing refresher courses of three weeks' duration to our county farm and home agents, which include a number of Negroes. We think we can do a much better job if members of our own administrative staff provide this refresher training.

"If Negroes are permitted to come to the campus they can be quartered at Shaw University (a Negro institution in Raleigh) and get their meals from that institution while they are students. It will save our staff from going over to A.&T. College for an additional three weeks' instruction.

"We believe that would provide better instruction if they are permitted to come to our campus (N. C. State)."

PROPOSAL APPROVED

Chancellor Bostian's proposal was approved by the executive committee at the earlier meeting, after Trustee Clark raised objections.

The question today was raised by Trustee Mark Lassiter of Greene County. Lassiter said he did not approve of the Negro part of the report, and was "in toto opposed to this intermingling in our churches and schools."

Then the parliamentary battle started.

A roll-call vote was asked. The trustees voted 15 to 11 to have a voice vote.

Trustee Clark said he was "wondering why they don't want to . . . stand up and be counted."

Another vote was taken. This time the trustees voted for a roll-call.

The final vote was taken. Fifty-seven trustees voted to accept the executive committee's report in full. Fifteen were against accepting it.

The 15 who voted against the report were Bateman, James, Lassiter, Lumpkin, David Clark, Everett, Rowe, Spruill, Wallace, Rankin, Royster, John Clark, Edwards, Venters and Wicker.

BOSTIAN SPEAKS

Chancellor Bostian told the trustees the proposed three-week refresher course for Negro farm and home agents was "not regular

Brigadoons' Leader Wants UNC Tradition

"We want Brigadoons to become a Carolina tradition that everyone on campus will be welcome to attend." This was the sentiment expressed by Ted Kemp, chairman of the committee that revised the bylaws for the IDC dance-per-semester project.

"Brigadoons is certainly not being crammed down students' throats, for it was the result of spontaneous requests by a number of interested persons on campus that we reworked the bylaws and presented them to the dorms again," Kemp went on to say. His statement came as the result of a previous one by Raymond Taylor, president of Old West dormitory, that the feeling of his dorm seemed to be that "they were sick and tired" of the idea. Taylor asserted that the measure had failed one time and should be enough proof that the dorm men didn't want it.

Kemp explained the failure of the proposal in its first attempt as coming from "the desire for a slight revision" on the part of four of the men's dorms. The original bylaws stated that the proposal must pass unanimously, and the final tabulation from the first referendum showed a vote of 15-4.

Elaborating on the changes that were made to the bylaws, Kemp said that a "committee" composed of IDC President Manning Muntzing, Sonny Hallford, Raymond Taylor and himself as chairman, talked with "a number of interested persons on campus, especially the leaders in the dorms that refused th idea," and arrived with a set of laws that "four dorms have already approved."

Dorms that have given the idea the go sign are Winston, Aycock, Mangum, and Whitehead. Of these four, Mangum and Whitehead voted negatively in the first ballot casting. One dorm, Old West, thumbed the idea down.

After the bylaws were revised, the committee submitted them to a session of the IDC, at which time the IDC voted 29-3 to adopt them.

Now, according to Kemp, the bylaws of Brigadoons have been incorporated with those of the IDC and will be voted on each year by individual dorms to decide if they will conduct it or not.

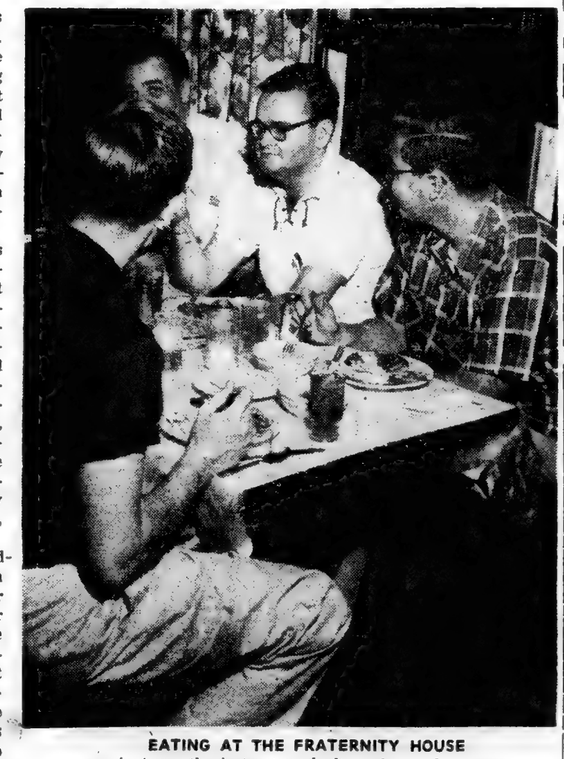
Kemp said "we want to establish this as a big dance that will draw in people from all over the campus and other regions, too."

SERVICE DOESN'T COUNT:

Local Beaneries Have 'A' Ratings

By SUE QUINN

Say it's your best girl's birthday, and you're taking her out to dinner. You don't have too much surplus cash this week, and you wrestle with your conscience for a long time, trying to decide where to go. Finally, the more generous side of your personality wins out, and you resign yourself to an evening at one of the "nicer" eating spots, with an oversized check for dessert.



The interesting aspect of this ordinary little drama is that the bases on which students decide which restaurants are "nice" enough to justify paying higher prices aparently bear little or no relation to the bases on which the State Board of Health grants these establishments their "A," "B" or "C" ratings.

The last announced inspection, results of which were published in December, 1954, gave "A" ratings to every restaurant in Chapel Hill and Carrboro, with the exception of the Cafe Mouza, which received a "B," and the Vot Grill, given a "C."

As Brevitt Hook, sanitarian at the local health department, pointed out, the factors on which inspectors grade eating places do not include odor, service or the appearance of the customers. The grading form includes 19 items, and an eating place must be graded on each one four times a year, or once each quarter. Restaurants receiving 90-100 are given "A" ratings, those falling between 80 and 89½ must post "Bs," and those between 70 and 79½ are given "Cs." Any establishment which is rated below 70 has its permit to operate revoked, and can choose between closing or being fined for operating without a permit.

Out of a possible 1,000 points on the grading form, 130 are allotted to cleaning of equipment and utensils, and 135 to protection of food. Other factors include toilet facilities, water supply, lavatory facilities, disposal of wastes, milk and milk products and requirements for employees. As Hook noted, floors, walls, ceilings, lighting and ventilation, which account in large part for the customer's impression of an eating place, only make up 110 of the 1,000 points, or 11 out of 100.

Hook also said that undoubtedly many violations of health rules are not caught by either himself or H. Dobson, the other sanitarian. Both make surprise visits to the restaurants in between announced inspections, but they are too well known to observe unnoticed. Therefore, he said, the department appreciates complaints from customers who have noticed violations.

Holsten, Miss Ponder Assigned New Offices

Two members of the South Building staff have new titles, according to an announcement from Chancellor R. B. House.

Roy Holsten, formerly assistant dean of students, will become director of student activities.

Miss Lila Ponder, who has been assistant personnel advisor to women, will become assistant director of student activities.

The change, according to House, came as part of the reorganization of the Division of Student Affairs, under which former Dean of Students Fred Weaver became dean of student affairs.

As director of student Activities, Holstein will have immediate administrative responsibility for the extracurricular program, including Graham Memorial Student Union, the YMCA and the YWCA.

Designation of Miss Ponder as assistant director of student activities is intended to bring closer coordination of student activities for men and women, according to House.

Crisis

North Carolina is still a poor state.

And therein lies North Carolina's problem—in many fields and particularly in education.

We rank 41st among the states in the amount of money we spend on sending students to school.

But we are making a profound educational effort. For North Carolina ranked seventh in the nation last year in the proportion of its income spent on the public schools, and ninth in the nation in the proportion spent on higher education.

It would be pleasant to report that things look bright for education in North Carolina, but it would be far from true.

President Gray's report to the Trustees yesterday drew the picture accurately:

> Two lines of development are converging. As is well known, state tax revenues have been declining . . . On the other hand, increased enrollments and other equally pressing imperatives require that the public schools and the University not only proceed at current levels of expenditure during the next biennium, but also seek certain specified increases.

> North Carolina is still below the national standard in education. Things are not good. And things are getting worse.

In other words, we're getting less money and we need more than ever.

We appear, (President Gray said) largely unheralded, to be approaching something of a major crisis in the educational life of North Carolina.

That sentence deserves to be pasted to the desks of every member of the General Assembly—those who are concerned with education and those political penguins who, by opposing crucially needed new taxes in behalf of their special interests, threaten to wreck education.

When the University closed down after the Civil War, one of the handful of students took a piece of chalk and wrote on a blackboard, "This old University busted and went to hell today."

Today, 80 years later, the University is again in danger of heading hellward. The only ones who can do anything about it are meeting in Raleigh.

Hark The Sound Of Three-Fold Voices

What's the University's name?

The law says State, WC and UNC are the "University of North Carolina."

And President Gray said two years ago that he's tired of hearing people call it the "Consolidated University." Smacks too much of Consolidated Edison or Consolidated Can, said Mr. Gray. The Daily Tar Heel agrees. "The University of North Carolina" we are —all three of us.

The place where we go to school is now referred to by South Building officialdom as "The University at Chapel Hill"—a reasonable idea.

But nobody has been very sure of the name of Carolina since consolidation took place 20 years ago. Some Yankee girls now going to school in Greensboro—we know this for a fact—originally registered at "The Woman's College of the University of North Carolina" in the belief that they were signing up to come to school in Chapel Hill.

It's a vexing matter, to say the least. President Gray, in his report to the Trustees yesterday, noted that we've been called, officially and unofficially, the "Consolidated University," "the Greater University" and the "Total University."

Mr. Gray made a heroic effort to clear the whole business up once and for all by calling the whole school the "University of North Carolina" throughout his report.

But he succumbed to the confusion, and dern if he didn't add a brand new designation all his own. For on the very first page, Mr. Gray wrote, "I submit herewith my report for the three-fold University of North Carolina."

HOWARD SCOTLAND at the Chi Phi house was told the other afternoon that 200 baby chickens were waiting for him at the post office, and he was surprised.

Scotland swore to his fraternity brothers that he hadn't ordered any chickens. But, even before he could go claim them, arrangements had been made with a carpenter working on the house for selling the chicks.

And when I talked to Jack Stevens about the chicks, he said, "It looks like we'll have fried chicken around the house for quite awhile."

HAL SIEBER, a student who writes poetry and who has recently published a book of poems called "In This Marian Year," has drawn some interesting criticism from literary critics.

And, as usual, the critics don't agree.

Bill Rivera, a local critic with the Carolina Quarterly, praised it highly, but Associate Editor Ed Yoder of this paper said that it "didn't excite me nearly as much as it seems to have excited Mr. Rivera."

Still another critic, Aaron Jones of the Charlotte Observer, hailed Sieber's poems as "full of peculiar, yet authoritative insight." According to Mr. Jones, "Mr. Sieber, in a collection of thirty-one poems, brings personal experience to light in a universal fashion."

Another reviewer, Walter Spearman, a professor in the Journalism School here and a columnist in several Sunday papers, criticized Sieber for his obscurity.

I'm just glad that I'm not a poetry critic—or I'd be more confused.

IN AN OLD, dusty 1918 book of Daily Tar Heels, I found this advertisement: A picture of three gunners in World War I uniforms with one saying, "Wish a friendly ace would drop some Murads (cigarettes) around here."

With only three cuts per course per term the old custom of swinging down to the beach for a long weekend will—like other good things—become less frequently practiced.

The solution: Make the Honor Roll (at least a B average), and you have unlimited cuts up to 25 percent of all class meetings.

I HAD to wince when I noticed that "The Power of Positive Thinking" by Norman Vincent Peale topped the non-fiction best-seller list, while Carl Sandburg's "Abraham Lincoln" was fifth.

The Quiet Ben Bobrow, Bronx, N. Y.

By Charles Dunn

(Charles Dunn, a junior in the University, lives in Stacy Dormitory, down the hall from Ray Barbre, the student who apparently took the lead in circulation of the recent pro-segregation student petition. But Ray Barbre did not frame the petition, nor was he the real force in its circulation, as the following article shows.—Editor.)

The Supreme Court's racial integration decision of last summer has caused quite a stir on the University campus. Right after the Supreme Court issued its decision, summer school students began to discuss it, sides were formed and some of the all night bull sessions for which Carolina is so famous developed.

Time passed, summer school ended and the interest died down among most Carolina students, unless some newspaper or radio story re-kindled the fire for awhile. Thus it was when the fall semester opened; the topic was still interesting but few students became involved in long winded debates where nobody convinced anybody on anything.

Then came the petitions. First it was Dr. W. C. George's petition against the Supreme Court decision which wasn't circulated on the campus but nevertheless attracted a great deal of interest among students. Then came a student petition in protest of the decision. A small group of students were credited with this petition which has been turned over to a member of the General Assembly. Now a third petition is being cidculated, this one to uphold the Supreme Court's decision.

A CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT

Petitions such as have been circulated on the campus are one of the basic principles of American democracy. In fact the forefathers of our nation believed in it so much that they included the right in the first amendment to the Constitution.

This amendment states: "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging . . . the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

Thus, according to the Constitution of the United States, petitioning is the thing for people to do whenever they have grievances against any decisions made by our government.

SECRET WRITERS

However, by democratic standards, any person or group of persons using the right of petition should do so in an open fashion so that the people, who are expected to sign it, can see its roots as well as what has been produced. Such was not the case with the student petition circulated protesting the Supreme Court's decision during the fall semester.

The framers of that petition have been kept in secret. Leaders in the circulating of the petition have refused to answer direct questions as to who drew up the petition.

One of the leaders said that it was framed by several students in the law school, who did not want their names mentioned, because it might in some way hinder them in their studies. Another of the known leaders agreed that law students drew up the petition, but he did not know their names.

Rumors have circulated around the campus that some members of the faculty, and even a former member of the student government framed it. Only a select few know who actually drew up the petition, and they have kept it a secret.

Ray Barbre, a likeable sophomore from Kinston, appears to be or has been made to appear to be the leader in the circulation of the petition. Barbre was active in circulating the petition, but no more so than several others. Yet whenever the petition is discussed his name has been pushed to the forefront, and has been used by the press as that of the movement's leader.

BEN BOBROW, BRONX, N. Y.

Barbre is against the ending of segregation. His reasons are the same as many other peoples. He worked hard in the circulating of the petition, because he believed in it. He was criticized by The Daily Tar Heel and by some students. He defended himself and his beliefs as anyone else would do. He believes in segregation, and knows his rights.

But Ray Barbre is not the leader of the movement to circulate the petition.

He and his name were used. He received more than his share of the publicity about the petition, and he allowed his name to be signed to a letter, all of which he did not write, defending his position.

The most noticeable leader, and one that has stayed as far out of the spotlight as possible, is Ben Bobrow, who, according to the student directory, is from Bronx, N. Y.

Bobrow, always nervous and in a hurry, is the one who distributed copies of the petition to those who agreed to circulate them. He is the one who made several trips daily to check on the circulation in the lower quad, and he is the one that talked most of the students into circulating them.

WHY THE INTEREST?

There is nothing wrong with petitioning, be it for or against the Supreme Court's racial integration decision, or any other decision made by our government. However, in this case, it seems only fair that the 1,050 students who signed this petition against the court's decision know the names of the individual or individuals who framed it in the first place.

And it would also be interesting to know why Mr. Bobrow, a New Yorker by residence, is so interested in prohibiting the mixture of races in the North Carolina public (grammar, elementary, and high) schools, and why he has been so willing to allow Barbre take all the blame or credit for the whole movement.

Blasting 'Blast': Honor At UNC

Editor:

From time to time there arises on this campus some individual who fancies himself an authority on honor and the Carolina honor system and sets out to remedy all the defects of our system. Invariably, this individual reveals his complete ignorance by the very nature of his criticism. Latest of these self styled protectors of student rights is Paul T. Chase.

Where Mr. Chase, in his sublime ignorance, arrives at the conclusion that all students are without honor is beyond my conception. Our system is based on quite the opposite. It must be assumed that every student realizes the value of his own honor before an honor system can even be established.

From this assumption we move to the next logical conclusion which places every student on his honor not to lie, cheat, or steal. It is also a necessary part of the system that every student be placed on his honor to report any violation he sees. If the student is mature enough to accept the responsibilities of the system he will see that it is enforced to the best of his ability. He has the choice of the above or a proctor system. I believe that the majority of students, faculty and administration will agree that a system such as ours, although admittedly imperfect, is preferable to a faculty enforced proctor system.

The biggest weakness of our honor system is inferred by Mr. Chase's article. The system cannot be effective if the members of the faculty and students do not demonstrate faith in the honor of the individual students and in the entire system. Unforunately there are some who do not realize the value or effectiveness of our honor system. Until they can place full responsibility in the hands of the students our system will not realize its maximum effectiveness.

I have given a somewhat basic explanation of our honor system largely for Mr. Chase's benefit. If you are really interested in the subject, I would commend to your reading the pamphlet which is prepared for entering freshmen.

Gordon Forester

Not With A Blast, But A Phfft

I would like to suggest that Paul T. Chases' "Blast" of Feb. 23 was an insipid phffft."

In calling the honor system here a system "completely devoid of honor," Mr. Chase reveals that he is more interested in writing a sensational column with catch phrases than he is in writing one supported by fact or intelligent reasoning.

His statement that "those administering the system are completely devoid of a concept of honor" is typical and sets the ungainly pace for the article. It also happens to be untrue.

"The honor system is merely a front designed to uphold a standard behaviour pattern. A student is told he must act in conformity to a certain code," says Chase. This standard pattern, this certain code to which he refers is that the Carolina student shall not lie, cheat, steal, or behave in a manner unbecoming a Carolina Gentleman.

Furthermore he is to have enough sense of responsibility and judgment to see that others around him are reminded of the code when necessary. Does Mr. Chase find this unreasonable? But honor is an individual matter, and so is a code of honor, says Chase. Who has a personal code that doesn't contain these standards and still keeps his self-respect? These codes are basic to the society in which we live.

If by "watchdogs" Mr. Chase is suggesting that there are planted informers at Carolina he is absolutely wrong. "The code consists of regulations written or unwritten which the Administration wishes enforced, or it consists of whatever vague notion of honor may currently be held by a council of the student's peers." This too attracts readers, but few believers I hope.

The regulations are the basic principles of not lying, cheating, stealing or acting in a manner unbecoming a Carolina gentleman, and they have a definite part in Orientation here. The Carolina man learned about them his freshman year. He even agreed that they were good by signifying his willingness to adhere to them at Carolina when he filled out his application to come here. The honor code is not regulated by some higer-up on the fifth floor of South Building. The Honor system is student run with Administration approval and cooperation. The Council's notions are far from vague, rather they are sensible and well thought out. But Chase wrote from impression, not fact.

Contrary to what Chase said the individual student is assumed to have honor, not to be without it,—and to believe in it enough to want to make the Honor System work. He is not "ratting" on those among him who violate the rules as Chase suggests.

The Orientation handbook expresses it well, for freshmen and the uninitiated like Mr. Chase. "Reporting to an external authority, (High School Principal) might be "ratting," but here at Carolina the authority is self-imposed, and the reporting is done to an internal authoriy——"the Honor Councils elected by the students." "With those changed circumstances not to report is to break faith with the gang in a larger and more important sense. We are all part of the Carolina community."

Chase suggested that the University fears that the student may start to think for himself and reject the present system. I suggest the University welcomes the students not only to think for themselves, but to give serious thought to the honor system. The student who reasons it out carefully will first see the need for an honor system—rather than a proctor system which is what we don't have, and secondly see where he fits into the system, his responsibilities to himself and to his fellow students at Carolina.

Mr. Chase has unwittingly pointed out the need for a better understanding of the honor system, so that the casual reader will not be taken in by his article or any future such irresponsible attacks on a fundamental part of Carolina.

The student IS being treated by the honor system with the respect due him as an individual. The issue at hand is really whether or not the honor system is being treated with the respect due it as a worthwhile student function.

PAUL GAUGUIN
. . . splashy artist's life

Gauguin: The Noble Savage Was A Rascal

You'd swear it couldn't be true.

The life story of Paul Gauguin reads like a novel. Somerset Maugham thought so; "The Moon And Sixpence" is a novel version of Gauguin's life.

But the truth of the new Gauguin biography, NOBLE SAVAGE (by Lawrence and Elisabeth Hanson. Random House, $5.) is stranger than Maugham's fiction.

There was never anything dull about Gauguin, the painter. His canvases were bold and splashy. So was his life.

He started out prosaically enough—in the stock exchange. But then, to his family's chagrin, he took up art as a hobby, then as a job, then as an incurable, crippling obsession. He became a Paris bill poster, then a ditch-digger, then a peasant, and finally fled to not-so-idyllic Tahiti, all in search of art. He left his family behind and, to what extent he could, put them out of his mind.

Was he a rascal? Probaby, though the Hansons doubt it, even to the point of suggesting that he might have been a great man as well as a great painter. The available evidence (and their book is full of facts previously unpublished) would seem to argue against that premise.

The family story is engaging soap opera. Said his wife Mette decades after she married him: "I had no idea he had a leaning towards the arts." She always doubted that he was much of an artist; she sold his paintings to buy food after he had deserted his family.

Gauguin the man is all here—the egotistic artist, the individualist, the keeper of mistresses, the believer in the sanctity of the soul and in the truth of Art. We should prefer to have a little more about Gauguin the artist, though the Hansons have amassed enough anecdotes and incidents to keep the reader interested without going very deeply into the nature of Gauguin's work.

How noble the savage was in person remains, for us, still questionable. But NOBLE SAVAGE is worthwhile, engaging reading whether you're interested in art, or just in a story about a splashy, rowdy artist.—I.N.T.

SAVED FOR WHAT?

This repugnance to colonialism has led in India and other Asian countries to fears and suspicious of recent trends of Western policy in Asia. I know this has perplex and distressed Americans, conscious that they have no imperialistic designs. But the fact remains, and needs to be faced. Statesmen of Asia have often pointed out that certain facile methods of thinking, reflected in the literature and the press of the West, have to be discarded if Europe and America would understand Asia properly. How often do you come across expressions like "Oriental sensuousness"; and accept these as self-evident truths? There is nothing oriental or occidental, about the moral quaiities of men—they rate equally high in the Orient as in the Occident. It is also frequently said that Asia must somehow be saved from communism; but very few seem to be clear on whose behalf Asia is to be saved. An intelligent approach requires recognition of certain basic facts. The peoples of Asia are no longer prepared to accept the subservient status of colonialism. — P. A. Menon, Ambassador from India to Thailand.

Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse see imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others.—Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was singlefooting up and down in front of Memorial Hall, clutching a moist wad of folding-money in his rubber lips. What was up?

"Show Boat," The Horse babbled excitedly. "We are the first collegiate group ever to be permitted to stage this all-time musical-comedy Great, and you know how Playmakers will wrap this deal up! The Department of Music, the Dramatic Art Department, and The Carolina Playmakers have all clambered up the gangplank on this deal. It can't miss; and I don't intend to!"

That's what The Horse thought, ho ho?

"Waaaaaaadaminnit, waaaaadaminnit!" The Horse plagiarized me unblushingly. "Kai Jurgensen is directing it, isn't he?"

Yes, I agreed; but — '

"But me no buts!" The Horse barked, a neat trick for an equine, indeed. "And I hope Prof. Jurgensen is listening — that's direct outa Shakespeare!"

This was evading the issue.

"Well, you won't evade my hooves iffn you don't put a rivet in that duckbilled mouth o' yourn while I am talking!" The Horse said (hay) loftily. "Prof Jurgensen of our Dramatic Art faculty and director of Horn In The West, the newest of our summer pageants, and estivating perennially at Boone, North Carolina, directs Show Boat; the settings are by Jim Riley, and therefore are jim-dandy; Don Treat,who was-a in the title role of Mr. Roberts, assists Jim Dandy — I mean, Riley — expertly. Miz Irene –"

Hold it, hold it! Clarification was in order for this 'Don Treat who was'. Was The Horse so steeped in typographical errors through working for The Daily Tar Heel that he spoke in errors? Don Treat who was-a What?

"Who was-a Treat." The Horse sighed over the grave of his labored pun. "Miz Irene Rains is Costume boss, and cute and able half-pint Suzy Kramer assists her — and wait until you see those costumes, wow! You ain't got enough proof, yet? Okay —here's more: Choreography is by Harry Coble Himself, of Crucible and summer-pagent and Darkening Shores ken; Lighting is by Harvey Whetstone. . . . and you know how sharp things are when they are fresh from a whetstone. As Shakespeare put it: 'The dullness of the fool is the whetstone of the wits.'"

The Horse could belay that stuff: Prof Jurgensen wasn't listening to any Shakespeare stuff just now, but would be come April 1st, heh heh-

"Shaddup," The Horse said inelegantly. "Lorry Braverman heads up the Stage Crew, with Lenny Bullock of Kenan Stewdium and Arsenic And Old Lace, fame handling the scenery quarterbacking assignment. Gene Overbeck, as winsome a lass a ever won a lasting affection in the hearts of her crew, heads up the Prop Gang — "

Huh, howzat? Prop Gang?

"Yeah," The Horse obliged. "The guys and dolls who see that ashes are put into ashtrays, and who see to it the waterwheel of the show boat is wet, and that actors who should wear hats are not wearing them — that sort of thing."

Well, that could all very well be, but —

"Your're not convinced yet?" The Horse shrilled. "Brother, they've even got Th' Lil' Perfessor of Greek Drammer Class fame — Miss June Esenweiler, ma'am — handling a lighting switchboard; and a doggoned Light-Colonel and former French perfesser here at this seat of Southern Cultoor & Erudition, Walter Creech, working with the show's Construction Battalion."

Why wasn't Light-Colonel Crech properly working with the Light-Crew, if he was a Light-Colonel?

"I will do the punning for this stable, such as it is," The Horse chittered. (I hate him when he chitters!) "Are we now R5, S-5, you key-twirler, you? Are we?"

The Horse was still wrong about —

"Have you just a moment more to spare?" The Horse smiled, simultaneously knocking me down and sitting on me. "You know that Martha Fouse, the petite charmanteuse of our Department of Music's recent and televised The Marriage of Figaro, is also the si charmante Chanteuse Magnolia of Show Boat? You know that John Shearin takes the vocal part of Gaylord Ravenall, that Sid Litwak is our Cap'n Andy, and Lillian Meade Prince is Cap'n Andy's stage-wife. Parthenia?"

I did, I was thrilled. I wouldn't miss it.

"Well, then," The Horse said, starting to elevate his sternplates from my sternum . . . which is not at all what it sounds like, but is akin to the breastplate of a corpse, which I was all but. We are in accord."

But The Horse was still wrong, I put in.

"Susanne Elliott is playing Julie, sigh!" The Horse ecstasighed, crunching down on me anew. "Joe-of-the-Show is David Small, whose voice is not at all-a."

Yeah, yeah I caught! Not at all a small voice!

"And Marty Boyle, who dances like a moonbeam but praise be, is satisfyingly more corporeal than that, plays Ellie Mae to Charmin' -Chollie Jeffers' twinning steps as the dance team of Schulty & Schulty. Now are you convinced?"

Ho-ho, I managed to ho-ho, this was a horse on The Horse, albeit The Horse was on me. I knew this long ago! Yup, every bit of it!

"So why the argufying?" The Horse doubted me.

All I was trying to tell The Horse was: he was wasting his time waiting for the box-office at Memorial Hall to open for this play by Edna Ferber and immortalized by Jerome Kern, Oscar Hammerstein and Helen Morgan — and we'll forget her after we see Susn Elliott as Julie — BECAUSE. . . .

Tickets were on sale at The Playmakers business office in upstairs Abernethy Hall (next to the Scuttlebutt) and at Ledbetter-Pickard's stationery store on East Franklin Sreet; and he had best be hoofing if he wanted a stall-seat for any of the nights (mark them well!) of March 4, 5 or 6.

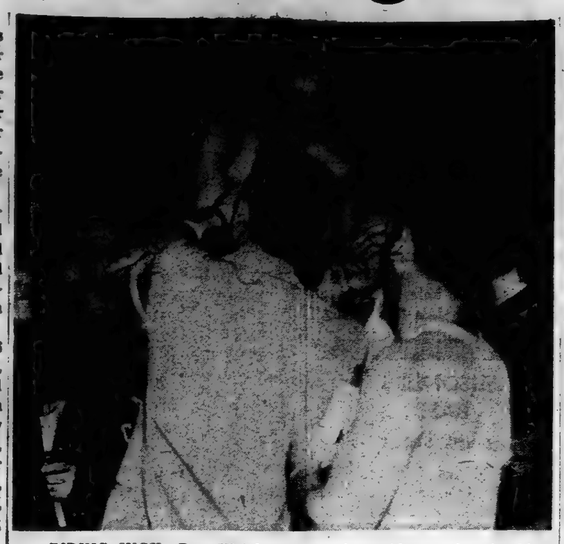
"And away we go!" The Horse plagiarized another 'horse' of TV fame, as he made a running take-off from my baywindow. —Which is exactly what it sounds like. "Me, I'm never late ever!"

"Wump!" Mr. Wump editorialized on this. . .

Beatty And Wright Feature Team Win In Indoor Games

By RAY LINKER

"A tremendous team effort was the most important factor in our win." Those were the words the Carolina track coaches had for their Tar Heels following their narrow victory in the Indoor Games here Saturday over Maryland and the other conference teams.



"We told them in a squad meeting on Thursday that they would have to do better than they had ever done before, if they wanted to win. That's actually what happened," said Coaches Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton.

UNC nipped the Terps by 36 to 35½ points, with the last event, the mile relay, deciding the final outcome. Duke finished third with 24 points, 17 of them gathered by three-event winner Joel Shankle, the meet's high scorer. Other team scores were South Carolina, 14; N. C. State, nine; Virginia, seven and one-half; Clemson, six; and Wake Forest, zero.

Carolina's victory was a team effort, but it was the outstanding performances of two Tar Heel thinclads which put the victory on ice. Those two men were Don Wright and Jimmy Beatty.

WITH THE RELAY remaining, the Tar Heels had 34 points, and the Terps trailed with 30½. Carolina needed only a third place to win the meet. Anything less than third would mean defeat, for Maryland was favored in the relay, and would more than likely win that event. But even a win in the relay for the Terps would not win the meet if the Tar Heels could garner a third.

The relay began, and Maryland jumped into the lead. Despite the fine effort of Bob Wilson, Claude Rhule, and Bill Booth, Tar Heel Wright took the baton for the last leg of the relay in fourth position. He pulled up considerably on the other three men, but it looked as if all was lost when he was still in fourth place with a half lap to go. But Wright came through with the third place and the meet victory for the Tar Heels, passing Virginia's anchor man in the last 20 yards of the race.

RIDING HIGH—Don Wright gets a free ride on the shoulders of teammates and fans Saturday night after he "anchor-manned" the Tar Heels to a third-place finish in the mile relay, giving UNC a victory in the Indoor Games. Carolina scored 36 points to Maryland's 35½ for the win. (Cornell Wright photo).

Beatty won the mile and the two-mile, a feat accomplished by only three other runners in the 26 years of the Games. He ran the second fastest winning time in the mile in the history of the meet, and broke the standing record in the two mile by nine seconds.

IN THE MILE EVENT, the lead changed no less than eight times. Maryland's Alva "Burr" Grimm and Beatty battled for the first position throughout the race, with Larry Faass, defending champ from Maryland, occasionally moving into second ahead of Grimm when Beatty was leading. Grimm passed Beatty with two laps to go in the 10-lap race, but with less than one and one-half laps remaining, Beatty moved out in front of Grimm for the last time. The Tar Heel ace poured on steam, displaying a great finishing kick, and rolled on to win by some 40 yards with a time of 4:16.3.

A little over an hour later Beatty lined up to go the 20-lap two-mile race. At the end of two laps UNC's Bobby Barden was out front, followed by Mike Shea of N. C. State, Carl Party of Maryland, and Beatty. When they crossed the mile mark, Shea, Barden, and Beatty were within ten yards of each other. Shea moved out more in the lead as Party took over second ahead of Barden and Beatty at the mile and one-fourth distance, and the positions remained that way until Beatty passed Barden with four laps to go. Then Beatty and Barden both shot by Party, and Beatty again started moving up with two laps to go. On the last lap the UNC ace swept by Shea to win in 9:25.5. Shea and Barden, finishing in second and third, were both under the record, also. Party was fourth.

AS THE COACHES said, the Tar Heels did better than ever before. Ken Bryant placed second in th high jump with 6'1", the highest he has ever done, behind the winning 6'2" jump of Clemson's A. T. Mitchell. George Hogan of Maryland was third, and Duke's Shankle and Ray Quillan of Virginia tied for fourth.

FLYING HIGH—Earle Poucher, of Florida, easily clears 14 feet in a warm-up vault prior to his record-setting performance in the Indoor Games Saturday. Poucher later established a new standard of 14 feet, five and 7/8 inches. (Cornell Wright photo).

Defending champ in the shot, Durham Lawshe of Duke, broke his own record with a heave of 51 feet ¾ inches for first place. UNC's Roger Morris took second with his best indoor performance, a throw of 50 feet, 2¾ inches. Larry Maslow pulled down an important fourth in the shot for the Tar Heels, behind Maryland's Gene Dyson.

UNC's Don Mitchell came forth with a sterling performance in the 60-yard dash to take a second behind the winning Tommy Woodlee of South Carolina, despite the fact that practically all of the runners had beaten the Tar Heel previously.

CLAUDE RHULE was the second highest point-getter for the winning UNC men, scoring 5½ points behind Beatty's 10. Rhule was third in the 70-yard high hurdles, which saw Shankle and George Grattan of Virginia finish first and second. The same three men were out front in the low hurdles, but Rhule edged Grattan for the second spot. Rhule was also a member of the Tar Heels' mile relay team which captured third.

Charles Yarborough garnered a second in the broad jump as Shankle won with a 23 feet 3¼ inches jump. Yarborough also tied for second in the pole vault with three others including UNC soph Richard Waters. Defending Champ Mel Schwarz, of Maryland, won the pole with a leap of 13 feet, while the Tar Heels had 12 feet 6 inches.

"Bob Wilson did a tremendous job for us, performing in five events," said Coach Hilton. Wilson was fourth in the low hurdles, a finalist in the high hurdles, lead-off man on the mile relay team, and performed in the broad jump and high jump.

In the 440-yard dash defending champ Terp Joe Hemler was second this year behind teammate Burke Wilson, who ended in third place last year. Sonny Wilcher, of South Carolina, was third, and David Leas, of Maryland, fourth.

BOYD NEWMAN, running with a hurt leg, cut out Maryland's top 880 man in the trials, thereby eliminating a possible five points that the Terps would have gotten in the finals. Newnam's bad leg had done its deed for the day, and when the finals came the Tar Heels failed to place. Bobby Jones of State took the event in 1:55.9, with Fred Roberts of South Carolina in second place, Faass in third ,and R. M. Carter of Clemson in fourth.

The feature event of the non-conference division was the pole vault. Florida's Earl Poucher broke his own record with a leap of 14 feet 5⅞ inches. Navy took second and third with Bill Howell and John McLoughlin.

VMI won the non-conference with 22½ points, while Navy was a close second with 21, followed by Florida with 15 and Georgia with 12½.

CUFF NOTES

By BERNIE WEISS

"It's tough to beat a club like Wake Forest and an All-American like Dickie Hemric three times in one season."

This is Carolina basketball coach Frank McGuire's musings on Thursday's opening round game in the Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament between the two rivals.

UNC won the first game in January, 95-78, and repeated with an 83-79 conquest of the Deacons two weeks ago. Hemric went above 30 points in both games, despite the Carolina effort to halt the nationally famous product of Jonesville. He was named to the second string All-American team this past weekend.

McGuire is well known for his words about Hemric: "When we play against him we just try to hold him below 30 points," he says. This feat hasn't been accomplished so far.

Hemric won't be the only Tar Heel worry in the tourney. Another bother will be Lowell Davis, who could easily sneak into the scoring picture via the back door with 20 or so points.

Although McGuire is inclined to pick State as the conference champion, and Duke to get the nod for the NCAA berth against Villanova March 8 by virtue of finishing second, he is not counting Carolina out of the picture.

★

An interesting sidelight to the Indoor Games, held here Saturday and won by UNC, was the final event of the evening.

The Tar Heel relay team, composed of Bob Wilson, Claude Rhule, Bill Booth and Don Wright, had to gain a third in that event to insure a victory. Going into the race UNC was out front of Maryland, 34 to 30½, but the Terps were a positive bet to capture the relay, thus winning unless UNC took third.

Maryland won it and wound up with 35½ points, but fortunately Wright came through on the final lap and crossed the finish line ahead of his rival anchorman to gain third. UNC won, 36-35½.

Here's the twist: Wright failed to qualify for the 440, a race he has been running for two years, but this was the same distance through which he hurried to give Carolina an upset triumph and the Indoor Games championship.

Duke And State Are Co-Favorites In ACC Meet Opening Thursday

Duke and N. C. State will rate as the co-favorites for the Atlantic Coast Conference championship when the opening round of play begins Thursday at 2 p.m. in the Reynolds Coliseum on the N. C State campus.

State, seeded No. 1 by virtue of finishing in top position in the regular season standings with a 12-2 mark, will take on Clemson at 7:30 p.m. Thursday and Duke, finishing No 2, with a 11-3 loop mark, meets South Carolina in the second afternoon game at 4 p.m. Thursday.

Thursday's opening game at 2 p.m. pits Maryland against Virginia, while at 9:30 that night Wake Forest will face the University of North Carolina.

Although State beat Duke twice during the regular season, 96-91 at Durham and 84-78 at Raleigh, the Blue Devils still rate as the team most likely to wrest the ACC crown from the Wolfpack. Duke's only other regular season defeat was at the hands of Maryland in a game played at College Park. If Duke and State meet in the finals Saturday night as anticipated, Duke will be assured of representing the ACC in the NCAA tournament since State is not eligible.

APPROXIMATELY 3,000 tickets are still available to the three-day dribble-derby and tournament manager Willis Casey reports that sales are already 25% ahead of last year when 42,000 persons saw the championship event. Single session tickets are now available at the Coliseum Box Office.

Much of the opening round interest will be on the game between North Carolina and Wake Forest, two Big Four rivals. Although the Tar Heels beat the Demon Deacons twice in the regular sason, many observers believe Wake Forest will be a tough customer for the Carolina quint in the tournament. The Virginia-Maryland setto is also rated as a near toss-up. The Cavaliers are the top scoring team in the tourney with a 90 point average per game and Maryland has slipped in recent weeks since losing Frank Fuqua on eligibility difficulties.

Game No. 1 (7:30 Thursday) N. C. State vs Clemson.

Game No. 2 (9:30 Thursday) North Carolina vs Wake Forest.

Game No. 3 (4:00 Thursday) Duke vs South Carolina.

Game No. 4 (2:00 Thursday) Maryland vs Virginia

Game No. 5 (7:30 Friday) Winners of Games No. 1 and No. 2 (semifinals).

Game No. 6 (9:30 Friday) Winners of Games No. 3 and No. 4 (semifinals).

Game No. 7 (8:00 Saturday) Winners of Games No. 5 and No. 6 (finals).

Carolina Host To Conference Mat Tourney

By AL KORSCHUN

The University of North Carolina will spread the welcome mat this weekend to five visiting teams of the Atlantic Coast Conference (Maryland, Duke, Virginia, State, and Wake Forest) who will compete in the first ACC wrestling tournament.

It will mark a departure from the method of crowning Conference champions in the past. Formerly, a champion was designated as such by its team performances against conference competition during the regular season.

Host Carolina finished its regular season's action this past weekend by losing its ninth consecutive match Friday to VMI, then coming back on Saturday to whip Wake Forest to gain its first win of the season.

Gymnasts Will Take 5-2 Record To Tourney

Carolina bymnasts will take a 5-2 record and four consecutive victories to the Southern Intercollegiate Tournament to be held at Georgia Tech, March 12.

The charges of Coach Bill Meade ran up their streak Saturday as they defeated Duke in a return match, 63-32. Carolina won the first encounter, 66-29.

Honors for high score for UNC were divided among Biff Howard, Pete Brumley and Gordon Hudson, with each collecting 13 points. Blair Mathies wah high man for Duke with 11 points.

Quarterly On Sale

The Carolina Quarterly is now on sale at the Intimate Bookshop, the Bull's Head Bookshop, the Carolina Inn, the Monogram Club Circus Room and the information desk in Graham Memorial.

It is also being sold in the YMCA during the morning and in Lenoir Hall during lunch and supper. The sale will end Friday.

The deadline for manuscripts submissions for the Quarterly's Fifth Annual Fiction Contest is April 1.

Rivalry Keen For Grid Spots

By JACK MURPHY

It was an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth this week as the Tar Heel football squad of more than fifty gridders banged heads on Navy Field.

A "survival of the fittest" attitude has every man putting out with everything he's got in an effort to win a spot on the 1955 aggregation. Such veterans as Len Bullock, Will Frye, George Savinitski, Ken Keller, John Jones, Bill Koman, Norman Lane, Roland Perdue, and Jack Maultsby are fighting like unknowns in an effort to hold their own against the determined likes of John Bilich, Don Lear, Darden Livesay, Doug Malone, Larry McMullen, Larry Muschamp, Eddie Sutton, Wilson Shouldars, Charlie Boyette, Doug Farmer, John Lambert and Steve Kenney.

Up and coming frosh such as Jimmy Jones, Jack Lineberger, "Hap" Setzer, Ron Marquette, Vince Olen, Buddy Payne, Buddy Sasser, Joe Temple and Howard Williams are probably making the strongest bid for starting spots on a team which will face one of the toughest schedule that ever gave a football coach nightmares.

THE TENDER SPOT in the football picture for next year is, as always since Carolina first became a "T" formation club, the quarterback position. Sutton, the bolt of lightning that wrecked Wake Forest this past season, has been getting familiar with the job and is currently directing the ever changing "first team" during practice scrimmages. He seems to possess good reflexes, is cool under pressure, and no one who saw the Wake game will question his running ability. The question now is, "can he pass?"

Bullock, the regular quarterback last season, was at Saturday's practice in light gear. He has been touring with the Carolina Playmakers of late. Other prospective field generals include rising sophs Marquette, Sasser, and Reed, newcomer Bill Ellington, and Farmer, a rising junior who saw limited action last fall.

Besides the quarterback problem there has been considerable interest in the battle for the two guard positions. Unlike the other worry, this one presents a pleasant problem for Coach George Barclay. The ballyhooed rocks of the freshman squad, Lineberger and Setzer, are meeting stiff, if not unexpected, competition in lettermen Jones and Koman. Jones, a tackle this fall, has switched to guard, teaming with Koman. Here again is the fight for survival of the fittest.

LEO RUSSAVAGE, another promising freshman star, still is wearing a cast on his knee which was injured in the fall. His future is doubtful. Nick Marcopulos, a fullback who showed much promise as a sophomore, definitely has ended his grid career due to a head injury. The exit of Don Klochak from the campus has flashed the green light for Lear, McMullen, Giles Gaca and Williams to fight it out in a dog-eat-dog scrap for the deep spot post.

Malone, who lettered at end last fall, has been switched to halfback although not taking part in the scrimmages due to an old elbow nerve injury. He was an outstanding defensive halfback at Pulaski, Va., High School.

Another halfback of promise, Steve Kupchick, has found fate tough in his bid to aid the Tar Heels in the coming football wars. Stout Steve reinjured his leg, only days after taking the cast off, early in Saturday's scrimmage. The same injury kept him out of action most of last fall during the freshman season. Kupchick was one of the most sought after high school players in the nation.

Ruth's Cousin's Son Is Seeking Starting Berth On UNC Nine

By MARSHALL WAIDMAN

A fellow with a famous baseball name has been working out at first base for the Tar Heels, trying to gain a starting berth.

That fellow is senior Tom Zachary, whose father delivered the pitch that Babe Ruth walloped into the seats for his 60th home run of the 1927 baseball season.

Zachary, of Graham, has been working out at first base along with Russ Perry, a sophomore from Chapel Hill. Both have been splitting the job equally while Will Frye is working out with the football squad. The first pase post is still wide open with Basebaall Coach Walter Rabb giving each of the candidates a full crack at the position.

Buddy Strause of Charlotte and Bill Brake have been working out at second base with Harry Lloyd out of action. Strause played freshman ball last season and Brake played second base for Campbell Junior College.

Iver Lee Hill of Chapel Hill has been looking very good at third base. He is just out of the service and played third base for the Carolina frosh a couple of seasons back. Chuck Hartman, a sophomore hailing from Gastonia, has also been used at the hot corner.

Albert Long of Durham and Jack Woods of Purley have been handling the chores at shortstop. Long played the outfield last year and is trying to make the big switch to the inner garden.

In the outfield, the Tar Heels have four lettermen in Connie Gravitte, Hel Harding, Ken Keller and Bob Paller. Sophomore Dick Hudson makes the aspirants for the three starting positions a quintette.

Jimmy Love has been handling the catching while Jack Maultsby is donning the football gear. Love caught for the freshmen last season and should get quite a bit of work behind the plate for the varsity during the coming campaign. Love makes his home in Sanford while Maultsby hails from Chapel Hill.

The mound corps is led by Tom Maultsby and Jim Raugh. Don Hill and Morris Hall of Winston-Salem should provide adequate support along with Billy Joe Johnson and Bob Johnson.

TURNER DECLINES SEAT

SP Nominates Solons

The Student Party in a prolonged session last night selected its nominees for legislative seats in Dorm Men's V, Town Men's III and three offices on its sophomore class slate.

Chosen to carry the party banner in Dorm Men's V were Larry McElroy and Larry Hartzell;

Singled out to represent the SP in Town Men's III were Jerry Brodreau, Dick Albert and Charlie Dean, (incumbent);

Selected to vie for sophomore class officer's positions were Ken Clark, president, Jim Dixon, vice president and Marilyn Watson, secretary.

A number of seats in Town Men's I, Town Men's II, and Town Women's were left vacant until the next meeting due to the lack of nominations.

Thus the most controversial action of the entire meeting was a squabble which grew out of the question of voting eligibility.

The question was settled, however, when Don Geiger ruled that any former member who had attended one previous meeting and paid dues was eligible to vote or anyone may become a member who has attended two party meetings and paid dues.

Geiger, party chairman, concluded the assembly with "It is indeed heartening to note the fine quality of all our candidates. I feel we shall be able to offer the students a fine slate this spring."

YWCA Members Meet To Name New Officers

A meeting will be held for all YWCA members tomorrow for the purpose of nominating officers for 1955-56.

The meeting will be held in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial at 8 p.m.

Nominations will be made for the president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, program chairman and membership chairman.

The Nominating Committee will present its slate, and nominations will also be taken from the floor.

The program will also include a short talk by Rev. Maurice Kidder of the Episcopal Church of Glenn Lennox on the topic "Christian Leadership" and the presentation of the present Y officers who will give introductions of their roles.

two alternatives. "We may continue to hold our doors open and take in virtually all comers. Or we may raise our admissions standards significantly, so as to hold our enrollments at a relatively stable figure.

"From our own viewpoint, and from the viewpoint of the state's educational system as a whole," Gray said, "I am now inclined to think that we should raise our scholastic admissions requirements gradually and reasonably, so that we may in the same way raise our standards of undergraduate education.

His report includes enrollment tables, by counties, showing that at State College in 1952 there were 3,929 students, 4,063 in 1953; at Chapel Hill, 5,474, in 1952, 5,656 in 1953; and at Woman's college, 2,364 in 1952, 2,334 in 1953.

In a footnote relative to admissions, Gray said that "In many ways the most important statistic in the University is the one that tells us each year how many new freshmen have come into the three institutions. At State College and at Chapel Hill, he says, the numbers of new freshmen are increasing annually.

Studies are being made, he said, in regards to student fees.

He pointed out that among land grant colleges and universities in the nation, only 10 charge home state students higher fees than those prevailing at North Carolina's three institutions. Of this 10 only Virginia is in the South, and Virginia's charges are less than one dollar per student more. He says "There is no absolute magic figure for student fees, nor even a relative one," and indicates that in the future the decision must be made as to whether to raise fees "or to cut back our program."

DIVISION OF HEALTH AFFAIRS

A large section of the report deals with the Division of Health Affairs at Chapel Hill, which has expanded so materially. Gray said the year 1953-54 found the division proceeding rapidly toward full activation. The School of Medicine graduated its first class of 48 students in June, 1954. The North Carolina Memorial Hospital had 247 beds in operation at the close of 1953-54. The School of Nursing had three classes of students in residence in 1953-54 and graduates its first class in June, 1955. The School of Dentistry graduated its first class of 52 dental students in June, 1954. The School of Pharmacy is currently in urgent need of a new building, Gray says. The School of Public Health functioned well.

The report states that well over three and a quarter million dollars came into the University during the past year from outside sources.

Sections in the report are devoted to sponsored research, showing great progress, and to Negro students, athletics and educational television.

A small group of Negro students has been admitted at Chapel Hill since the first one in the School of Medicine in 1951. The latter is now a senior. At State College the Negro men were admitted in the fall of 1953 as graduate students in engineering. One dropped out. The admissions policy for Negroes, Gray says, has followed the directive of the Board of Trustees made in April 4, 1951.

The library collected by the Di, first of the two organizations, was the basis of the University Library today. Among the alumni of the Di are Gov. Luther Hodges, Dr. Frank Graham, Judge John J. Parker, Congressman Charles R. Jonas and John Motley Morehead.

Activities for the Di this spring will include the annual Di-Phi debate, the awarding of the annual Di faculty award, and the Di-Phi award to be presented to some notable alumnus of either society.

Both L. P. McLendon and Clarence Poe said that their experience had shown Negro agents to be "conservative leaders of the Negro race" and valuable to the state.

The Visiting Committee's report, which recommended administrative regulation of student-owned automobiles and reiteration of "the strong presumption against increase of dormitory room rents, tuition fees and other charges to students," was accepted.

Business Fair Set In April

Alpha Tau Chapter of Alpha Kappa Psi, national professional fraternity in business administration, yesterday announced plans for holding its Fourth Annual Business Fair, an annual service-to-school project.

The 1955 Fair, "Wings, Wheels an Rudders, The Story of the American Transportation System," will be held in Carroll Hall, School of Business Administration, here on April 17 and 18, according to the announcement issued jointly by Kenneth Argo of Kannapolis, chairman of arrangements and senior in the business school, and Dr. J. C. D. Blaine, faculty advisor and professor of Transportation.

AKPsi, for the past three years a national awards winner among college business fraternities, sponsored its first business fair in 1952 which had finance as its central theme. Three national figures were featured speakers: C. P. Ceoghegan, senior vice president of Wachovia Bank and Trust Company; J. J. Sheehan, public relations director of the New York Curb Exchange, and W. D. Croom, vice president of the First Securities Corporation. The Business Fair was termed an immediate success and was continued in 1953 when Bruce Barton, chairman of the Board of Batten, Barton, Durstine and Osborne Advertising Agency of New York, spoke to a capacity audience in Gerrard Hall on the development of the advertising business in the United States during the past 30 years.

1954 saw the student members of Alpha Kappa Psi sponsoring a fair with the theme a little closer to their hearts: "Tar Heel Jobs for Tar Heel Grads." R. D. Warwick, president of the North Carolina Association of Chambers of Commerce, headed the list of speakers.

"Wings, Wheels and Rudders has had its preliminary plans enthusiastically received by students faculty and businessmen throughout the state, and is being promoted as the first presentation of its kind in the Unied States, said AKPsi's announcement.

Seminar Slated In Capital

A Meet-Your-Government Seminar, sponsored by the National Student Council of the YMCA and YWCA, will be held in Washington, D. C. from March 20 through March 22.

John Riebel, YMCA secretary, has five application blanks for any UNC students who wish to attend the seminar. The blanks must be returned to the Council, 3708 Forest Hill Drive, University Park, Maryland, March 10.

The first two days of the seminar will include a visit to Mount Vernon, a worship service led by Dean Frank T. Wilson of the Howard University School of Religion, conferences with Dr Arthur S Flemming, director of the Office of Defense Mobilization, and Dr. Gabriel Hauge, the President's Eocnomic Advisor, visits to some of the foreign embassies and a dinner at the YWCA with columnist Marquis Childs as guest speaker.

On the last day of the seminar delegates will meet with the vice president, Senator Wiley of Wisconsin, two Democratic members of the Senate, two members of the House and will attend sessions of Congressional Committee Hearings and sessions of Congress.

Experimentation Basis Of Strength—Hutson

"The strength of education and the strength of democracy rests upon our willingness to start with experimentation and to build with ideas from whatever source these may come."

This view was emphaszed here last night by Dr. Harold H. Hutson, President of Greensboro College, who was guest speaker at the inaugural ceremonies of the Senate of the Dialectic Literary Society, on of the two oldest debating societies on the campus.

New officers inaugurated during the ceremonies were Beverly Webb, Greensboro, president; Larry McElroy, Marshall, president pro tempore; Jim Turner, Winston-Salem, critic; David Mundy, Black Mountain, clerk; Stephen Moss, Bethlehem, Pa., treasurer; Freeman Grant, Bethesda, Md., sergeant-at-arms, and Clyde Smith, Greensboro, chaplain.

"Education generally has fallen between two extreme points of view," Dr. Hutson said. One he described as being "simply a piling up of fact upon fact with resulting confusion or lack of interpretation.

"To know biology and physiology is not to guarantee health, and to know facts about physics is not to feel at home in one's world," the speaker asserted.

The second extreme point of view he called a "flight of fancy into the realm of reason."

The problems here, Dr. Hutson said, is that whole intellectual systems have been worked out which have not touched the bedwork of experimentation."

As an example of this he described Madame Curie's negative reception by scientists of her day "who did not approve her conclusions because they had their own system of facts which did not rest upon changing facts or experimentation."

Hitler instruction to the educational institutions of Germany to begin their teaching with racal superiority is another example, he said. "Their biology was reasonable but it started with the wrong facts."

Dr. Hutson attributed to these views the reason for complaint in many cases that colleges "are ivory towers which lose touch with the everyday world of fact."

Show Boat's Coming Friday

A UNC alumnus whose dramatic professional roles have taken him to distant parts of the world will combine talents with a University secretary-student wife in the leading roles of the Jerome Kern-Oscar Hammerstein musical, Show Boat, which the Carolina Playmakers will present in Memorial Hall here Friday through Sunday.

John Shearin, Weldon, and Mrs. Martha Fouse, Chapel Hill, will head the large cast for the first university theater performance of the famous musical, which was taken from Edna Ferber's novel of river life.

Performances will begin each night at 8:30 p.m.

'. . . CAN'T WAIT TO 'SEE' THE EASTER STORY:'

Blind Couple 'Sees' Planetarium

By BILLY ARTHUR

A 17th Century proverb reads in part: "Praise makes good men better . . ."

If that be true, Morehead Planetarium technicians and staff should now be inspired to even greater productions and performances as result of a generous compliment by two Planetarium visitors — the well known and popular blind couple, Rev. and Mrs. Alonzo Jordan of Raleigh. Rev. Mr. Jordan is chaplain of the N. C. House of Representatives, a post he has held since 1935.

"We were thrilled," said the Baptist minister after attending "Billions of Years Ago," the current Planetarium story of the creation as recorded in the Bible and conceived by scientists. "Mrs. Jordan and I enjoyed not only the music and the narration in the scriptural part but also the scientific part. The speaker was so clear in his explanations that we could just 'see' the constellations and the stars. Even Orion and the hunter. Who was the speaker?"

Told that the narrator at the performance he "saw" was Dr. Norman Mattis of the UNC public speaking department, Rev. Mr. Jordan said, "He was wonderful. The way he described the heavens we could 'see' them. and the man who gave the biblical part was good, too." He was John Ehle of the UNC Communications Department.

"The show was wonderful," the chaplain went on, "and my wife and I can't wait to 'see' the Easter Story."

'INSPIRED'

Planetarium Manager A. F. Jenzano said the staff "is inspired by the compliment. We have had in the past five years a number of visitors handicapand they have received more from our productions than the average person might think. When they compliment us, it inspires us all, and the staff is doubly appreciative."

A native of Edenton, Rev. Mr. Jordan is married to the former Miss Mae Piner of New Bern, who formerly was associated with the State Commission for the Blind. Together they operate a concession in one of the State Highway and Public Works Commission buildings in Raleigh, and Rev. Mr. Jordan is an assistant chaplain for the State Prison Department.

So popular have become his prayers at the opening of the daily sessions of the N. C. House of Representatives that this year they are being made a part of the House Journal for posterity.

Whitman Authority Stovall To Deliver Humanities Talk

Evolution Of Poet's Volume Will Be Topic

Dr. Floyd Stovall, professor of English here, will deliver the spring Humanities Faculty Lecture next Monday.

Dr. J. P. Harland, chairman of the Humanities Lectures Committee, announced that Dr. Stovall, an authority on Walt Whitman, will speak on "Leaves of Grass: The Evolution of a Book."

The lecture has been scheduled for 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall Auditorium, Dr. Harland said.

Dr. Stovall's topic is particularly timely, since this year marks the centennial of the publication of the first edition of "Leaves of Grass."

Many universities and organizations plan special observances in connection with this centennial, and Dr. Stovall's lecture will give UNC one of the earliest of the series of commemorations of Whitman's book.

The Humantiies Faculty Lectures are presented three times a year by the undergraduate division of the Humanities as a means of presenting faculty members to the University and general public. Dr. William Wells, also of the English Department, was the fall lecturer.

Dr. Stovall, a member of the UNC faculty since 1949, received his A.B., M.A., and Ph.D. degrees from University fo Texas.

Whitman Show In Library

A "very large exhibition" of works by and about Walt Whitman are now on display on the main floor and in the assembly exhibition room of the Library, according to I. T. Littleton, assistant to the librarian.

Included in the exhibition, which covers four cases of the main floor and continues in the assembly-exhibition room, is a group of 14 rare editions and rare books about Whitman which has been presented to the Library by Charles E. Feinburg, noted Whitman collector of Detroit, Mich., in honor of Prof. Floyd Stovall, who will deliver the spring Humanities Faculty Lecture on "Leaves of Grass: The Evolution of a Book." Included in the group is At the Graveside of Walt Whitman, published in 1892, the year of his death.

Feinburg has also lent photostats of Whitman manuscripts and a complete file of The Conservator, a periodical which was begun in 1890 by Horace Traubel, a close friend of Whitman. In the issues of the periodical are articles written by Whitman before his death, a special issue about him published upon his death and later articles about him.

OTHER ARTICLES

Other articles in the Library's exhibit are Leaves of Grass 100 Years After, a group of essays about the book, and The Solitary Hunter, the latest critical biography of Whitman. Professor Stovall reviewed The Solitary Hunter in the Feb. 5, 1955 issue of The Saturday Review.

Two broadsides (a sheet of paper containing one large page, or printed on one side only) are also on exhibit. One of those Whitman printed and circulated privately. It is a defense of his Leaves of Grass. The other is an advertisement of his books which was printed for him.

Various editions of Leaves of Grass, two facsimiles of first editions and biographies of Whitman are also on exhibition.

Legislature Is Voice Of Public—Larkins

"The greatest forum for public expression is the legislative body, which serves as the voice of democracy," John D. Larkins said last night at inaugural ceremonies of the Philanthropic Literary Society.

Larkins, who is legislative counsel to the Governor, chairman of the State Legislature's Advisory Budget Commission and State Democratic Chairman, spoke at the installation of spring semester officers for the Phi, one of two debating societies at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.

Frank Warren, Jr., Snow Hill, is new Phi speaker, succeeding Louis Brumfield of Yadkinville.

Other officers installed included Lawrence Matthews, Winston-Salem, speaker pro tem; Harold Downing, Fayetteville, parliamentarian; John Curtis, Bessemer City, critic; Dick Albert, Santa Fe, N. Mex., clerk, and Hill Johnston, Noroton Conn., sergeant-at-arms.

Larkins, who is also a member of the Visiting Committee of the University Board of Trustees, emphasized that without the ability of self-expression, "a man cannot rise above himself of even, express what is actually within him Without it he wastes himself in a vacuum."

Ability to express convictions comes only with practice, as is stressed by the Phi and other collegiate debating societies, Larkins added. "If I had my college days to relive, I would spend more time on public speaking and other expressive activities, and less time on fraternity and social life.

"Clear self-expression, essential to every man's success regardless of profession, is doubly important in a legislative body where elected representatives express not only their own ideas, but those of their constituents. Were it not for such media of expression as a legislative body, even the University here would not have been founded," Larkins said.

He compared a person who possesses education but no self-expressive powers to the Dead Sea "whose waters have become stagnant, lifeless and of no value The sea takes all it can receive but can give out nothing, expressionless. motionless and dead."

Larkins challenged the society members, as they acquire their education, to "resolve to lead out from ourselves, expression of thought and pass it on to others for their enlightenment and edification."

A reception honoring the guest speaker was held in Graham Memorial main lounge following the inaugural address and ceremonies.

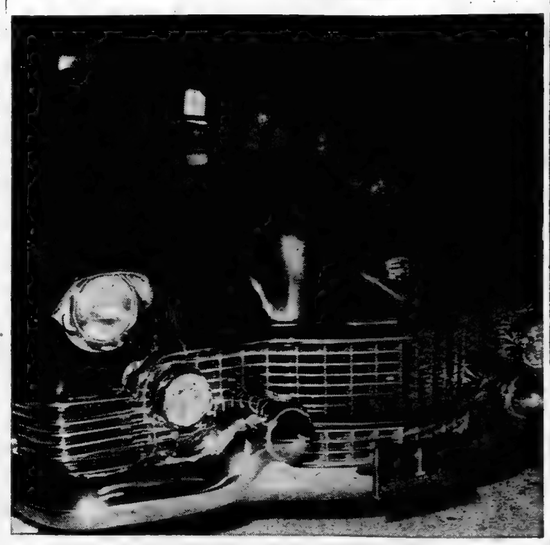
The Phi, active on the University campus since 1795, has included many prominent State and national officials on its rosters during their student days in Chapel Hill..

24 Tried By Men's Council

"During the fall semester a total number of 24 cases, some involving more than one person, were turned over to the Men's Honor Council . . ." according to a report given yesterday by Ogburn Yates, clerk of the Council.

"Of those cases which involved infractions of the Honor Code, eight students were suspended and two were placed on probation," said the report. "An official reprimand was given to one student, and an unofficial reprimand was given to another."



For violations of the Campus Code, the report said, "Three students were given official reprimands, and three were given unofficial reprimands."

According to the clerk's report, 21 students appearing before the Honor Council during last semester were found not guilty of violations of either the Campus or Honor Codes.

"Seven students were removed from probation, and three were reinstated back into the University," said the report.

"In one case heard by the Council," according to the report, "the defendant plead not guilty of altering his examination. However, the evidence presented, as well as the testimony of the instructor, proved to be so incriminating that the defendant was found guilty, and the sentence of suspension was rendered."

"In another case," concluded the report, "because of its nature, the defendant was referred to a University psychiatrist, and after examination, it was recommended that he leave school."

Carney Gone To Formosa; Won't Speak

Admiral Robert Carney, U. S. Chief of Naval Operations, will not appear as guest speaker of the Carolina Forum next Tuesday, said Bob Young, chairman of the Forum, yesterday. Carney, it was reported, has gone to Formosa to take part in the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization Conference.

General Matthew Ridgway, scheduled to address the Forum last Tuesday night, Young announced at the same time, will speak here some time during March.

Lefler To Talk At Meeting

"Early North Carolina Newspapers" will be the subject of Dr. Hugh T. Lefler, Kenan Professor of history, in an address at the University Press Club dinner meeting Monday, according to Bill Venable, president of the group.

The meeting will be held at Watts' Grill at 6 o'clock and will be open to all students and faculty members. Reservations should be made by noon Friday at the office of the Journalism School, according to Venable.

Dr. Lefler graduated from Trinity College (now Duke University) and headed the department of history and government at State College in Raleigh prior to joining the UNC faculty in 1934.

Club Chartered To Discuss Current Films

A new club which will have as its purpose the discussion and criticism of movies is being formed.

The club, which will be open to all students, faculty members and townspeople, will discuss such aspects of movies as acting, direction and production. It will write to actors, directors and studio heads and will send both majority and minority reports with each criticism.

Criticism will also be made of publications about movies. The club will work with Chapel Hill theater owners to try to improve the movies brought here.

According to the club's organizers, John Sipp and John Talbutt, the dues or membership fee for club members will be used only for such expenses and stationery and stamps. The club will sponsor no movies itself.

The first meeting of the club will be held Thursday night at 8 o'clock in the Woodhouse Conference Room of Graham Memorial.

4 To 1 For Reason

Add signs of Tar Heel sanity: The Trustees' 57-15 vote to allow Negroes to attend a three-week summer farm and home course at State College, despite the opposition of John W. Clark.

The Board of Trustees is not, by any means, an "integrate now" body; but neither are they a bigoted or unreasonable body.

We find it regrettable that Mr. Clark picked up 14 agreements; but a 4 to 1 margin of calmness and reason is more than can be expected in most deliberative groups. It is an encouraging margin for the University.

Mr. Burdick's Logic

"I would be unalterably opposed to the appointment of John Marshall Harlan as a member of the Supreme Court because he is a Rhodes Scholar."

Speaking those words as part of the long parade of dilly-dallying over the appointment of a promising new Supreme Court justice was the Hon. Usher L. Burdick, U. S. Congressman from North Dakota.

Mr. Burdick quotes a Chicago Tribune booklet which says,

> Rhodes scholarships were established for the primary purpose of instilling political bias in the minds of young Americans in favor of world federation, involving the surrender of American sovereignty.

And, runs Mr. Burdick's logic, "how can we support the Constitution and defend it against all enemies, foreign and domestic, if we are to contemplate relinquishing our sovereignty?"

The fact that John Marshall Harlan was a Rhodes scholar, and that the Chicago Tribune says Rhodes scholarships were established to push world federation, is apparently Mr. Burdick's sole reason for opposing the appointment of Mr. Harlan.

We were particularly crestfallen to read Mr. Burdick's speech in the Congressional Record, for Usher Burdick and one colleague were the only Congressmen brave enough to vote against the bill to outlaw the Communist Party when it passed into law last summer.

Spurious opposition to the appointment of a man to the Supreme Court because of a scholarship he once held we had thought to be far below Mr. Burdick's standards.

All this constitutes a warning to such outstanding students as Carolina's most recent Rhodes scholarship winner, Paul Likins, that even so innocent and honorable a thing as winning academic acclaim may be suspect in a suspicious world.

And we, shocked back into our shell of skepticism, are tempted to paraphrase the words spoken in Stuart England by the Earl of Strafford as he waited to lose his head to Parliament:

"Put not your trust in Western Republicans."

Ol' Joe? Haw, Haw!

A despot, it is said, doesn't fear eloquent critics preaching freedom: he fears a drunken poet who may crack a joke that will take hold.

At last America's most recent cloud of despotism seems to be lifting. The suspicion and acrimony and the general closing in against free inquiry and the attempt to equate anything that some people didn't like with communism seems to be slowly dissolving.

McCarthyism, people are saying, is not an "ism." It's a "was'm."

Cohn and Schine? "Katzenjammer kids," a recent writer called them. They are forgotten.

The Bar Association of New York is investigating the government's loyalty-security program. Much of the damage to our national thinking appears to be on the repair.

All is not yet well with us, of course. We still have a throbbing hangover. But—have you noticed?—nobody gets excited about Joseph Raymond McCarthy any more. They're cracking jokes about him, instead.

And the jokes, at last, have taken hold.

THE JET zoomed across the sky over the campus, and all in the class looked up from notebooks. It was a harrowing sound.

The professor had been talking about population and the growth of communities. And the jet, like a rude intruder, broke into his talk.

I couldn't help but think of the jet as an appropriate reminder of the grim side of things these days. While we talked of growth and building cities, the plane zoomed across the sky with a ringing buzz.

And, like others, I wondered what the bombs and planes that man has made will make man.

"Hope he wins a citation," quipped the professor, and for a moment we all laughed at ourselves.

IF THE Student Party sticks to its present course, Manning Muntzing is almost certain to get the nomination for student body president.

Don Fowler is the other leading candidate and is not weak at all in his support. However, the fact that Muntzing's Inter-Dormitory Council activities (he's president) have made him better known will probably turn the tide.

Nevertheless, the SP nominating session for student body chief will be by far the most exciting political meeting on campus this spring. This will be one of those times when the SP will be almost evenly divided.

Perhaps it will be speeches that turn the tide for Muntzing, the usual idealistic-type oratory that ornaments SP functions. The SP's orator David Reid, however, is an ardent Fowler supporter.

BIG QUESTION in the University Party, it seems, is who will run for vice-president.

With Ed McCurry as good as already nominated for President by the UP, the center of interest is the second-spot post.

Bev Webb or Jack Stevens will be the UP's choices for vice-president. And here, again, there may be some political excitement.

Stevens, like so many would-be candidates, insists that he's going to Law School next year, and Webb is silent.

BRIGADOONS MAY become a new Carolina tradition, but at four bucks a throw, it seems to me that's mighty expensive "tradition" for the dorm man.

There's no doubt that the promoters of Brigadoons, a dorm man's answer to the Germans Club, are well-meaning. They may have a great plan, but this reporter can't help but see dollar signs.

YOU Said It, Pro & Con

More On Segregation

Editor:

You flaming Yankee liberals come to a Southern, state-supported university and by dent of your brash egotism gain control of the student Legislature and newspaper, then you proceed to publicize unpopular beliefs and doctrines in such a way as to delude the people of the state into thinking that your wild ideas on racial questions are held by the general student body.

You endeavor to make psuedo-mortyrs of Charles Jones and his radical group of followers; you editorialize on the virtues of racial amalgamation, you choose your front page articles in an obvious attempt to misinform the student body and the people of the state on the true state of racial relations, you unceasingly call for the disruption of the established social order, and then retreat north after four years to the comfort of your all-white residential districts, your all-white restaurants and bars and your all-white theatres. While the Southern students reap the whirlwind that you have so well sown.

The Administration asks the state Legislature for funds to operate and expand the University, and the Assembly points to the strange ideas that its sons pick up here; it says that after two or three years they no longer seem able to converse on social subjects in the same terms as their families use, their sons are seemingly absorbing a foul miasmic doctrine that could destroy the peaceful relations between the races that has lasted one hundred years in the South.

Now the Administration knows that this is not true, that only a few Yankee fire-bugs are playing around the ammunition dump of race relations; but if it points out the root of the problem the Legislature might make it difficult for foreigners and Yankees to enroll here, and it knows that no University can be truly great unless there is the most liberal interchange of ideology available to the students. This spark that generates greatness in a University must not be put out, but you trouble mongers are evidently trying your best to do so.

I have tried to explain some of the facts of Southern life to you, so now I say to you, tone down your efforts to destroy the University or begone; you have outlived your usefulness, you have been here too long for the good that you do, you are helping no one, not even yourselves, so go.

Milton H. McGowan

(Mr. McGowan's letter is directed toward the controllers of the student Legislature and the Daily Tar Heel, whom he refers to as "flaming Yankee liberals." With a little investigation, Mr. McGowan could have found that the editor of The Daily Tar Heel is from Charlotte, the managing editor from Raleigh, the associate editors from Charlotte and Mebane, the business manager from Hickory, the sports editor from Norfolk, Virginia. The speaker of the student Legislature is from Concord. The circulator of the anti-segregation petition is from Williamston. The remaining student characterized as a "nigger-loving liberal" by William G. Grimes in his recent letter is from Fayetteville.—Editor.)

He's Ashamed Of Us? Well, We're Ashamed Of Him!

Editor:

Let me begin by saying that I have tried to take a calm but positive pro-integration stand ever since the disputed decision of the Supreme Court of the United States was handed down last year. I know that this evolution, and that is what it should be termed as, is not going to be easy on any of us, white or Negro, but it is upon us and is not going to be stopped by a few loud-mouthed radicals.

I have stood aside and kept my beliefs to myself long enough though. When persons present statements to the public as Mr. Grimes has done, they deserve an indignant answer from every North Carolinian who proclaims to believe in what can be termed as just plain and simple justice.

I don't think Mr. Grimes need fear that he will be termed as a "letter writer" at all. In fact, I don't believe that his name will even be remembered by those who read his letter for more than just a short while. People don't usually waste much time characterizing individuals who preach in such prejudiced tones. The one reaction that Mr. Grimes' letter will receive is that of a stirred up indignation from those on this campus and from those in this state who really possess that all-important value of fair play.

As for tagging The Daily Tar Heel staff as well as our campus politicians with such slurring names uttered in low tones of hate, Mr. Grimes only fortifies the picture of ignorant arrogance that he has presented of himself to the University and to the state.

Mr. Grimes must have struck off his remark concerning his shame of his University without a thought of wearing the shoe on the other foot. Perhaps he is ashamed of his University, and should he feel that way it is his right to do so, but only the Lord in Heaven knows how his University must feel about him.

If ever an institution had a right to be ashamed of a student, the University of North Carolina has a right to be ashamed of Mr. Grimes. I've never met him myself, but I find myself unable to foster any feelings toward Mr. Grimes but those of shame. He and his kind are of no great concern to this state or to the Nation as a whole because America has already proven her ability to withstand prejudiced persons and groups. Indeed, I put Mr. Grimes in the same category with the Klu Klux Klan and those in the old hierarchy of Georgia politics, but these persons and groups are no serious threat, only a painful thorn that must be removed.

In conclusion, I must admit that we kids at Carolina have made some flagrant blunders at times, but after all, we haven't had all important year of experience in the hard outside world that you have had. Yes Mr. Grimes, we will cease, but only after simple justice has been done. On the other hand, you and your kind will only cease when you have to eat your words.

Shame, Mr. Editor, For Advocating Love

Editor:

I, being half white (the other half a disgusting yellow), feel that I have some basis for assuming the glorious and pure white banner proudly carried by the Supreme Race and think it is my duty to thank Mr. William Grimes for expressing the opinion of the majority of the students at this University.

This is obviously the opinion of the majority because the mass of the students here are of the unsoiled White Race. After all, Mr. Editor, just because most of the students here do not express this opinion or when they do it is with a blush or an apologetic voice, does not mean that the multitude does not feel this way.

Mr. Grimes indubitably has written his letter in a true Christian service to our God. Naturally this is so because, as every honest Christian knows, our God is also Pure White and naturally loves his Pure White children the most and naturally does not want them to soil their Germanic Whiteness by mingling with those damn Negroes (excuse me, Mr. Grimes, I mean niggers).

Shame, Mr. Editor, that you should permit any ill logic, such as advocating a love between individuals regardless of racial characteristics or any other differentiating factors, that you should let your paper stand for open-mindedness and brother love and racial equality.

Don't you know that the fair-haired majority of this state will not permit it? Go west, young man.

Love in KKK,

Mary Lynn

The Letter, Says Barbre, Was His

Editor:

With regard to the article written by Charles Dunn concerning the pro-segregation petition in which I took a big part, I would like to clarify a couple of points.

First of all, the letter I wrote last semester about our petition which I was accused of not writing, is my own, and the views expressed in it are basically the beliefs of all the co-sponsors.

The fact that Ben (Bobrow) and several others sharing our beliefs are out of state students is no reason why we should reject their help, just as the supporters of integration are also eager to get help from all sections.

I hope that in the future The Daily Tar Heel will concentrate more on the issues rather than indulge in name-calling and innuendo.

'Boss, Do You Want To See Government Get Ahead of Private Enterprise?'

The Quarterly: 'A Mediocrity Of Apathy And Compromise'

Bill Scarborough

(Mr. Scarborough, a senior in the University, disagrees as follows with The Daily Tar Heel's review of the current Carolina Quarterly.—Editor.)

I take gentle, but diametric exception to a review of the Carolina Quarterly by Ed Yoder, which appeared in these columns last week: the Quarterly is not worth its price, and stands in likelihood never of being so again unless its editors institute a drastic re-direction of policy.

Any magazine has a two-fold obligation: to its readers in the selection of literature worthy of public attention; to its contributors in the provision of diligent editing, and presentation in a format advantageous to the writing.

In these terms the Carolina Quarterly fails. Avowedly a magazine directed to student audiences, it should present a fair proportion of writing from student authors; it does not. Since students of the University pay for the Quarterly, writers from among their number should receive equitable representation; they do not.

WHITHER THE LOCAL FLAVOR?

A quick perusal of the contents shows that indigeneous pieces compose almost exactly half the bulk of the magazine, half of which in turn is devoted to a play by an alumnus who has had no formal connection with the University for almost a year; of the poems, not one was written by a University student. This does not constitute a primary concern with local writers and local materials; that writers of merit are here is amply demonstrated by the Quarterlies of last year;; such writers as Doris Betts and Louise Hardemann achieved national acclaim for their work, and one topical article enjoyed the prominence of being reprinted twice elsewhere, once in the Southern Architect. We find in the present issues no writing worthy of equal attention, yet there is no evidence that there are no writers here capable of its production; that they are not submtting to the Carolina Quarterly is patently obvious; I qualify that remark with these criticisms of work in the current issue:

The editorial has no relevance to the substance of the magazine, or for that matter, to editorial policy or the production of literature either. Editorials are ideally commentaries germaine to the activities and aims of the publication in which they appear; finished style in their execution is no objection, but they are not in themselves belle-lettristic writing. Editor Dunn might have followed the example of certain predecessors and omitted comment when there was nothing to say.

A FEW PAGES OF OPINION

The lone article is a sad descent from former times, when it was the custom to print several of substantial length. Worse, Mr. Archie Hess, the author, disqualifies himself by his own admission as a competent student and evaluator of his topic and fails to supply the essential modicum of factual substantiation any scholarly topic such as this demands, producing a few pages of daubtfully qualified opinion.

Of the two stories in this issue, "Suttee," by Robin White, is the better; Mr. White is a writer of some polish, whose chief ability is characterization; intimately sacrificing his very plausible main character to a proportionately implausible fate.

The second story, "Journey Before Dawn," by David Elliott, is best characterized as 'sophmoric;" Mr. Elliott has a facility with narration which he should cultivate, but his style is on the whole derivative, his tone evanescent, his plot structurally weak, suffering from uncertainty of purpose, and containing many standard devices and cliches which he must eliminate.

His theme, along with that of "Suttee," is becoming somewhat shopworn on this campus; about a little Mexican boy guilty of a miracle, "Journey Before Dawn" is the third story in two issues concerned with juveniles and juvenilia; at the risk of appearing ogrish, I must confess that I'm damn tired of children.

TYROS DISADVANTAGE

A new feature, "Best Freshman Writing," is composed of two short pieces, both by veterans. There are other ways of encouraging neophytes than publishing them. Material in a magazine must be judged by common standards, and the work of the two freshmen selected is at a distinct disadvantage, because it is classified as tyro, and must be judged by separate criteria.

An editor may criticize and instruct promising young writers, but he should not commit himself to including their work until it can hold its own, qualitatively, with the rest of the magazine. Exercises in writing, such as these, may well be indicative of potential talent, but an audience is by nature interested in reading only the polished result of such proclivities.

As regards poetry in this issue, we had reason to expect a better and more extensive selection from poetry editor Bill Rivera, who in past times has made some sound, if hyper-subjective and polemical choices. With one exception the poems, only four in number, are inclined to a too-close conformity with a single artistic attitude, one set of poetic criteria, which one would suspect of being Mr. Rivera's own, had they not so many affinities with certain of the principles of Ezra Pound.

The one anomaly, "A Little Conservative," whose author is totally justified in remaining anonymous, is an incredible aberration from the manner of the other three poems, and is incongruous in their context; if Mr. Rivera's appreciation and comprehension of poetry are so nebulously and uncritically catholic as to include the disciplined measures of Lawrence Lipton's "Libation to the Lesser Gods," the somewhat phthisic but adequate imagery of Seymour Gresser's "Gender for Kinsmen," and the glib fatuities of "A Little Conservative," I urge that he undertake a searching re-perusal of his aesthetic theories.

As before mentioned, none of the poetry came from Chapel Hill; this would indicate that there are no poets here capable of meeting the standards, yet we find Mr. Rivera in his book review of In This The Marian Year by H. A. Sieber, lavishing extravagant praise on this Chapel Hill resident's first published volume of verse, but making no effort to explain why he has neglected to solicit and publish contributions from Mr. Sieber.

RUPTURED SALESMAN

An added feature of this issue deserves mention only because it represnts recognition of an area of writing long ignored. With the publication of "The Salesman Ruptured by a Streetcar," by David W. Ashburn, attention is directed to the fact that drama forms an integral part of the Chapel Hill literary scene. Many good regional dramas have been produced here; tragically, "Salesman" is not one of them; a one-act farce, it was conceived as satire, poorly executed as low parody, and is an unfortunate selection to initiate a custom which is worthy of continuance.

The book review selection, representing the work of University students exclusively, has its salient defect in its severely limited scope. Of the five books reviewed, one is a critical biography, one a volume of poetry, and the other three current best-selling novels. While students at this University undeniably read best-sellers, they may read much earlier reviews of them in weekly magazines; properly the book review section of a quarterly publication should be composed of articles on books of a more substantial and enduring interest, books that do not receive prominent examination in the popular press; this would be a true service to the books themselves, as well as to potential readers.

By far the best of the reviews is that of Hamilton Basso's The View from Pompey's Head, by Robert F. Looney, who despite having made three glaring errors of fact, bring to his job a thorough knowledge of Southern Literature and makes a well-considered evaluation of the book and its importance.

PREY TO ALL THE ILLS

The Carolina Quarterly has, from its inception, led an invalid's existence; prey to all the usual ills of an outlet for beginners and amateurs, it has nevertheless persisted in a tenuous existence for six years. Its circulation has never exceeded 1,600; today it is less than half that figure. Some of this decline may be attributed to student apathy toward student writing, but writing worthy of consideration has always found an attentive audience, however small; there is little indication of such a group's supporting the Quarterly today. In the current issue symptoms of a more pernicious and lethat malaise are apparent; it is characterized in inconsistent editorial policies, irregular, fluctuating printing schedules and sale prices, and more damaging, inferior makeup: the cover is poorly designed; typography and design cramped; pages are of uneven length; poems are crowded under the endings of stories in inconspicuous positions; vestigial advertising is clotted in the back.

At the first of this academic year editor Jim Dunn announced a raise in subscription rates, promising four issues per year in place of the customary three; individual copies of the fall issue, marked for sale at thirty-five cents, cost irate non-student readers fifty cents; the winter issue is marked for sale at forty-five cents and plans to publish a fourth issue have been abandoned.

THE EFFECT IS A MEDIOCRITY

On the basis of this evidence, it appears that the Quarterly has suffered a fundamental disorientation from its proper aims; it has isolated itself from the local writers who provide its primary source of material; its format and design appear born more of expediency and exigency than of planning and discriminaiton; immediacy of appeal rather than intrinsic literary value appears to govern selection of stories; pervading the entire magazine is an aura of deep-seated aesthetic compromise. The effect is a mediocrity more serious than the inherent limitations of writers and editors: it is the mediocrity of apathy and artistic nihilism, for which there is no excuse.

While I respect Mr. Yoder's critical acumen, I feel that he has not given the Quarterly its proper criticism, that he has tended to be rather, a Quarterly apologist. A publication which receives no criticism of its mistakes tends to fall victim to the smugness thus induced in its editors, who consider the silence of critics sufficient justification for perpetuating past errors. The Quarterly has fallen into this trap.

CUFF NOTES

By BERNIE WEISS

Daily Tar Heel Sports Editor

What someone else is saying:

Bill Riehl, in the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch—

"While most of us are looking forward to the opening of baseball's Spring training season, golf, track, tennis and all the warm weather sports, a small group of people are working diligently at the Khedive Temple of the Shrine on Freemason Street.

"Theirs is a year-around job . . . the planning and staging of the annual Oyster Bowl football game for the benefit of the Shriners Crppled Children's Hospitals.

"This year North Carolina and South Carolina will be the competing teams on Saturday, Nov. 5, at Foreman Field.

"In all the excitement of the game, all the color, all the detail, most of us overlook the real purpose so, perhaps it is well to reflect at this time just how much the Oyster Bowl has meant to hundreds of children, many of whom may not even be aware of such an undertaking.

"In eight games the Oyster Bowl has produced $351,393.14 for the hospitals . . . a figure that is truly unusual when you take into consideration that the bowl is still young and in many respects still going through growing pains.

"Last year's Navy-Duke meeting, out of which came the Sugar Bowl and Orange Bowl winners, was the No. 1 contest from the standpoint of national interest and it also produced the most money, $74,685.62 . . .

"The Oyster Bowl long ago ceased to be the private undertaking of the Shrine. It's a community project now in which people throughout the area join . . . and for which they have every right to be proud."

N. C. State College's basketball circles are beginning to feel the heat applied once more.

Two years ago the NCAA didn't like the way State conducted "tryouts" for its cagers, and as a penalty the Wolfpack was declared ineligible from NCAA tournament play this season.

Just recently La Salle coach Ken Loeffler blasted Everett Case's policy of pressuring non-conference teams, such as La Salle, to play in the Coliseum with the money angle as inducement. State wouldn't play that team away because there wouldn't be enough green to satisfy State's money-hungry coffers.

Now, George Washington University's director of athletics, Max Farrington, says that the Colonials won't play State again unless State agrees to play in Washington. He conceded that the Coliseum offered better facilities for basketball and was far superior to the GW court, but he said it "isn't fair" to be forced into playing State in Raleigh all the time. GW has lost 15 straight times to State.

Farrington also lashed out at the highly partisan State fans, and said that "it would take a particularly strong-minded and strong-willed official not to bend under the constant haranguing of . . . the crowd."

He didn't complain about the officiating, but noted that the referees called 21 personals on GW and 10 on State in last Saturday's game at the Coliseum, won by State, 68-59.

Practice seems to make perfect for Jim Beatty, the Tar Heel distance runner who will travel a long but not too difficult road to national prominence soon.

The fact that Beatty won both the mile and two-mile race Saturday as Carolina snatched the Indoor Games crown away from Maryland proves the point. Only three other persons have won both races in the 26-year history of the Games.

Beatty's conquests came as a result of diligent practice sessions. He ran through every event from the 220-yard dash to the two-mile in preparation for the meet. At times he ran as many as eight 220's in a day. On other days he ran three half-miles.

And his time Saturday in the mile was not his best. He ran a 4:15.8 just one week prior to the meet in a practice run against State. Saturday's time was 4:16.3.

They say that many sports writers are frustrated athletes. We have one at The Daily Tar Heel in Ray Linker, the assistant sports editor. Linker, somewhat of a track man himself, ran against Beatty in his high school days but finally gave up. He realized it was a hopeless cause.

Beatty, only a sophomore, is surely destined for stardom. His practice sessions, however, will only contribute in part to that goal. His competition will push him also.

In the Atlantic Coast Conference there are a number of other great distance runners. State's Mike Shea, Maryland's Alva Grimm to name a few. Knowing he must defeat these persons to stay on top, Beatty will push himself to greater heights.

UNC's former world record holder in the 100-yard dolphim breast stroke, Buddy Baarcke, last week qualified by gaining first place in the 100-meter backstroke in the western trials for the Pan-American Games to be held in Mexico later this month.

Baarcke is also a member of the record-breaking 150-yard medley relay team which set the standard in the Pan-American trials. Baarcke, now in the Army, swam with two west coast boys. He will represent the U. S. in the games.

Rookie Howard Limping Through Yankee Drills

ST. PETERSBURG, March 1 (AP)—Elston Howard, the star rookie of the New York Yankees, hobbled through the club's first spring workout today. The young Negro, who figures to be the first of his race to make the club, injured his right knee while playing in Puerto Rico two weeks ago and still is limping.

Dr. Sidney Gaynor, team physician, said Howard would have to take it easy for a few more days.

Manager Casey Stengel said Howard will be given a chance to make the club as a reserve player once he is physically able to train.

The manager named three returning men as his regular outfield today, awarding the steady jobs to Irv Noren, who led the club at bat with .319 last year, as his left fielder.

Rosenbluth On All-ACC Team; Mayer, Hemric, Shavlik, Wilkinson Picked

GREENSBORO, March 1. (AP)—Dick Hemric of Wake Forest and Buzz Wilkinson of Virginia are repeaters on the All-Atlantic Coast Conference basketball team announced today by the Atlantic Coast Sports Writers Assn.

Hemric, senior center who holds the major college career scoring record of 2,539 points, was a unanimous choice of the 50 writers who voted. So was Ronnie Shavlik, North Carolina State College, junior forward. Wilkinson, senior guard, was chosen for the first team on all but one ballot. He's the nation's No. 2 scorer this season.

The team was chosen without regard to position. The votes, on the basis of five points for a first team choice, three for a second team choice: Hemric and Shavlik 250, Wilkinson 248, Rosenbluth 223, Mayer 219.

The second team, with votes: Bob Kessler of Maryland 161, Bill Yarborough of Clemson 150, Joe Belmont of Duke 123, Vic Molodet of North Carolina State 123, and Lowell (Lefty) Davis of Wake Forest 75.

The third team is Jerry Vayda of North Carolina, Bill Miller of Virginia, Lee Collins of South Carolina, Bob Everett of Maryland, and Junior Morgan of Duke and Cliff Dwyer of North Carolina State, who tied.

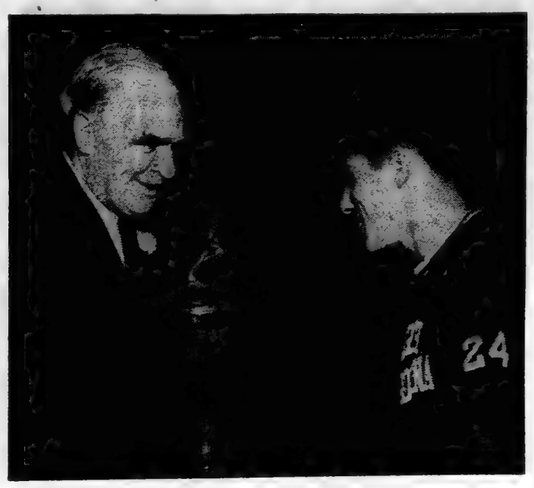
Athlete of the Week!

Beatty Takes Two Key Events In Games Sat.

By RAY LINKER

For his outstanding performances in leading North Carolina to the ACC Indoor Games crown here Saturday, star distance man Jim Beatty has been selected by The Daily Tar Heel sports staff as "Athlete of the Week."

In the games, of which the conference group was one of four divisions, the Tar Heel ace won the Weil Mile with the second fastest winning time in the 26-year history of the Games. Only the record-holding Jim Davis has won the mile with a faster time than Beatty's 4:16.3. Davis set the record of 4:12.5 in 1940.



A little more than an hour passed before Beatty lined up with some 15 to 20 runners to tackle the two-mile run, but exactly nine minutes and 25.5 seconds later he was back where the race started, the new record holder for the event by nine seconds.

IN THE MILE, the lead has changed between Beatty and Maryland's Alva "Burr" Grimm eight times before Beatty opened up with a 62-second last quarter to win by more than 40 yards. He started the two-mile with an aching side, and ran the first part of the race in fifth position. He slowly picked up the pace, passing one runner after another, until only the leader, Mike Shea of State, was in front of him. With a big burst of speed on the last lap he glided by Shea to win, this time by 20 yards. His hurting side proved later to be only a tightened muscle.

Beatty's 10 points aided considerably in the Tar Heel 36-35½ victory over Maryland, the defending champs in the conference division.

The runner's fine showing here brought UNC Coach Dale Ranson to acclaim Beatty as the best distance boy Carolina has ever had, and that he will be one of the top collegiate distance men in the country this year. Beatty has the proper approach to competition, Ranson said, and has confidence in himself, plus being willing to do all the work that is necessary to be a top-notch runner.

His 4:16.3 in the mile Saturday was not the best time he has turned in for that event. He ran a 4:15.8 just one week prior to the meet in a practice run against N. C. State.

Early Forecasts Of State's Having Sizzler True; 'Pack Carries Nine-Game Win Streak

RALEIGH, March 1. (AP)—Word was out early in the basketball season that Everett Case would have another top team at North Carolina State, particularly by Atlantic Coast Conference tournament time.

The tournament opens here Thursday afternoon and the late fall forecasts have been borne out. State has not been beaten this month, having won nine in a row, including seven in the conference to drive to the top and clinch No. 1 seeding and a place against eighth-ranked Clemson at 7:30 Thursday night.

After early season losses to Maryland and North Carolina, State's Wolfpack came on to whip both in return games and finish with a 12-2 ACC record.

As in most years under Case, State has no ACC scoring leader, but its classy bench simply wears down the opposition. To be sure, 6-7 Ronnie Shavlik, the Denver, Colo., junior, hs been a marvelous rebounder and seldom hits below 20 points a game. He, perhaps, more than anyone else, comes close to being the key man.

BUT THE SQUAD has been fortunate in having fellows like Vic Molodet, Ronnie Scheffel, John Maglio and Dave Gotkin at guard; centers Cliff Dwyer and Bob Seitz, both 6-10, and forwards Phil DiNardo, Nick Pond and Cliff Hafer. They've all taken a hand at the hero business. This competition for starting berths has resulted in a healthy situation under which a fellow has to put out in the knowledge that there's somebody else on the bench just aching to replace him if he can't get the job done.

The unfortunate part of the situation, from a State standpoint, is that the Wolfpack, still serving an NCAA-imposed probation for violating rules against tryouts, will not be eligible to play in the NCAA tournament later this month if it wins here. That honor probably will go to the runnerup team. State will play in the AAU tournament at Denver in late March.

STATE RANKED fifth in this week's Associated Press poll. The only other ACC team in the top 20 was Maryland which ranked 18th.

State ran up well over 100 points in each of its two regular season meetings with Clemson, but the Tigers have had their moments and have Bill Yarborough, No. 6 scorer in the nation.

Thursday's second game, set for 9 p.m., matches North Carolina and Wake Forest.

The program begins with an afternoon twin bill, Maryland playing Virginia at 2 p.m. and Duke facing South Carolina at 4.

Swedish Gymnastics Team Performs Here Tonight; CHHS Band Will Play

The national Swedish gymnastics team, representing the Scandinavian country's finest male and female gymnastic talent, will be making its next-to-last appearance in its tour of the United States tonight when it performs in the Woollen Gym.

A concert by the Chapel Hill High School band will precede the exhibition. The concert will begin at 7:30.

The group of highly talented gymnasts, including a host of former Olympic performers, is rounding out a tour which included stops at 31 American cities. Last stop on the long tour will come Friday night when the Swedes appear in Baltimore.

The Chapel Hill performance will be the only one which will be given in this area by the Swedes, who were recently featured in an issue of Sports Illustrated.

W. D. Carmichael Jr., University of North Carolin vice-president and finance officer, will welcome the team in pre-exhibition ceremonies. John Motley Morehead, prominent North Carolina alumnus and former ambassador to Sweden, and Governor Luther Hodges, have also been invited to participate in the welcoming.

The exhibition, much of which will be done to musical accompaniment, will include free standing exercises, lightning speed tumbling, work on the balance beam and uneven parallel bars, synchronized calisthenics, jumping and vaulting, exercises on the standard parallel bars and horizontal bar, individual free standing exercises and high table jumping.

The Swedes will have several former Olympic performers in each of the events.

Also on tap for the Chapel Hill exhibition is a series of novelty numbers, designed not only to demonstrtae the team's great gymnastic ability but to provoke laughter as well.

More than 4,000 tickets have been put on sale for the event, with all tickets calling for reserved seats.

FROSH BASEBALL

All candidates for freshman baseball who did not attend Monday's meeting are requested to report to Navy Field today dressed for practice. Drills will get under way at 3 o'clock.

Terps Favored In Mat Tourney

Maryland's Terps will be top heavy favorites in the first annual Atlantic Coast Conference wrestling meet, which will be held in the University of North Carolina's Woollen Gymnasium Friday and Saturday.

Maryland is undefeated in conference competition and last year won the conference championship decided on a dual meet basis. Th Terps have been beaten this year by only Penn State and Navy.

Semi-finals are scheduled Friday night with finals in both the consolation and championship Saturday night.

Karl Kitt of the United States Naval Academy and Johnny Guiton of Myers Park High School, Charlotte, have been appointed referees for the meet.

It will be th first time North Carolina has ever been host to a confrence wrestling meet.

PLAYED IN NCAA REGIONALS

The only University of North Carolina basketball team to participate in the NCAA Eastern Regionals was the 1941 squad which was coached by Bill Lange.

Williams Still Out Of Bosox Camp

SARASOTA, Fla., March 1 (AP)—Three Red Sox were missing from camp today as Boston Manager Mike Higgins, expressing complete satisfaction with the condition of the squad, greeted 42 players in his first official session as the new pilot.

Catcher Sammy White, rookie pitcher George Susce—son of the Kansas City coach—and outfielder Ted Williams were the reluctant players.

ARGUING & NOMINATIONS WERE CAUSE:

No Bills Up For Vote Thursday Night

Record: UP—8; SP—26;

By NEIL BASS

A silence uncommon to the usual procedures of the student Legislature will probbaly dominate the session when group convenes tomorrow night. The reasons behind this unnatural atmosphere are twofold.

First of all there were no new measures introduced last week because the group haggled to such lengths over the Student Party's Victory Village bill and another measure calling for "clarification" of the elections law, that time ran out on them.

Secondly, nominations have taken priority on the Carolina political scene. Thus the two parties are devoting all-out effort to the cause of candidate picking.

So now is as good a time as any to look back over the bills and resolutions the two political organizations have made bear fruit in legislative convenings to this date.

According to the official record that Martin Jordan, speaker, keeps in tidy order, the SP has introduced, fought for and passed some 26 measures this year. For contrast the UP has pushed through eight bills that met final approval.

Some of the highlights of the SP docket were the passing of bills requesting that: (1) A Veterans Affairs Commission be appointed to look into the problems of veterans; (2) The vending machine profits in dormitories be returned to the individual dorm social funds and, (3) That two class-free Saturdays be designated each semester.

Some of the keynotes of the UP championed measures that attracted "ayes" from the solons called for: (1) The elimination of the compulsory two years of physical education for veterans; (2) The provision of maid service for dormitories (this was referred to a committee that later reported the idea not feasible); (3) The investigation of gasoline prices in Chapel Hill.

Honors for the most controversial bill introduced in Legislature up to this date probably go to the Honor System "leniency" bill that Dave Reid (SP) introduced. Legislators gave the idea the go sign, but the student body voted it down in a referendum.

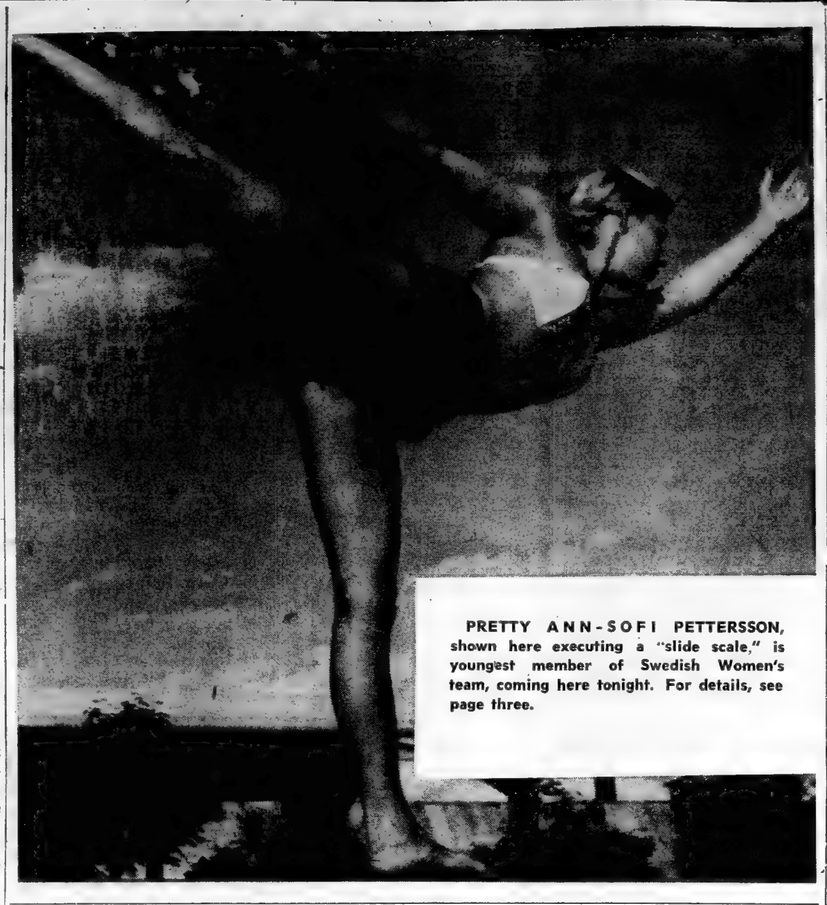
Comerford has been collecting since 1927 and the present tour of his exhibition has included colleges and museums. He is offering his collection for sale as he plans to return to Japan in the near future.



Most of the blocks are 20th century and are either originals or blocks made after the old Japanese masters, according to the collector.

WC's Arts Festival Scheduled

GREENSBORO, March 2.—The drama portion of the 12th annual Woman's College Festival of the Arts, March 10, 11, 12, is introducing this year a new feature, a symposium on the "Proper Functions of the College Theater" with three well-known drama leaders as guest speakers.

These speakers are Walter Prichard Eaton, one of the founders of the Theater Guild and for some years head of the Yale University School of Drama; Leo Brady, professor of speech and drama at Catholic University, playwright and novelist, and Norris Houghton, co-founder of the famous Phoenix Theater in New York City.

In connection with the drama festival and symposium, arrangements have been made with the Carolina Dramatic Association to hold the Piedmont District Festival and the Carolina Dramatic Festival here on the same dates. High school, community and college drama groups have been invited to present examples on their work.

The Woman's College Students' Theater, directed by Michael Casey, Drama Department head, will give two performances of The House of Bernarda Alba, by Federico Garcia Lorca, on March 11 and 12.

The WC student play will have an all-woman cast, with Thomasine Strother of High Point in the leading role of Bernarda Alba. The highly dramatic play was written by the modern Spanish playwright, Lorca, who lost his life in the Spanish civil war.

The dance portion of the arts festival was held last week. The music and writing portions are scheduled for later in March.

Howes Concert Set Tuesday

Arthur Howes, founder and director of the Organ Institute at Andover, Mass., will be heard in concert at Hill Hall Tuesday at 8 p.m.

Howes will play works by Bach, Kellner, Buxtehude, Pachelbel, Brahms and Widor.

As organist of Phillips Academy, Howes' performance of organ music attracted unusual attention and interest among the students. He has recently given up teaching in order to devote himself entirely to concertizing and conducting.

Howes has been associated with the series of summer organ concerts at Andover.

This third concert in the Tuesday Evening Series of the second semester is open to the public without charge.

Legislature

The student Legislature will meet tonight at 7:30. Convening place is the Philatrophic Assembly Hall on the fourth floor of New East.

Brubeck Coming Wednesday

Dave Brubeck, above at the piano, and his quartet will come to Carolina next Wednesday for a two-hour concert. The concert, scheduled from 4 to 6 p.m. in Memorial Hall, will be sponsored by UNC Germans Club.

PENNY A VOTE:

Miss Blue & White To Be Selected By Monogramers

Voting for the Miss Blue and White Contest, sponsored by the UNC Monogram Club, will be held in the Y lobby on March 11, 12, 14 and 15.

The contest will be on a penny-a-vote basis, and the proceeds will go to the Monogram Club's scholarship fund and also for orphans' parties.

The Monogram Club is sponsoring the contest in conjunction with the Blue-White football game, the formal climax to winter practice, which will be played March 19 in Kenan Stadium.

Contestants for the contest this year have been chosen by each woman's dormitory and sorority. Contestants for last year were chosen by the Monogram Club.

Girls who have been chosen to enter the contest are Misses Carol Taylor, Carr; Kay Browne, McIver; Luanne Thornton, Alderman; Jackie Van Hook, Nurses' Dorm; Libbie McDowell, Smith;

Misses Nancy Buran, Spencer; Pat Fossum, Kenan; Ann Wrenn, Tri Delta; Ann Penn, Pi Phi; Jackie Wilkins, Alpha Gam;

Misses Nancy Whisnant, Kappa Delta; Liz Lynn, Alpha Delta Pi, and Sara Fair, Chi Omega.

Pictures of the contestants will be on the bulletin board in the Y lobby during the voting. The contestant receiving the most pennies will be the queen and the remaining 12 girls will be sponsors, six for each team.

The queen and sponsors will be presented on the field at half-time of the Blue-White game and will be escorted by members of the Monogram Club. The queen will present trophies to the Head Coach of the Year and the Freshman Coach of the Year as voted on by the Monogram Club. Coaches will not be announced until halftime of the game.

Guide To North Carolina Set For Publication By UNC Press

The first complete guide to places, people and events in the Old North State to be compiled since 1939 will be published by the University of North Carolina Press in April.

The North Carolina Guide, edited by Blackwell P. Robinson of High Point College, will be a new edition, completely revised, of North Carolina: A Guide to the Old North State, the 1939 volume which was one of the American Guide Series.

The new volume will show that North Carolina, once a "vale of humility between two peaks of pride," has become in recent decades "something of a phenomenon even to itself."

With its 16 maps and 64 pages of illustrations to supplement the reading matter, the guidebook presents a coordinated picture that goes far to explain why the state in some quarters is regarded as the "South of North and North of South."

It contains a brief history of the state, by Hugh T. Lefler of the University Faculty a detailed description of the states' wealth of natural resources, by B. W. Wells of North Carolina State College, and a lively account of the present scene in North Carolina, by William T. Polk of The Greensboro Daily News, author of Southern Accent.

Stacy Dormitory Says Rebel Yell Can Stay On

Stacy Dormitory voted in a dorm meeting last Tuesday night unanimously to continue its newspaper, The Rebel Yell.

According to a Stacy spokesman, there had been complaints that the paper was not worth the money and effort that went into it. However, the spokesman said that the residents of Stacy decided that the Rebel Yell does tell dormitory news and is interesting as a whole.

The staff of the Stacy paper includes Jack Wilson, Charles Dunn, Norman Germino, Chris Douty and John Black.

DEFINITELY INFLUENCED BY FREUDIANISM:

'Blood Of A Poet:' Weird

By ED MYERS

Some 150 University students and Chapel Hill residents were added recently to the scores of discriminating movie-goers who have attempted, over a period of nearly 20 years, to interpret Jean Cocteau's "Blood of a Poet."

Cocteau, one of the most significant figures of the French theater, combines poetry, irony and fantasy to create surrealism. This is defined as being an art which expresses the subconscious activities of the mind by presenting images without order or sequence, as in a dream. It is definitely influenced by Freudianism.

Cocteau admits that "Blood of a Poet" was an experimental film in which many of his symbols actually do not have any significant meaning.

The movie was the third in the Graham Memorial Activities Board's film series. There are five remaining features.

STRUGGLE

"Blood of a Poet" was quite a struggle for those accustomed to Hollywood movies. It was questionable at times whether the projector and sound system were on the verge of collapse, or if it were another of Cocteau's symbolisms. The leading character was Cocteau himself, who was always minus a shirt. Any intellectual or aesthetic aspect was seemingly forgotten as the "artist" jumped from wall to wall, made love to statues, walked into a mirror, and finally peeped through keyholes.

NO UNITY

There was no attempt at an overall unity of thought. The main theme, possibly, was Art vs. Life. There was an extreme preoccupation of death throughout the film. Even the episode entitled "The Snowball Fight" ends in death for a youngster hit with a fluffy handful of snow thrown by the neighborhood bully. (This same kid shows up at a poker game, in a later episode, still dead, but with an ace hidden under his coat.) The poet takes the card from the dead boy, wins the game, then commits suicide, making the third time he has shot himself in the head, but it never kills him. This is interpreted by some as meaning Art is Eternal.

IDC Improvements Committee To Meet

The Interdormitory Council dorm improvements committee will meet tomorrow to consider recommendations and suggestions for improvements in dormitories.

The meeting will be held in the Woodhouse Conference in Graham Memorial at 3 p.m.

Jack Hudson, chairman of the IDC dorm improvements committee, said purpose of the meeting is to consider suggestions for both immediate and long-range improvements that are needed in dormitories.

All dormitory presidents and any interested persons should attend, said Hudson. Since all requests for improvements must go through the IDC to be considered by the office of the director of operations, it is important that anyone interested in specific improvements be present, he said. Anyone unable to attend the meeting may give suggestions to Hudson or leave them in the IDC office in New East Annex.

All requests will be put on a priority basis in order of importance, Hudson said. Those that need immediate attention will be considered first.

Non-Party Candidate Deadline Is March 18

The Elections Board has announced that the deadline for independents to file for candidacy in the spring elections is midnight, March 18.

Officers to be elected in the spring elections are president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer of the student body; Student Council (three women's seats and three seats at large); Men's Council (three seniors, one junior and one sophomore); Women's Council (three senior seats and one seat at large);

Chairman of Women's Residence Council; officers of the Carolina Athletic Association; head cheerleader; senior class officers; sophomore class officers;

Editors of The Daily Tar Heel and The Yackety Yack, and the National Students' Association Coordinator.

Legislature seats for each district are also slated to be filled.

Any student may become a candidate for office, provided he or she submits a petition signed by 25 qualified voters and himself. Petitions may be turned in to Miss Patsy Daniels at the Chi Omega house or at the Student Government office. The petitioner must turn in his grade qualifications as certified by the Dean of Students' Office with the petition.

Elections will be held on March 29, and runoffs will be on April 15, the board announced.

Creation Show Continued To Mid-Month

Because of the "enthusiastic" reception accorded the Morehead Planetarium's story of creation, "Billions of Years Ago" will be continued through March 14, according to Director A. F. Jenzano.

More than 8,000 persons already have seen this new spectacular, and reservations are still coming in, Jenzano said. "Therefore it was decided to postpone until later in the year the next scheduled show, 'Color in the Sky, which was to run March 1-22," he said.

Jenzano also announced that the annual spring pageant, "Easter, The Awakening," will open March 15, a week earlier than previously scheduled. It will run through April 25.

"We have been excited by the attendance at 'Billions of Years Ago,' and it is increasing every week, with reservations coming in," Janzano said, "and we're already getting reservations for the Easter show."

Korean Veterans File Form For Subsistence

Teaching Math Via TV To Be Talked Tomorrow

A special feature of the second annual Mathematics Teachers Conference to be held here tomorrow and Saturday, March 4-5, will be an address by Dr. Marguerite Lehr, Bryn Mawr mathematician, who will discuss the use of TV in presenting mathematics to the public.

Dr. Lehr, who is considered a main leader in the Eastern movement of math on television, will appear on WUNC-TV, Friday from 5 to 5:30 p.m.

Leads In Tomorrow's Play

Former Show Boater To Be Here Tomorrow

Mrs. Beulah Adams Hunter, former leading lady of the James Adams Floating Theater, North Carolina show boat on which Edna Ferber did research for Show Boat, will be the guest of The Carolina Playmakers tomorrow.

Mrs. Hunter, once known as the "Mary Pickford of the Chesapeake," will talk at 9 a.m. in Playmakers' Theatre about her experiences in show boating. The talk will be open to the public.

In 1924 Edna Ferber visited North Carolina to gather material for her novel on show boat life She spent some time aboard the James Adams Floating Theatre talking to Mr. Adams and Charles Hunter, leading man of the boat and husband of Beulah Adams. She also did research in North Carolina coastal towns.

In her novel, although she switched the locale to the Mississippi River, she used many Beaufort County, N. C. names and legends and copied, verbatim, an inspection from St. Thomas' Episcopal Church in Bath.

Mrs Hunter is now the only surviving member of the old show boat acting company. She lives in Saginaw, Mich. and has come to Chapel Hill to attend the University theatre premiere of the musical by the Playmakers.

Show Boat Ushers

Ushers for all performances of the Playmakers production of Showboat will meet today at 5 p.m. in Memorial Hall for a short briefing session.

Dr. Adkins Gets Copy Of Book From Japan

Parts of the book have already been translated into German under the auspices of the Hochschule fur Internationale Padagogishe Forschung in Frankfurt, Germany.

Wesley Group Initiates New Feed Policy

Students who plan to eat supper at Wesley Foundation on Sundays are asked to sign up by Friday of each week, according to a new policy set forth by the Fellowship Commission Chairman Roy Epperson.

A list will be posted on the Wesley Foundation bulletin board each Sunday night after supper, according to Epperson, and students should sign it before they leave or sometime during the week if they plan to eat at the church the following Sunday night.

Asked if signing the list would obligate a student to pay for the meal in the event that his plans changed and he didn't eat at the Foundation, Epperson said that no one would be asked to pay for a meal that he didn't eat. He added, however, that in such cases the student was asked to scratch his name off the list, if possible, by Friday night, since the food is purchased Saturday morning.

In the event that a student should decide at the last minute to invite a guest, he should contact either Rosemary Lemmond at the Nurses Dorm, or Joel Savell, at the Wesley Foundation, said Epperson.

Phi Officers Inaugurated

There Is More To Life Than A Cadillac

Education, we have been saying of late, is more important in a university than empirical training for a business career.

Our quarrel with the School of Business Administration is that it does not allow students sufficient breadth in their studies—a maximum of six courses outside business and economics in their last two years.

And we have pointed out that America's most progressive businesses are seeing the light themselves. There has been full scale admission by business lately that there is more to life—even to an executive's life—than a Cadillac.

Now, comes the Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania with the boldest scheme of all, a full-time, ten-month liberal arts course for business-drenched, humanities-starved young executives.

Let Time Magazine take it from here:

The plan for the course began when Pennsylvania Bell's President Wilfred Donnell Gillen decided that something was lacking in the average rising young businessman. For all his competence and specialized knowledge, Gillen felt, the young executive seemed to have neither the background nor the ability to make the sort of broad decisions that modern business demands . . .

In planning the curriculum, (it was) decided to make it not only as broad as possible, but as tough. Each morning, instead of reporting to the office, the students were plunged into a world of philosophy, literature, history and art. They took courses in logic, ethics, gulped down big doses of music, economics, architecture, studied some of the major concepts in the social and natural sciences.

Though their classwork was done mostly in seminars, they heard lectures by such scholars as Anthropologist Carleton Coon, City Planner Lewis Mumford, Yale's Henri Peyre (who spoke on Rousseau's Confessions), Brandeis University's Ludwig Lewisohn (Faust) . . . They visited the UN, the museums of Washington, Philadelphia and New York; they attended a Quaker meeting, heard concerts by the Philadelphia Orchestra.

They read everything from Beardsley's Practical Logic to Crane Brinton's Ideas and Men. They studied the Bible and the Bhagavad-Gita, proceeded to the Iliad, the plays of Sophocles and Shakespeare. Dante's Inferno, The Brothers Karamazov, Remembrance of Things Past . . .

Each man got copies of all the books assigned, kept them as a nucleus for his private library.

Among the changes, big and small, that the ten months brought:

A student from Minnesota who admits that he had a "kind of void" in the arts, has now become interested enough to subscribe to a print-of-the-month club and to buy some originals on his own. What did he hang on his walls before? Mirrors."

A student (who says) "I used to go home from the office, listen to my wife tell about her day, turn on the television and go to bed. If my new attitude sticks, it would be criminal to go back to the old way. I've found there is so damn much I want to know."

Says another student: "I used to think there was nothing in life but earning money and looking forward to a Cadillac. Now I ask myself what is right, rather than what should I do or what am I expected to do. There have been innumerable times since leaving the institute when I've said to myself, 'You wouldn't have thought of that a year ago'."

Bell Telephone, it should be emphasized, paid these men to study logic, literature and art because the company thought it was a good investment.

Consider, then, the situation: Students at the University are studying business to the virtual exclusion of courses, which, at the insistence and expense of business, are being taught to graduates like themselves.

Perhaps if we were a corporation, instead of a University, the liberal arts might have a higher place in the esteem of the business school curriculum makers.

What Are The Objections To Brigadoons?

Louis Kraar

OPPONENTS TO the proposed Brigadoons say their main objection lies in the financial obligation that the project would bring for each dorm.

Brigadoons as you recall, is the Inter-dormitory Council's plan for name band dances for dorm populace. The individual student would pay for the dances. In other words, the IDC would be selling student dances.

Under the present proposal, each dorm is responsible for selling a number of tickets equal to one-fourth its population. Thus, if Old West, for instance, didn't sell 25 per cent of its dwellers (or an equivalent number of outsiders) tickets to the dances, the dorm would have to fork over the difference.

Where would the money from the dorms come? From each dorm's individual social fund.

If the campus wants Brigadoons, this reporter has no objections. But, at the same time, students should know what their financial obligations will be.

IT'S HEARTENING to see the Men's Council do its job and make a report of cases tried to the paper.

I'm not down on the keepers of the Honor System; but if they are elected to an office, they should do their job. Reporting cases to the paper on a regular basis is part of their job.

Now that the Men's Council has made its report for last semester, one would expect to see periodic reports—on a regular basis—as this semester progresses.

Only thing is, Dick and Joe, I had nothing to do with the candy prices. I like popcorn myself.

If one's inclinations are literary, Dr. Floyd Stovall's Humanities Lecture would seem in order. On the other hand, the Press Club will have Kenan Professor Hugh Lefler talking on "Early North Carolina Newspapers."

And the Student Party will have the most knocked-out political meeting of the year. They're picking a student body presidential candidate.

The Quarterly Controversy

Ed Yoder

Mr. Bill Scarborough's article taking issue with my appraisal of the Carolina Quarterly has gently and diametrically thrown me off balance atop the Quarterly's soapbox.

In large measure, I grant without hesitation that what Mr. Scarborough says can well be taken to heart by those (seemingly few) students and faculty members on the campus who are still vitally concerned with the welfare of the literary magazine.

His letter, good-humored, yet serious and sound, raises in my mind a fundamental question: What is the proper relationship of a student critic to a student publication? Apparently, Mr. Scarborough and I differ rather diametrically (as he says) on that point. When does a student critic reach the maturity, the grasp and insight, the perch, from which he may largely condemn a publication edited by a contemporary and classmate?

AN 'APOLOGY'

Mr. Scarborough is right. I am an apologist for the Carolina Quarterly. But I do not apologize in the common sense of the term. Mr. Scarborough will remember, as a sound scholar, that Plato's Apology for Socrates was really a defense. Plato called that dialogue a defense, not because he felt that he was attempting to cover up an inadequacy or flaw in the character or behavior of Socrates: his motive, in fact, stemmed precisely from the other direction: He believed fundamentally in the rightness of Socrates' behavior and character; thus, in recording the actions and speech of Socrates before the 300, he hesitated not one instant to call himself an apologist.

By that token, if Plato was an "apologist" for Socrates, I am an "apologist" for the Carolina Quarterly. I believe strongly in the reorientation undertaken in this year's Quarterly by Jim Dunn.

In neither review, however, did I attempt to whitewash the Quarterly. My criticism as to content have been very much the same as Mr. Scarborough's. I have repeatedly objected to the paucity of articles (and good ones); I have expressed hesitations about Mr. Rivera's poetry selection; and I have time and again asked why the Quarterly contains insubstantial representation of literary effort right here in Chapel Hill.

COVER ORTHODOXY

Even with those qualifications, I think the Quarterly has acquitted itself well so far this year. The new cover designs, I think, add much to the attractiveness of the magazine, even though the art work on the recent cover was decidedly third rate. Some critics have a very intolerant attitude toward picture covers for literary magazines. I don't; and I feel that the heavy hand of orthodoxy—and that alone—stands between most literary quarterlies and more attractive covers.

I disagree just as heartily with Mr. Scarborough's suggestion that (1) the editor must write within a restricted range or remain silent; (2) that the Quarterly is overridden with juvenilia; (3) that contributions for "The Best Freshman Writing" should be judged on the same footing with other material.

HELPING HAND

Here, I think, lies our basic point of divergence. "The Best Freshman Writing" section seems to me typical of the attitude Jim Dunn has taken with regard to the Quarterly.

Last summer, I participated in a panel discussion with the North Carolina English Teachers Association about the place of creative writing in colleges and universities. The conclusions on the part of all who spoke up coincided: It was broadly felt that college literary magazines neglect to encourage the younger writers, the "neophytes," one major reason being that standards are too high, awesome, and overbearing for even a very talented beginner to crack. Mr. Dunn, by introducing a valuable feature inviting their contribution, has without doubt given heart to some of the serious younger potential.

Finally, I don't believe the Quarterly falls anywhere near mediocrity. If the contents do not match up to ideal standards, it, I believe, is due to a shortage of ideal contributions—not as Mr. Scarborough suggests, to faulty administration, planning, and edition.

A SERIOUS THREAT

Is the campus producing first-rate Quarterly material? This is the basic question and I'm not so sure I like the answer. In the three years since I have been a student here, I have gotten the impression that interest in serious writing—in all publications—has declined.

In the area of article writing, where the most crucial need exists, even the talented writers appear to be more interested in writing on trivial, "light" topics; to be serious is to invite violent criticism and laughter.

It is tragic that the people like Mr. Scarborough and Mr. Dunn who possess a live interest in the welfare of the Quarterly seem to be divided on its function. A serious threat impends from outside the offices of the campus publications. Quarterlies languish unsold on the newsstands; groups who would wither were it not for the publicity and notice they get in publications yet attack poblications spitefully; charlatans and self-styled critics of the function of publications on campus make proposals for change which could come only from mountebanks.

We had better hang together, as I think Benjamin Franklin once said, or we'll all hang separately.

Whitesides: 'Excellent'

The "Petites Musicales" series sponsored by the Graham Memorial Student Union which were so successfully launched in the previous semester were resumed on Sunday evening with a song recital by William Whitesides, tenor.

Mr. Whitesides presented a varied and well chosen program of songs in four languages by John Dowland, J. S. Bach, Handel, Schubert, Hugo Wolf, Brahms, Ravel and Copland. He displayed a voice of beautiful quality which is evenly developed throughout most of its range, and his performance was characterized by individuality of style and interpretation together with excellent diction.

This writer did not always agree with Mr. Whitesides' reading of the German songs, particularly the two Schubert numbers taken from the cycle: "Die Schoene Muellerin" in which certain indications in the dramatic content of both music and text were overlooked and which were taken too slowly to be fully effective. However, these minor deficiencies did not hinder the singer from completely delighting his warm and responsive audience.

At the piano Mr. Whitesides had the faithful and sympathetic cooperation of Mrs. Norma Weaver, who coped with the unsympathetic and well known obstinacies of the present Graham Memorial piano with unusual success.

Letter From Crossbones Crossroads

(The following letter, headed "Crossbones Crossroads", was written by Karl F. Knight, 29 Old East.—Editor)

Dear Mr. Grimes,

My fellow-American, I hope you will pardon the tardiness of this epistle in response to your illustrious letter which was printed in The Daily Tar Heel. As seems to be the case with you, I am so far out in the provincial areas of Our Great State that it takes a right good while for news to filter in and out.

Me and some of the boys, all good Hundred Percent Americans, were talking about your fine letter and we thought it would be a good idea to let you know that we appreciate the good that you are trying to accomplish.

The president of the Thursday Night Billiards Club is our biggest manufacturer. Since he works most of the niggers in his mill, it seemed to us that he ought to have the most to say about how things should be run around here. We don't wear Black Shirts or Brown Shirts or anything like that. We believe that our white skin is enough of a symbol of our greatness and dignity.

It has been a hard job keeping our Gracious Southern Culture the way we want it. The only way to keep everything like the Good Lord intended is for us to stick together. We're in contact with some of the boys in South Africa. If you are interested, we can give you some good addresses. They have a good system and they are always glad to pass along helpful information.

None of us fellows ever went to school at Chapel Hill. Don't you worry, though; we don't hold it against you. We can see what you are. We have heard lots of stories about how it is down there at that hotbed of Leftism. It's good to see that a strong-minded and well - principled Southerner like you could stand up against it.

Well, I guess you know where we stand. To paraphrase a Yankee statement, "What's good for Crossbones Crossroads is good for the South."

If you see Mr. Clark, give him our best wishes.

Integration Would Be 'Disastrous'

Editor:

I have a few comments I'd like to make in reference to the article by Charles Dunn on the pro-segregation petition.

Contrary to what he seems to imply, I have not been concealing my name from anyone and I make no apologies for my opinions.

Although we received some assistance and advice on the petition from some other students whose names may not have been mentioned, we think a petition should be judged by its own merits rather than in terms of personalities. I myself took a very active part in circulating the petition and trying to contact students to help us, just as I was approached. I am happy that I did it and would do it again.

I don't see why my being from the North should make any difference. Just as there are Southerners who are for and against segregation there are likewise folks up North who favor it and other Yankees who are opposed.

Having witnessed the results of integration in New York, some of which are social intermingling and intermarriage of whites and Negroes which occurs frequently there, I think it would be disastrous for both races if the same were to happen here in the South, which is the place I am now living and hope to remain.

Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse see imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others.—Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others.—Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was very ill . . . or very well organized, in an ABeCedarian way of speaking; either condition is homologous to the other in appearance, as well as in cost.

All I am doing," The Horse replied indignantly to my concerned query, "is leaning against this tree and singing Old Man River, the all-time hit-song from the Kern-Hammerstein opus, Show Boat."

Well, why the beating of the sternum (breast-bone, that is) with the hoofs . . . the pain-wracked expression of what The Horse used for a face . . . the twisting of the equine hammerhead thissaway and thattaway . . . the intermittent flexing of the hind legs . . . the strangled moans issuing from The Horsely rubberlips?

"First Steps in Acting, by Prof Sam Selden of Dramatic Art, tells how it is meet and fitting one should accompany one's lines with appropriate gestures to carry the import of one's feelings," The Horse said in a stable manner. "I was singing, not groaning; and my gestures of accompaniment should be easy to interpolate."

I had interpolated them as being inspired by a combination of delirium tremens, acute indigestion, cardialgia, kidney spasms, butterfly belly, housemaid's knee and general malaise.

"Well, I haven't be rehearsed," The Horse shrugged. "There is family tradition against it."

A family tradition against being rehearsed?

"One of my forebears was treacherously pressed into service to pull a hearse, once," The Horse related darkly, "and the family has always had a fear one of us might again be similarly ill-used," might be rehearsed."

Thus pun had me feeling ill . . . and no ABCedarian supply dump closer than Durham, a lamentable situation which the Chapel Hill P.-T.A. was trying to rectify. Or was it the WCTU?

"You mean the Epworth League," The Horse corrected me. "But that's neither here nor the other place, wherever that is. I'm agog over seing Show Boat again."

Oh? The Horse had seen it before?

"Plural times," The Horse led me on a Tom Waldman 'Down Memory's Lane' tangent. "I was arguing with myself only lawt night, was it Jules Bledsoe or Paul Robeson I saw playin the role of Joe — and singing Old Man River — the first time? I think it was Bledsoe, who left the cast to take the lead role in Porgy & Bess. David Small will play that part in the Carolina Playmakers production.

"And I hear Suzn Elliott's handling of the Julie part, played by Helen Morgan in the original, will have Carolina lasses sitting on their Pianos for a decade to come!" The Horse nostalgiahed. "Ahhh, Helen Morgan!"

Didn't The Horse mean, Ahhhhh, Suzn Elliott? And I had heard no unchivalrous comment anent what Carolina lasses sat on, pianos or less imposing (in size) structures.

"You will understand that two decades and more can effect the nuances with which one Ahhhhs an entertainer," The Horse suggested. "Armed ushers prowled the aisles when us young Horses expressed our approvals, in those days, and more than once La Morgan slithered down from the piano to use it for an outpost defense."

One trusted this would not be necessary again, since The Horse had a nefoo, one P. (for Princeton) B. (for Burly) O'Horse hoofing about in the cast?

"A smart gal like Suzn-Julie Elliott-Morgan will have my Nefoo carrying the piano," The Horse speculated, "instead of storming it. I recall Charles Winninger played Cap'n Andy, in the original, and if I get a name or four wrong, think nothing of it and make your own corrections . . . silently. Also, we gotta stop talking because you gotta get your ticket, Roger. Don't come complaining to me later iffn you can't get in. You do beat your gums a lot, you know."

I was speechless . . . for once. So was Mr Wump.

But The Horse had something: Get your tickets now for Show Boat, March 4, 5, or 6, at Abernathy Hall or at Ledbetter-Pickard's, in town.

Ike: Dilemma For Democrats

Stewart Alsop

WASHINGTON—The hassle over taxes neatly illustrates the hideous dilemma confronting the Democrats. The dilemma is so seemingly insoluble that it has the Democratic leaders of the House and Senate, who are about the shrewdest politicians in the United States, baffled, irritated, and divided.

The dilemma can be defined in a couple of questions: How are the Democrats to win back the White House when it is seemingly political poison even to criticize the well-liked President? And what issues are Democratic Congressional candidates to run on, when the Administration keeps snatching all the best issues out from under their noses?

THE TWO SOLUTIONS

There are two theoretical solutions to these conundrums. One is to use every means to present the Eisenhower administration as the friend of the rich, casting the Democratic party in the role of the defender of the "little guy." Meanwhile, the Democrats should be ready to stand up and slug it out with the President when need arises.

Solution number two is to avoid direct conflict with the President, concentrating instead on building up the Democratic party as unified and responsible and the Republican party as irresponsible and divided. As for defeating Eisenhower (everybody assumes he will run again) that is a nasty little problem for the Democratic candidate, whoever he may be.

UNC-Wake, Maryland-UVA Feature Tourney Openers

State And Duke Co-Favorites In Title Meet In Coliseum

Carolina Faces Toughest Slate Of Darkhorses; Battle With Deacons Tonight At 9:30 O'clock

Raleigh's Reynolds Coliseum, host to many a fine and exciting basketball tournament in past years, comes to life again this afternoon with the opening of the Atlantic Coast Conference championship-deciding meet.

A representative to the National Athletic Association elimination preliminaries will also come out of this tourney. The team will play Villanova, March 8.

The ACC meet will get under way in excellent fashion. In the opening game today at 2 o'clock, Maryland takes on Virginia. Coach Bud Millikan's Terps rank as the No. 1 defensive unit in the conference, according to figures released by the loop's service bureau, and Virginia coach Bus Male's Cavaliers hold the position as the No. 1 offensive unit.

Maryland's defensive average is 61.6 points per game over a 23-game schedule. Offensively the Cavaliers have a 91.2 average per game.

In the second game this afternoon Duke will face South Carolina at 4:00.

Tonight, it will be N. C. State vs Clemson at 7:30 and two hours later North Carolina will face the Demon Deacons of Wake Forest for the third time this season.

The Carolina-Wake Forest tilt will carry as much interest as the Maryland-Virginia game. Despite the fact that the Tar Heels twice defeated Wake during regular season play, UNC Coach Frank McGuire is not confident of a third win tonight. The Tar Heels will have to face Dick Hemric again.

N. C. State, having the advantage of playing on its home court, is the favorite to take the ACC crown. The defending champions, who finished first over the season's play, take on the No. 8 team in Clemson, a choice morsel which failed to gain a single victory. The Wolfpack also has a tournament bench. Coach Everett Case probably will not rely too heavily on his top men against the Tigers, but most likely will save them for the following games.

The 'Pack, however, even if it wins the tournament, won't be eligible for NCAA play because it is serving a sentence for violation of the Association's code of ethics.

Thus Duke figures to meet Villanova next week. The Blue Devils, who finished second over the season, also foresee a win in the first round over the Gamecocks. They have been picked to finish second behind State, which means they may get the NCAA bid.

Carolina probably has the toughest schedule of any darkhorse. Assuming the Tar Heels beat Wake Forest tonight, they must then face State and probably Duke, to come out on top. UNC has defeated State once and lost once, and downed Duke once while dropping two to the Blue Devils. There are no breathers on the Carolina schedule.

Coach Bunn Is Beginning 26th Year Here

By MARSHALL WALDMANE

The man who taught King George V of England how to throw a curve will launch his 26th year as head coach of the Tar Heel baseball team when the '55 campaign begins on March 24. The baseball career of Bunn Hearn has been long and colorful and covers a period of more than 40 years.

Last January, Coach Bunn Hearn journeyed up to New York City where he was given a citation which he modestly accepted. The National Association of College Baseball Coaches was holding its annual convention and the highlight of the conclave was the plaque awarded to 'Coach Bunn." He was awarded this citation for "his development of young players for the past 25 years, his good sportsmanship, and his over-all donation to the sport of baseball."

If you've been out at Emerson Stadium watching the Tar Heels practice, you've probably seen Coach Bunn sitting in front of the home team dugout passing on words of wisdom to the young ball players just getting under way in the sport. Hearn has been around a long time and has a world of baseball knowledge which he tries to share with as many people as he possibly can. If any of the current Tar Heels could borrow just one year from the baseball life of Bunn Hearn, they would have enough stories to tell their grandchildren for years to come.

COACH BUNN is pretty good at telling stories. He might tell you about the time he pitched his first professional game with Wilson of the Eastern Carolina League. "Big Steam" was just a green kid of about 19 when he toed the rubber and got set for his first pitch. His catcher was a fellow by the name of Louis Hobbs who is now a retired doctor living in Chapel Hill. Dr. Hobbs said, "Big Steam would really make my glove pop when he would come in with that blazer."

Although only 19 Hearn had a good curve ball to go with his blazer and before his first year of professional ball was over, he found himself in the uniform of the St. Louis Cardinals who had purchased his contract from Wilson. His new catcher was a guy named Roger Bresnahan who is considered today to be one of the greatest catchers of all time.

Miller Huggins played second base for the Redbirds and helped quite a bit in giving Hearn a very respectable earned run average for the remainder of that 1910 season.

After two seasons with the Cardinals, Big Steam was sent down to Springfield of the Three-Eye League for some seasoning. It was at Springfield that Coach

COACH BUNN HEARN
. . . "Big Steam" Sounds Off . . .

Bunn learned that he was as good a hitter as he was a pitcher. In one game, he clouted three home runs, two of them coming in one inning. This was Hearn's greatest day at the plate and he'll probably remember it for a long time.

DURING THE next season, while playing with Toronto in the International League, Hearn pitched 20 consecutive scoreless innings against Jersey City. This was one of Hearn's best pitched games but as Bunn puts it, "Jersey City used two pitchers against me and we didn't score a run either. I had to settle for a tie."

At this time, Hearn didn't know that he would be pitching for John McGraw's New York Giants the next season. He thought that baseball had been good to him because few ball players ever get a chance to play in the big leagues and he, at the age of 22, already had two years of major league ball behind him.

Before the 1913 season was over however, Hearn reported to McGraw at the Polo Grounds, home of the Giants. McGraw used Hearn sparingly for the remainder of the season but planned big things for the little lefthander during the 1914 season.

THE 1914 GIANT pitching staff had a couple of other pretty fair country pitchers beside Big Steam Christy Mathewson and Rube Marquard were the Big Two of the Giant staff. The infield had Fred Merkle at first, Larry Doyle at second, Art Fletcher at shortstop and Tuly Schaeffer at third. Chief Meyer did the catching and Hearn did quite a bit of pitching along side of Mathewson and Marquard.

During the off season, before the '14 season began, Hearn joined the Giants and White Sox world touring party. He pitched in just about every country in the world but the highlight of the trip was when the two clubs played an exhibition in England for King George V. Hearn was introduced to the monarch and promptly got into a discussion about pitching. It was then that Big Steam showed the King the proper way to throw a curve ball.

1914 was Bunn Hearn's last year in the big leagues but his career had hardly begun. The little southpaw returned to the minor leagues and played ball until 1931 when he decided to hang up his spikes.

HEARN HAD COACHED at Carolina during the 1917 and 1918 seasons as a fill-in. but in '32, he accepted the position of head baseball coach and has been here ever since. Hearn was quite at home at Carolina because he was born and raised in Chapel Hill. He attended Mississippi A. & M. and Elon College before launching his career in baseball. Now he returned to Chapel Hill to put the finishing touches on his career in the sport he loves so much.

During his 25 years as head coach, he has sent about 15 Tar Heels to the major leagues and countless more into the minors. Some of the boys he sent to the majors were George Stirnweiss, Yankees; Lou Riggs, Giants; Burgess Whitehead, Giants and Pirates; Clyde King, Dodgers; Nate Andrews, Cubs; Johnny Peacock, Red Sox; Tommy Irwin, Cleveland; Tom Tubervill, Athletics and Johnny Humphries, Cleveland.

Hearn piloted the Tar Heels to Southern Conference championships in 1933-34-40-41 and 42. In addition to these titles, the Tar Heels have taken the Ration League crowns in 1943, '45 and '48 as well as the Southern Conference title in 1948.

COACH WALTER Rabb has been Hearn's right hand man during the past several seasons and since the latter's health has not been too good, has been the main director and teacher of the Tar Heels.

George Stirnweiss was in the Tar Heel locker room during yesterday's practice session. He is currently managing Binghamton in the Yankee chain and stopped off while passing through to Ocala, Florida to join a staff of instructors at a baseball school. Stirnweiss said, "I've played under a lot of managers during my day, fellows like Billy Meyer, Casey Stengel, Bucky Harris and a lot more in the same calibre. These fellows play the game just like Bunn. They hold the respect of their players and have a great knowledge of the game.

"Bunn learned from John McGraw and I, like a lot others, learned from Bunn Hearn. I hope to be a major league manager some day and put into practice all of the tricks I learned from Coach Bunn during my three years at Carolina. He is a good sound teacher, a good handler of men and a credit to the University. Bunn Hearn is a real man."

Miles Gregory, UNC Hopeful, In Mat Meet

Six schools have entered individuals in the first Atlantic Coast Conference wrestling tournament to be held in Woollen Gym tomorrow and Saturday.

The schools are UNC, Duke, State, Wake Forest, Maryland, and Virginia. No team championship of the conference will be awarded as previously reported. The tournament, the first of its kind to be scheduled, is merely to determine individual champions in the various weight classes.

Hugh Cowan and Miles Gregory wil carry the UNC banner. These two grapplers, who did a good job throughout the season while the Tar Heels were dropping nine meets and winning one, were consistent winners.

Hemric, Shavlik And Wilkinson Make Second Team All-America

NEW YORK, March 2 (AP)—Tom Gola of La Salle's defending NCAA champions, Robin Freeman of Ohio State, Bill Russell of San Francisco, Dick Ricketts of Duquesne and Darrell Floyd of Furman were named today to the 1955 Associated Press All-America basketball team.

Gola, regarded as the best present day collegiate player, dominated the voting by 323 sportswriters and broadcasters. On the basis of five points for a first team vote and two for a second team vote, Gola polled 1,488 points. He received 294 firsts and nine seconds.

Freeman, who injured his ankle and did not play the last month, nevertheless was a strong second with 955 points. Russell followed with 748, Ricketts with 725 and Floyd with 585.

Don Schlundt of Indiana, who made the 1954 first team, missed out this year. He polled 577 points to top the second team. Rounding out the second quintet were Dick Hemric of Wake Forest, Si Green of Duquesne, Dick Garmaker of Minnesota and Ron Shavlik of North Carolina State.

Tom Heinsohn of Holy Cross, Buzz Wilkinson of Virginia, Bob Burrow of Kentucky, Dick Bousb ka of St. Louis and Maurice Stokes of St. Francis (Pa.) were picked as a third team.

Honorable mention included Walter (Corky) Devlin, George Washington (116); Rod Hundley, West Virginia (115); Warren Mills, Richmond (100); Joe Holup, George Washington (74).

GREENSBORO, March 2. (AP)—Virginia's Buzz Wilkinson, Clemson's Bill Yarborough and Wake Forest's Dick Hemric are once more one-two-three in the Atlantic Coast Conference individual scoring race, but the annual ACC tourney beginning today, at Raleigh will settle a see-saw race between Yarborough and Hemric for second place.

THE CARE AND FEEDING OF BOOKS

You busy college people—you with your classes and your studying and your social activities and your three-legged races—it is no wonder that you have so little time for reading. I mean reading for the pure pleasure of it, not to cram for exams. It is a sad omission, and my heart goes out to you. I do, however, take comfort from the fact that the graduation season approaches. Many of you will soon leave the hurly-burly of college for the tranquility of the outside world. Oh, you'll love it on the outside! It is a quiet life, a gracious and contemplative life, a life of ease and relaxation, of plenty of time to enjoy the treasures of literature.

It is with you in mind that I sit now in my cane-bottomed rocker and close my kindly gray eyes and smoke a mellow Philip Morris cigarette and remember books that made me laugh and books that made me cry and, remembering, laugh and cry again. It is, I say, with you in mind that I sit thus and rock thus and close my kindly gray eyes thus and smoke a Philip Morris thus and laugh and cry thus, for I wish to recommend these lovely and affecting books to you so that you too may someday sit in your cane-bottomed rockers and close your kindly gray eyes and smoke a mellow Philip Morris and remember books that made you laugh and books that made you cry and, remembering, laugh and cry again.

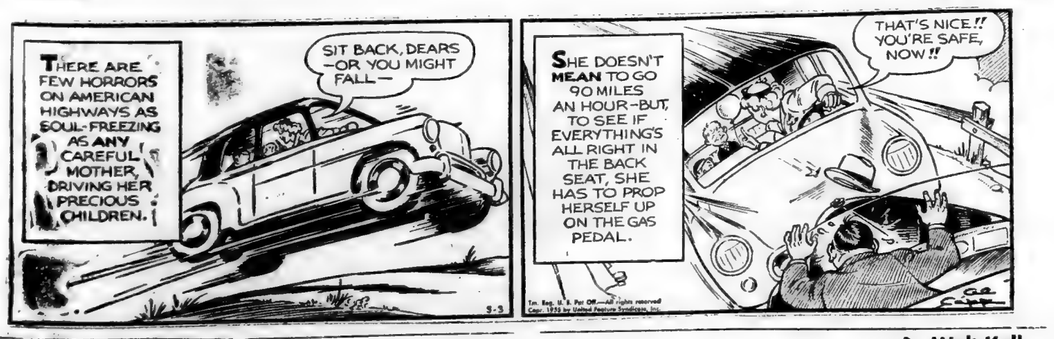
Sitting and rocking, my limpid brown eyes closed in reverie, a plume of white smoke curling lazily upward from my excellent Philip Morris cigarette, I remember a lovely and affecting book called Blood on the Grits by that most talented young Southerner, Richard Membrane Haw. It is a tender and poignant story of a sensitive Alabama boy who passes safely through puberty only to be devoured by boll weevils . . . A lovely and affecting book.

I puff my splendid Philip Morris cigarette and close my dancing blue eyes and recall another book, a thrilling true adventure, lovely and affecting, called I Climbed Everest the Hard Way by Cliff Sherpa. Mr. Sherpa, as everyone knows, was the first man to reach the peak of Mt. Everest by tunneling from below. In his book he gives a lovely and affecting account of his trip, which was not as easy as it sounds, you may be sure.

I light another merry Philip Morris cigarette and close my lambent hazel eyes and recollect another book—Life on the Farm by Dick Woolly. This is a short book—only 55 words and rather a dull one. It would not be worth mentioning here were it not for the fact that the author is a sheep.

I exhale a cloud of snowy white smoke from my bracing Philip Morris cigarette and shut my laughing green eyes and think of the vast, vast array of historical novels that have given me pleasure.

There is Blood on the Visor by Richard Membrane Haw (he who wrote the lovely and affecting Blood on the Grits). There is Cold Steel and Hot Flashes by Emmaline Prentiss' Moulting. There is The Black Shield of Sigafoos by Wruth Wright. There is Four Quarts in a Galleon by William Makepiece Clambroth. There are many, many others, all lovely, all affecting.



But sitting here, drawing on my matchless Philip Morris cigarette, my saucy amber eyes closed tightly, I am thinking that the loveliest, most affecting of all historical novels is May Fuster's classic, I Was a Serf for the F.B.I. Mrs. Fuster, justly famed for her rich historical tapestries, has outdone herself in this tempestuous romance of Angela Bodice, fiery daughter of an entailed fief, who after a great struggle rises to the lofty position of head-linesman to the Emperor of Bosnia and then throws it all away to lead the downtrodden peasants in a revolt against the mackerel tax. She later becomes Ferdinand Magellan.

But the list of fine books is endless, as you will soon discover who are about to leave the turmoil of the campus and enter into the serene world outside, where a man has time to read and rock and close his rakish taupe eyes and smoke good Philip Morris cigarettes.

Author Of 'A Man Called Peter' To Speak Here

Mrs. Peter Marshall, author of A Man Called Peter, will be presented here by the YWCA as its Centennial speaker on March 14 and 15.

Mrs. Marshall will give a public address on March 14 in Hill Hall at 8 p.m. on the topic "Nothing Can Defeat You."

The daughter of a Presbyterian minister, Mrs. Marshall was born in Johnson City, Tenn., in 1914 while her parents were doing home mission work in the great Smoky Mountains of North Carolina.

Upon entering Agnes Scott College, the interest which she had developed in writing turned to poetry particularly. She was also a member of the intercollegiate debating team. During her college years she met the Rev. Peter Marshall, then pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church in Atlanta. They became engaged in June of 1936 and were married in November of the same year.

The following year, the couple went to Washington when Rev. Marshall accepted the pastorate of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church. In 1940, a son, Peter John Marshall, was born.

During the next years Mrs. Marshall and her husband collaborated on writings for the Board of Christian Education for the Presbyterian Church, including a Bible study entitled The Mystery of the Ages and several issues of the devotional magazine Today.

In 1947 Rev. Marshall became Chaplain of the Senate and remained in that position until his death in 1949.

Mrs. Marshall's biogaphy of her husband, A Man Called Peter, was published by McGraw-Hill in October of 1951. It became a best-seller and has been made into a movie. A second book by her entitled God Loves You is soon to be published by the juvenile book division of McGraw-Hill. It contains stories and prayers which the Marshalls and their son enjoyed.

One of Rev. Marshall's most well-known sermons, Let's Keep Christmas, was published in book form in 1953, and a collection of pastoral and Senate prayers entitled The Prayers of Peter Marshall was published in 1954.

The movie version of A Man Called Peter, recently produced by Twentieth Century Fox Studios is to be released across the country on Easter weekend. According to the YWCA office, the movie will play here at the Carolina Theatre sometime during April.

The events planned for Mrs. Marshall's visit here include lunch at the Monogram Club with YWCA officers, a banquet at the Carolina Inn, her address in Hill Hall followed by a reception in Graham Memorial and a Centennial luncheon at the Episcopal Chapel of the Cross Parish House. Mrs. Marshall will speak on "Blueprint for Creative Living" at the Centennial luncheon, which will be open to all women students, YWCA board members and the house-mothers.

Miss America Visited UNC During Week

Although few people here were aware of it, the beautiful Miss America was a visitor in Chapel Hill this week. The lovely brunette, Miss Lee Ann Meriwether of California, drove to Chapel Hill from Raleigh where she is making her headquarters while spending about a week in North Carolina.

No word was given of Miss America's visit while she was in town. But the fact came out in a radio interview in Durham, when WSSB's Paul Mason was preparing a program for use there and over WCHL. Miss Meriwether said she was especially impressed by the beauty of Chapel Hill.

Her trip included a look at such conventional points as the Bell Tower, and she commented on the splendid-looking fraternity and sorority houses. Miss Meriwether's visit was too brief, to allow for a stop at the Playmakers.

The tall California beauty would have enjoyed this, because her principal interest is in dramatics. She plans to study dramatics with the $5,000 scholarship which she was awarded when she won the Miss Americe award. She has already done a role on a nationwide TV dramatic program.

I've always wanted to be an actress since I was a child," Miss America told Mason. "I guess most children feel this way at some time or other. But I never grew out of it." She said, however, that she isn't particular about what medium she uses for her talents—whether it's TV, the stage or the movies.

She also had some advice when a cameraman noticed that she always semed to have a smile. "Why, I don't believe at all in getting angry," she smiled. "It's just a way to get ulcers."

Musical Director Mason & Dramatist Selden
. . . going over Show Boat's Score

Mason On Playmakers Staff Now

Prof. Samuel Selden, chairman of the UNC Department of Dramatic Art and director of the Carolina Playmakers, has announced that Dr. Wilton Mason, associate professor in the University Music Department, has been made an official member of the staff of the Carolina Playmakers.

Dr. Mason will act as composer and general musical director and advisor for the Playmakers. In the past, Dr. Mason has been associated with the Playmakers both as a student and as a music director.

Professor Selden said "Dr. Mason has given us help in many ways and we feel that we are now simply making formal what has existed informally for some time. We are glad to have his talents as a composer and general music director and advisor in our group, and we are proud to have his name on our programs."

The new staff member began working with the Playmakers as a student in music at the University. He acted and participated in the work of the playwriting class and while a graduate student in 1937, was awarded the Playmakers Mask Award.

His first musical work with the group was on the production Spring-For Sure, an original production with book by Catherine MacDonald for which he composed the music. The show was presented in Chapel Hill on two occasions and in 1952 was taken on a state-wide tour. It has now had approximately 28 productions by other groups and is currently being done in Greenville.

Dr. Mason was also musical director for Princess Ida, last year's Kiss Me Kate, and he is currently busy with the Playmakers' spring musical Show Boat.

For the last three years he has been composer and supervisor of music for the outdoor drama Horn in the West at Boone.

He is now collaborating with Kai Jurgensen, also of the Playmaker staff, on another original musical production entitled Whoa, Nellie. The play deals with the life of Nell Gwynn and the reign of Charles II and will be finished and ready for production next year, Dr. Mason said.

Hostesses were Mrs. F. C. Shepard, in whose home the group met; Mrs. J. B. Linker, Mrs. S. S. Voorhis, and Mrs. H. J. Shore.

A tea course was served at the conclusion of the program.

WHERE IT OUGHT TO BE:

Show Boat's Pilots Seem Happy: Curtain's Tonight

By CHAL SCHLEY

As Show Boat moved into its final rehearsals this week, the directors were generally optimistic. Dr. Wilton Mason, the music director, said that it was "in good shape for this stage of the game."

The play opens tonight for a three-day run. Business Manager John Parker said last night the show had 500 tickets left for tonight's performance, 350 for Saturday and five or six hundred for Sunday night.

Choreographer Harry Coble went him one better, saying that he thought the show was developing "amazingly well." On the other hand, he added that he wished that there were more working hours available before opening night tonight. "But then," he said, "who doesn't?"

Director Kai Jurgensen was more specific. "The show's right where it ought to be," he said. "Everything's done that should be done, and these last three or four days will be used in polishing."

NEW RULES

As opening night drew nearer, two rules were laid down for all back-stage personnel.

The first was No Smoking. It wasn't so much the fire hazard that caused the ruling, but rather because smoky atmosphere cuts down the effectiveness of the lighting.

The other rule banned Coke bottles. It seems that Director Jurgensen was in a show once when someone stepped on a bottle backstage and broke a leg.

THE TECHNICAL TOUCH

Sunday night a few costumes and sets dressed up a fairly bleak stage. By Wednesday night, though, all the sets were in use, most members of the cast were in full costume, some were in make-up, and the stage came alive with color.

Neatly-stacked flats and furniture, ropes and wires criss-crossing everywhere and work-lights covered with tin-foil appeared backstage.

The light crew was going through its handle-pulling paces with precision. Varying color combinations from the lights modified the already vivid costumes and sets.

Probably the most difficult part of the back-stage work will be the stage crew's job of changing the sets in a black-out so complete that even the work-lights are out.

OUT FRONT

A new sound was added to the production Tuesday night—the orchestra arrived. This orchestra has no official name. It's a group of 20 professional musicians assembled and directed by Dr. Mason. At first, they had a little trouble trying to drown out the chorus, but the situation improved with practice.

The next night, however, the orchestra wasn't there—just a piano. And the principals weren't singing. A late-comer to the Late Rehearsal-Watchers Society asked how come and was told that the soloists were saving their voices

The Late Watcher was disgruntled.

SMALL'S LARGE VOICE

There was one voice in the cast, however, that both the orchestra and the chorus together could not overpower. Paradoxically, the name of the voice's owner is Dave Small.

Small is a freshman who in 18 years has developed a voice with all the power and range necessary to sing Old Man River.

Small is a native of Morehead City, where he sang for the Beaufort Choral Club, his high school Glee Club and a chorus choir. He calls Show Boat his "first real venture in show business."

At present, Small is undecided betwen research physical chemistry and show business as a future career, but he says he ought to know by next year.

ACCENT ON ACTING

With the singing and music down pat, the accent was placed on acting. The play was run through with the directors taking notes.

Then came the autopsy. With attention to the constant minutiae, first one director and then another made comments to the cast. These were often humorous.

At one point, Suzanne Elliot, who plays Julie, was having a little trouble with a line that read, "Love's a funny thing; there's no sense to it." "Stop mouthing your words," said Jurgensen. "Sounded like 'There's no sex to it.'"

THIS IS IT

Tonights the night.

At 8:30 this evening, the curtain will go up, and four weeks of work will be displayed to a packed house.

How the cast and the crews feel about opening night is best known to themselves; how the show will be received is yet to be decided

In all previous press releases on Show Boat, even in the published cast listing, there has been one glaring omission. Syd Litwack, who has the largest speaking part in the whole show, was never mentioned.

Canadian-born Litwack, recently of Los Angeles, is a draftsman in the University Engineer's Office. He is an actor by preference and has had considerable experience in this field on the west coast. He received his M.A. in Dramatic Arts here last June.

Litwack described Captain Andy whose part he will be playing this evening, as "a choice prime mixture of a number of sympathetic traits. If he were alive, he would be a must on everybody's know list."

"I'm in this show because I like the part and I like the direction," added Litwack.

Litwack is also the only member of the cast to become a father while the show has been in progress. On February 12, he became the father of a girl, Suzanne Brent.

Sweat, Work & More Sweat . . . A Play Is Born

Village News: Bingo Party Set March 12

By DAN WALLACE

Final plans for the big Village bingo party, scheduled Saturday night, March 12, will be discussed at the board of directors meeting tonight at 7:30 in the community center.

The proceeds of the party will be used to buy teaching materials for the nursery.

Mrs. Jean Evans, vice chairman of the board, is the driving force behind bingo party. The responsibility of personally inviting all villagers was given to all former members of the board. These board members will also personally provide prizes for the party. Among the prizes will be a variety of baked goods.

Mrs. Evans announced that voluntary donations of baked goods by the Villagers, to be used as prizes, would certainly be much appreciated. Board members will pick up these donations at noon on Saturday, March 12, from those they have personally contacted.

The five recently elected members of the Board of Directors will officially take their seats at tonight's meeting. The new board members are Chris Waddell, Ellen Hanna, Joanne Earley, Charles Ragland and Jesse Butler.

At the last meeting of the Board, it was announced that teacher contracts for nursery personnel Sue Mahoney and Christine Myatt were renewed for the following year ending June 1956. Mrs. Mahoney is in charge of the four-year-old class and Mrs. Myatt, the five-year-olds.

Mrs. Alice Cox was hired during February as teacher for the three-year-old class. Her contract will extend to June 1956.

Book-Length Account Of Hiroshima Slated

The first book-length, eye witness account of the bombing of Hiroshima, written by a Japanese hospital director and translated into English by a young North Carolina physician, will be published by the University of North Carolina press next August, on the 10th anniversary of the dropping of the A-bomb.

The author, Dr. Michihiko Hachiya, was and still is director of the Hiroshima Communications Hospital, located only about 1500 meters from the hypocenter of the bomb's explosion.

His detailed description of the bombing and the weeks following has been translated by Dr. Warner L. Wells, who is now on the surgical staff at N. C. Memorial Hospital at Chapel Hill and assistant professor of surgery at the UNC Medical School.

Dr. Hachiya and Dr. Wells became close friends when Wells went to Hiroshima early in 1950 as surgical consultant to the Atomic Bomb Casualty Commission, the organization sponsored by the American Academy of Science and the National Research Council to study the long-range effects of atomic bombing.

Along with advice from Dr. Hachiya, Dr. Wells received aid in translation from Dr. Neal Tsukifuji, Japanese-American colleague there.

Dr. Hachiya began his diary soon after the blast, though severely wounded, writing upon scraps of paper an account of what he saw, heard and did. As a physician, he recorded the physical effects of the explosion—initial shock, momentary recovery, later radiation sickness and panic—as well as the overall reaction to disaster.

When American occupation forces arrived, Dr. Hachiya discontinued his diary, putting it aside until 1950 when it was published serially in a periodical issued by the Japanese Ministry of Communications.

DTH To Be Investigated By Student Legislature Group

Brumfield Calls Newspaper 'The Second Daily Worker'

By NEIL BASS

The student Legislature, in a sparsely populated session last night, amid statements of "second Daily Worker" by Lewis Brumfield (SP), and comments by other Legislators voted to set up a six man committee to "investigate the quality and circuation problems of The Daily Tar Heel."

The meeting, attended by 29 of the total 47 legislators, was proceeding without event until Charles Hyatt (SP) assumed the rostrum and exclaimed that "quality" was lacking on The Daily Tar Heel, and that "something ought to be done about it or the paper done away with."

Larry McElroy (SP) added his opinion to the rein by saying 'something should be done to bring the Tar Heel down from the olympian clouds of pseudo-intellectualism to which Mr. Kuralt has led it to." McElroy continued his blast by saying, "Kuralt's references to the business school, which is one of the finest in the South," are unexcusaole "swipes."

Frank Warren (SP) threw his words into the lot by calling Charles Kuralt, editor, and Fred Powledge ,managing editor, "lazy" and "not doing a good job." Warren, speaker of the Philanthropic Assembly, offered a solution to what he called a drastic need of help and a "poor coverage" of student activities by suggesting that the Tar Heel "put an advertisement on the front page saying that 'we need staff.'"

When Lewis Brumfield (SP) got a chance to assume the rostrum, he, giving the most extreme attitude of the night, said, "Kuralt should not impose his liberal beliefs on the students. The paper should be more personal and get down to the students." Ending his speech, during which he called the Tar Heel a "second Daily Worker," he defined it as a "professional piece of journalism."

Norwood Bryan (SP) offered a solution to the "problem" with the remark that "if the salaries of the staff were cut and people worked for the love of the paper," there might be an improvement.

Jim Turner, chairman of the Publications Board commented on the legislators action with "I'm glad the Legislature has recognized these things that we have been working on all year." Tom Lambeth, also a member of the Board said that he "knew of no such action."

Jack Stevens, floor leader of the University Party, said after the meeting that "I am heartily opposed to the action and feel that the Legislature has acted hastily."

The student Constitution of the University states that "Neither the Publications Board nor the student Legislature shall exercise any control over the editor and chiefs of the various publications."

Student Art Work Well Received In New York

"The recent New York showing of paintings, sculptures, water colors and drawings by arts students from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has been reported to have been well and actively received by gallery-goers and patrons," Kenneth Ness, of the University Art faculty, said here yesterday.

Ness, acting head of the Department during Chairman John V. Allcott's leave, said that Robert D Kaufmann, owner and director of the Forum Gallery, has described the exhibit as "one of the best we have had for high quality work and equally high originality of expression."

Students who sold works included Neal Thomas, Chapel Hill and Wilmington, oil painting and water color; Jane Bolmeier, Durham and Charlotte, an oil landscape; Betty Bell, Durham, drawings; David C. Huntley, Lenoir and Gaffney, S. C., drawings, and Ed Higgins, Gaffney S. C., sculpture.

Reproductions of work by Thomas and Higgins will be included soon in the March issue of a new magazine, "Art World," with an article on the whole display. Editorial mention of the UNC exhibit is also made in "Pictures on Exhibit" in the current issue.

The Forum Gallery is featuring a series of exhibitions that presents the work of college and university art students to the metropolitan public. Works from California, Colorado, Michigan State, Mississippi, Oklahoma and North Carolina have been shown. Columbia, Hunter College, Illinois and Texas are scheduled following the North Carolina group.

Ness said that the exhibition not only added to the young artists professional stature by sales, but also gave "extended encouragement in their potentials through the all-around success of the exhibit."

8 Weeks Of Channel 4

The Forum, the Chatauqua, the Lyceum have passed, and their place has been taken by the coaxial cable.

It may not have been a good swap, particularly in the realm of education. For education is not only the transmission of facts but the contact of minds, and you cannot stand up and disagree with a television picture tube.

But, for better or worse, the University is keeping right up with the times; we have an educational television station.

It has been on the air for two months. How well is it succeeding in its sworn task?

The conclusion can only be: not very well. What we have been getting on Channel Four are good, educational agriculture shows from State College, reasonably competent programs from WC, an occasional gem from this campus, and the rest—the vast number of programs—assorted gibberish.

WUNC-TV had certain disadvantages to begin with—disadvantages faced by any television station attempting to educate, among them the question, how can you affect a meeting of the minds by mechanical means?

It is likely to be anything but easy. Our contention, however, is that WUNC-TV has not been making even a good college try. For if the University has any claim to being the proper place for educational television, it is that there are teachers here, men of world renown who can bring the result of years of scholarship to a large audience.

But the faculty, our single great asset, is being seen hardly at all on WUNC-TV. Why? Partly because they hold television suspect, undoubtedly. But largely because they are not wanted. Most of the teachers who have been approached feel that they are being asked to skate down WUNC-TV's thin line between high-powered "education" and extremely low-powered amusement. This they refuse to do.

The truth, after two months of University television, seems to be that the station could almost as well be operating in Saxapahaw or Andrews or Indian Trail for all the education we are getting.

There are exceptions. Certain of the station's programs, chiefly those limited in their appeal—for small fry, farmers, etc.—are highly interesting and educational. A program which began last night, "Seminar," is the first serious attempt to present lectures on widely different educational subjects by faculty members. This, and the laudable televising of music and drama, may constitute a solid first step toward accomplishment of WUNC-TV's mission.

That mission, as we understand and believe, is not to attempt competition with commercial television by boiling down education professionally, putting zip into it with the help of Hollywood-tainted operators and slipping it to the customers via video.

It is, or ought to be, to open up the University to the people of the state. The University as it is, without ruffles, without commercialization, available for all to attend.

Gracious Living—XXIII

Terrible tales are told of the campus mail system, that prototype of the snail's pace by which one may (sooner or later) communicate with someone else on the campus without going to the post office. The Pony Express was a bolt of lightning compared to the campus mail; it always takes a couple of days for a note to travel the length of a football field from Bingham, say, to Gardner.

The threat to Gracious (and efficient) Living in Chapel Hill involved here has been clear for some time. That's why we didn't blink an eye yesterday when we received, through the campus mail, a letter to the editor in an envelope inscribed, "The 1932 Yackety Yack."

Brigadoons, A New Era, More Chicks

Louis Kraar

TED KEMP, one of the Brigadoons backers, called yesterday to explain that the Interdormitory Council plan for big-name bands wouldn't be a drain on dorm finances.

Opponents of the plan contend that each dorm would get stuck for tickets equal to 25 per cent of its members. If the tickets weren't sold, the opponents said, the dorm would have to pay the difference from its social fund.

However, according to Kemp, $500 is being set aside by the IDC to meet possible deficits of individual dorms. Thus, if Brigadoons passes, dorms will have the $500 fund to fall back on.

STUDENTS WHO opened their laundry this week discovered the passing of an era in the University.

A note in each bundle from the University Laundry declared with appropriate solemnity:

"For many years the long, 16-inch fold used for men's shirts has been a trade mark of the University Laundry service. The time has come, however, when this traditional trade mark must be abandoned. Popular demand has forced us to change to the more popular and convenient short, 12-inch fold, which you will find in this bundle . . ."

I found that the new fold fits nicely in a vertical manner in the dresser drawer. And, knowing that since "the time has come" for such a change, I felt better about the whole thing after putting away my laundry.

Starting this Saturday, the two students will sponsor a jazz concert at the Saddle Club near Durham. Admission for the jam session is $1.25 a couple, and, according to Kurtz, food and refreshments are available.

STUDENT PARTY politicians tell me that my dope on their Monday night presidential nominations is off, but I still think Manning Muntzing will walk out of the meeting with the nomination.

Don Fowler, the other candidate, will get the SP bid for vice-presidency. In reporting this, I'm not taking sides in the fray. However, when predicting is being done (and it is), I'm going to call them as I see them.

As a freshman, I roomed with Fowler. I've known Muntzing for a long while. Both would make capable presidents, but Muntzing — being the better politician — will probably get the SP nod.

That Isn't A Book In The Man Of Distinction's Hand

Herbert P. Woodward

(The following article is excerpted from the American Association of University Professors Bulletin. It was originally given in speech form to a meeting at Rutgers University, where Mr. Woodward is dean.—Editor.)

In the American world at the birth of this century and for seventy-five years before that, no one doubted that the proper products of higher education were men and women of learning. The educated person of that period was unmistakable. He had broad knowledge and acquaintance with learning that indelibly distinguished him from the illiterate. He was well grounded in history and at home in the great literature of the ages; he owned books nad read them; he could read or converse in languages other than his own—even the languages of the past. His conversation automatically included quotations from the great; he would make allusions to poetry, to literature, to philosophy, and sometimes he even contributed to these. When he spoke or wrote, there was a flavor that was lacking in the speech or the letters of the uneducated; indeed, the very word "uneducated" meant the absence of these things—as the purpose of education, particularly higher education, was plainly to provide learning and the elements of wisdom.

You have to be at least my age and with a long memory to recall very many of these learned, educated people. A few of them today are still teaching or giving counsel, as elder statesmen, to younger men and women of our time; but if you have had acquaintance with some of these, cherish the recollection, for their like is difficult to locate in the busy technical world of today where the emphasis in education has shifted from learning and wisdom to proficiency and competence, and where we still admire learning but rarely seek it for ourselves.

From Learning To Competence

As the term "uneducated" has little currency today, its disappearance must signify, in one way or another, that most of us regard ourselves as "educated" after a fashion. If there is now a decline in learning and in letters, then it must follow that to be "educated" today means something very different from what it once meant.

I can emphasize it still differently by saying that, if there are fewer uneducated people today, there seem also to be fewer men of learning as well. For better or for worse, our sights are now set on men of competence and skill.

This shift in our educative attention from learning to competence and from wisdom to proficiency has come about in the last fifty years—indeed, in my own lifetime.

When I was in high school I studied both Latin and Greek, and in the generation before me a mastery of each of these languages was required in order to enter college. Today the college of which I am dean offers no course in either subjejct.

To replace them, however, we have established many other valuable courses — electronics, labor relations, criminology—that were not dreamt of as college subjects when I was a boy.

The scope of a liberal curriculum has greatly expanded in the last fifty years, matching the more intricate and scientific world of today. But the emphasis has turned from reflective meditation to intensive specialization, and the book-worm—if such there still be—no longer nibbles thoughtfully in the classics, but chews voraciously at some manual of technology.

Fifty years ago we taught liberal subjects and strict disciplines in courses that were expected to provide information, knowledge, training, culture, and the elements of wisdom. Out of these basic ingredients it was presumed that valuable end products would naturally come, and through them the student was expected to move on toward becoming an educated man or woman. We assumed that such an educated person would naturally have the attributes, understanding, and wisdom that would enable him to occupy a superior place in the world.

Today we completely reverse the process. We decide what are the attributes that education should provide — good citizenship, acquaintance with the scientific method, and adjusted personality, group consciousness, occupational adjustment, control of accidents, success in marriage, social dynamics, etc.—and then we set up special courses, for credit-hour study, to teach each of these specific features. We leave nothing to chance, save the possibility that the college or university graduate should acquire a little learning and wisdom while he is being groomed as a competent citizen or as a proficient technician.

Handsome, Utilitarian & Tasteless

To me the process somehow resembles what is taking place elsewhere in our civilization—in the manufacture of bread, for example, where we take flour and so refine it that all of the bran, vitamins, ond vigor have been extracted; but then, very carefully and with chemical precision, we reinsert Vitamins A, B, C, and D, riboflavin, and other synthesized ingredients, until we have what the chemist assures us is a standardized nutritious product, suitable for everyine—handsome, utilitarian, practical, and tasteless.

I think we are in grave danger that our educational mill may undergo the same streamlining until we are grinding out an education that is also utilitarian, highly practical, and likewise lacking in cultural flavor.

I hasten to assure you, in speaking to the modern emphasis on the man of competence, that competence and proficiency are highly desirable attributes, and that education is doing sterling service to mankind in producing competent people. This is an age when proficiency or mastery of a subject commands high respect and brings great personal satisfaction and confidence, and if the best jobs go to those who are most highly trained, then it is because we all recognize the immediate and dominant values of the most important task to those whose training has been the most specialized and intensive, and to such people we entrust our health, our scientific future, and our very lives.

But the notion that intensive and very accurate knowledge of a narrow field and nothing more can constitute a liberally educated man is a grotesque absurdity. Nearly thirty years ago Nicholas Murray Butler declared:

"Specialization is the parent of information and of a certain type of skill, but it is the foe of learning and the mortal enemy of wisdom. Not narrow men, however keen, but broad men sharpened to a point, are the ideal product of a sound system of school and college education."

For the term "doctor," Webster's Collegiate Dictionary gives as the first synonym the phrase "a teacher; a learned man" and then adds the significant captain Archaic. I suggest to you that we have somehow reversed the order of our higher degrees, for the summit capstone of modern education—the Doctorate of Philosophy — is a degree now awarded not to a candidate of broad and universal learning, but rather to one who has narrowly demonstrated that he has mastered a segment of some science or art.

Dean Harold Stoke of the Graduate School of the University of Washington has recently remarked that for our generation, at least, the man of distinction will rarely be pictured with a book in his hand.

'Who Is This Character'

It may be that I am only indulging in a sort of academic nostalgia. Surely we would not exchange the modern service for the former livery stable or the modern delivery room for yesterday's midwife. Doubtless a knowledge of electronics is more pertinent today than acquaintance with Greek verbs, and perhaps the man of competence is superior to the man of learning.

It was once held that it took a wise man to say "I don't know," but today's quiz program prefers a competent man who knows some of the answers—for the answers pay dividends, and acknowledgement of ignorance, even if it be relative, cuts you off the program. We expect the man of competence to possess knowledge, but we are indifferent—perhaps even suspicious of him—if he possesses wisdom as well. I doubt if many think today of Knowledge as Tennyson once wrote:

Let her know her place,
She is the second, not the first.

A higher hand must make her mild
If all be not in vain, and guide
Her footsteps, moving side by side
With Wisdom, like the younger child.

For she is earthly, of the mind,
But Wisdom, heavenly, of the soul.

In somewhat the same fashion, we have come to direct our education away from one of its original purposes of developing character; for among the virtues of the older schooling was the hope that strict study of various disciplines and close association with liberal arts would produce intellectual stamina and moral courage. Less delicately than in Tennyson's poetry, this change in the texture of education is detected in our current speech, where, when we speculate about a person, we are less apt to meditate about his character than to ask someone, "Who is this character?" The change in our modern use of this honored word may not be a sign of the times, but it is at least revealing.

The Deep, Deep Freeze

Of course, it is not necessary for the humanities and the meditative disciplines to carry the entire burden of providing character and supporting wisdom and culture, for which the exacter fields of the sciences and technology also encompass the same virtues — integrity, stability of purpose, personal responsibility—that we cherish as the choice requisites of character. Someone has remarked that the love of beauty can as well be engendered by a suspension bridge as by a Gothic cathedral, or integrity be as truly found in organic chemistry as in ancient history.

What he have to fear is that man today, in this country of scientific magic and technologic advance, will take the products of training and skill as a satisfactory substitute for the aesthetic values that have been sacrificed or sublimated in producing them; and not only will never enter the Gothic cathedral to observe its beauty or to worship, but also will drive across the suspension bridge, fretful only of its interference with his car radio which is probably playing "Doggie in the Window."

These are no idle academic alarms or pedantic tears from the ivory tower. There is genuine reason for concern if a large segment of our modern civilization looks to education only for mechanical marvels of metal or plastic.

I am afraid that already there are too many who cherish as the true ends of education only such material wonders as the television, the deep freeze, streptomycin, high-test gasoline, and jet propulsion, and if they have no concern for the great scientific truths upon which these blessings are based, or the intellectual achievements that made them possible, or the history of the struggle that created a free society and an economic system wherein they are available to everyone, then it is truly later than we think, and our concern about the end of true education becomes the "trumpet of a prophecy."

Reaction Piece

Reaction Piece Beginning A Slow Bow Out

David Mundy

Excepting one column in preparation, this will be the last "Reaction Piece until a new editor requests otherwise.

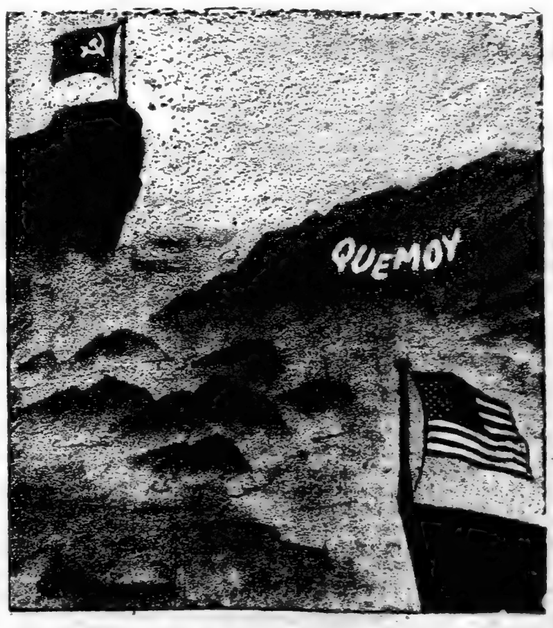
The pains of writing some one hundred and forty 33-space lines of coherent "reactions" are not inconsiderable. That may indeed sound like an alibi for some journalistic failings, which are admitted. I can also admit to receiving some pleasure from the task (otherwise known as "shooting off one's mouth"), but the work and enjoyment are rather closely counterbalanced.

And while "Reaction Piece" bows out, I would like to offer a few apologies.

While reacting, and "reacting" very strongly to the DTH editorship race of last year, I managed to get across an insinuation that the—I may have used the term "Kuralt forces"—used some rather unfair campaign charges, and that the "other side" was entirely above-board.

I have since learned of quite scurrilous remarks about Kuralt which were circulated about campus then. My apology is for stigmatizing the present editor as being somehow guilty of a smear, while such an assumption cannot be made about either of the gentlemen who were candidates.

I also "went overboard" in my criticism of the history and English departments as centers of criticism of the School of Business Administration. To have impugned their motives in such criticisms, alleging that they were doing it out of jealousy of the new buildings, in retrospect causes my conscience some pangs. The remainder of my criticisms, if I say so myself, still stand as valid. But my apologies.



And in the heat of column-writing I have also gotten around to making intimations about the motivations of SP leader and campus wheel Joel Fleishman. It isn't that I am now any fonder of the gentleman: such insinuations just have no place in what I would like to consider a fairly objective column. To say what another person's motivations are is impossible, and I shouldn't have ventured conjectures which may or may not have been valid ones.

It would probably even be in order to refer to Fleishman as one campus politician who "knows the score." (This is no pun on his present "Showboat" activities.) Many of the would-be campus politicians are little creatures of no great intellectual or moral stature. They are just "there", and little more. They may know their way around through the campus organizations They get elected to office, and pursue their undistinguished little paths.

Fleishman has been a politician of another breed. True, he has been a member of practically every organization on campus. But unlike the mediocre victims of "extra-curricular fever" he has served the organizations as more than just another name on their rolls.

His is a marvelous organizing ability, and a mind of just as great a depth and perception. My apologies.

YOU Said It

Don't Smother The Sparks

Editor:

I have only pity for people who think as illogically as Mr. Milton Henry McGowan. He put his finger on a fundamental statement of truth when he said, "no university can be truly great unless there is the most liberal interchange of ideology available to the students," and yet he wants to eliminate one of the essential features of this exchange: the association which students have with others who come from different backgrounds and have varied ideals. He wants the Yankees and the foreigners to leave and stop voicing their opinions about our so-called "peaceful relations between the races."

Why are you shrinking from an opportunity to exchange ideologies, Mr. McGowan? Are you afraid that our ideals, founded on prejudice and inequality, will crumble under the questioning gaze of outsiders? You have admitted that our precepts regarding race relations cannot endure the attacks of dissenters, because, like a spoiled child, you have stretched out your hands to the Legislature and cried, "Mama, make the bad bullies go 'way and let me play in peace."

Come, come, Mr. McGowan! Don't force the "Yankee fire-bugs" and foreigners to leave, lest you smother some of the sparks "that generate greatness" in this University!

For The Godless: Africa

Editor:

Enough, enough! Of course, when you first read about the Clark's and the Grimes' frothing at the mouth, you want right away to put them in their places—usually verbally (being firm believers in all this "Pen is mightier than the sword" bnsiness—cleverly, precisely, and conclusively. But come now, you must admit we are wasting our time. We are dealing with intellects (let me be kind) which will not be affected in the slightest by anything we might have to say—regardless of how clever or cutting we might be.

These have no opinion or respect for our judgment; remember they are pitying us as much as we are pitying them. Thus, this is just so much beating our heads against a stone wall. It is like the poor man boiling away in the cannibal's cauldron, yelling, "Stop, you can't do this; it isn't Christian!"

However, I do have one suggestion. It's pretty radical, I'll admit—but nevertheless, a good one. There seems to be enough unexplored territory left in Africa for backward civilizations. Thus, what do you think our chances are of sending these Godless souls over there for a few centuries while we calmly solve our problems; and then when they've managed to pass the head-shrinking stage, we can send a few brave missionaries over who would try to reveal to them a new idea—Christianity?

Dating Column, Anyone?

Editor.

I have two purposes in writing this letter. The first is that I would like to tell you how much I enjoy reading The Daily Tar Heel. I think it's tops as a college newspaper. Too often, only the few who are dissatisfied bother to express an opinion, but in complimenting you I feel that I'm expressing the sentiment of the overwhelming majority of those on campus.

The second purpose of this letter is to offer a suggestion for a feature to be included in future editions. When combined with the pressure of studies, the problems of social keep the student under a great deal of pressure. I think a column to answer his problems on dating would be very helpful.

Possibly some professor in the sociology or psychology department would be willing to handle this. If not, unbiased advice from a staff member would be helpful. I wish that you would print this letter so that other students might express their feelings on this subject.

Davis, Hemric Wreck Carolina's ACC Tourney Hopes, 95-82

N. C. State-Wake, Duke-Virginia Play In Semi-Finals Tonight, 7:30

By BERNIE WEISS

REYNOLDS COLISEUM, Raleigh — Wake Forest's Lowell "Lefty" Davis and Dickie Hemric, scoring 32 and 33 points, respectively, paved the way for a snappy and aggressive Deacon attack here last night to defeat North Carolina, 95-82, thus eliminating the Tar Heels in the Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament.

The Deacons will go on to the semi-finals, playing State tonight at 7:30. In the other semi-final game, Duke will meet Virginia at 9:30.

In the first game last night State defeated Clemson, 101-76. The afternoon opening round contests saw Duke defeat South Carolina, 83-67, and Virginia upset Maryland, 68-67, in over-time.

It was a losing cause from early in the first half for Carolina last night. The Deacons had a 10-point margin at intermission and built it up quickly in the opening minutes of the second half.

Although Carolina had defeated the Baptists twice during regular season play, the Tar Heels didn't have to contend with Davis. Very ineffective, though always a threat, in those games, Davis came through in surprising fashion in Wake's win last night. He scored 20 points in the first half and was the big difference which gave Wake the half-time lead and the game. The game marked the last time Carolina would have to contend with Hemric, out Davis, a junior, will be back to plague the Tar Heels next season.

Another big factor in the Carolina loss was the fouling out of Lennie Rosenbluth. He had tallied 29 before coming up with his fifth foul at 7:04 in the second half.

In last night's first game, State's runaway from Clemson was marked by the setting of four new records.

CLEMSON'S BILL Yarborough, in scoring 34 points, set a new field goal mark of 15, breaking Virginia's Buzz Wilkinson's standard of 13. State's 101 points broke Duke's old mark of 96, and the combined total points of both teams, 177, broke the Duke-Virginia record of 164. The Carolina-Wake Forest game last night was also a total of 177 points.

State's number of field goals, 68, set a new mark which the 'Pack had set against Wake Forest, 62.

All of the old records were the first ones set up in last year's initial ACC Tournament.

State, after the opening minutes, brushed off the Tigers very easily until after half-time. Then the South Carolinians came back to narrow the lead to 12 points at 13:20 left in the game. By 11:00 the margin was down to eight, but the Wolfpack decided it had played around long enough and got down to business. The lead stretched to 20, then 30, but came down shortly before the end of the game when Barry Ryan got hot temporarily.

WAKE FOREST took the early lead, but not by more than four points, until Carolina tied it after three minutes at 8-8. Then Vayda hit on a pair of fouls and Young dropped in a lay-up to put UNC in front momentarily. Wake took a one-point margin at 14:48, but UNC came back and held the lead until Jackie Murdock hit on a push to give the Deacons the advantage, 25-24. They held it from there on, the score at half-time being 48-41.

Frosh Tank Tourney Sat.

Aprpoximately 40 college freshman swimmers are expected to be entered in the first annual Freshman Invitational Swimming Meet scheduled in Bowman Gray Pool here tomorrow afternoon and evening.

University of North Carolina swimming coach Ralph Casey has received a full team entry of 14 from Duke, three entries from Clemson and two from VPI to date in addition to the Tar Heel freshmen. N. C. State will send its freshman sensation Dick Fadgen to the event. Other entries are expected to be received for the day-long meet before the closing time today.

Preliminary events will be run off tomorrow afternoon with the finals at night. The meet will be run on a dual meet schedule of events, but no team title will be awarded.

Invitations were sent to colleges throughout the South for the first event of its kind here.

U.Va. Upsets Terps, 68-67

Reynolds Coliseum, Raleigh—Virginia's Buzz Wilkinson demonstrated his All-American ability here this afternoon as he tossed in 30 points to lead his Cavaliers to a 68-67 upset victory over nationally-ranked Maryland's Terrapins in over-time.

The game was a close one throughout, but it was Virginia's superiority from the foul line which gave the team a surprise victory. The Cavaliers scored on 18 free throws, Maryland only 13, and the Terps were out front on the field goal score, 27-25.

The score at halftime was Virginia 35-33. At the end of the regulation game it was 59-all.

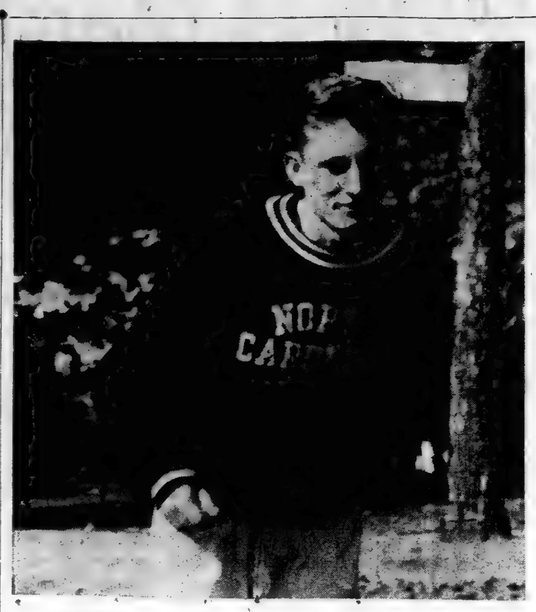
Three players scored in double figures for the stunned Terps, who certainly missed the services of Frank Fuqua. Bob Dilworth and Bob O'Brien each scored 18, while Bob Everett tallied 16 points. Bob Kessler, expected to be a big scorer in the Maryland tournament efforts, was able only to get seven.

Swedes Make Big Hit Here

Wednesday night Woollen Gym was the scene of one of the greatest exhibitions of strength, balance and grace ever seen on this campus. A near capacity crowd was on hand to watch the performance of the Swedish gymnastics team.

The key note underlying the acts of the woman members of the team was grace and beauty. Their ball routine and synchronized exercises were so well coordinated that it seemed like one continuous fluid notion.

Tumbling, by both men and women, was one of the features of the show. Using the Norwegian spring board, the men would perform some amazing tumbling feats such as doing a forward flip over the high table which is 6½ high.



The audience was very receptive to the acts which displayed the tremendous strength of the Swedes. One of these was the difficult feat of doing a finger stand starting from the prone position.

Bradley, Oklahoma City Enter NCAA Tournament

NEW YORK, March 3 (AP)—Bradley and Oklahoma City University were added to the National Collegiate basketball championship field today and immediately joined half a dozen other teams in looking around for a used Cinderella outfit to wear in the tournament.

The two "independents" from the midlands area, whose composite record this season shows 16 victories and 36 defeats, were chosen for "at large" berths by Reaves Peters, chairman of the Western selection committee, who pointed out that they're not as bad as they look.

Oklahoma City 9-16 and Bradley 7-19 probably have as good a chance to don the Cinderella garb Bradley wore last year as Williams, Villanova, Miami, Ohio, Penn State, Memphis State or Idaho State, all of whom are in the NCAA tournament.

TAR HEEL veteran distance runner Bobby Barden, heads a list of returning lettermen from last year's team which was second in the conference behind Maryland's Terps. Barden captured third in the two-mile conference race last spring and will be a mainstay for the Tar Heels in the same event this season.

ACC Meet Here In May Heads Tar Heel Outdoor Track Card

By RAY LINKER

The Atlantic Coast Conference outdoor track meet here at the end of the season highlights a 10-meet schedule for Carolina which also includes the Florida Relays, Penn Relays, and seven dual meets.

Tar Heel thinclads have started working out for the opening meet on March 26, right on the heels of their Indoor Games' conference win over Maryland, 36-35½. Although not too many have shown up for practice yet, Coach Dale Ranson is anticipatng a large turnout, which will include 14 of last year's 20 lettermen.

Six of the ten meets this year are carded for Chapel Hill's Fetzer Field. The schedule is similar to last season's with the addition of Wake Forest being the only difference. This is the first time in many years that the Deacons have fielded a team.

THREE TEAMS which UNC lost to last year, Princeton, Duke, and Maryland, will again furnish top competition. South Carolina, Virginia, and N. C. State will be seeking revenge for losses to the Heels last season.

Ranson will enter a moderate number of men in the Florida Relays March 26, as in the past. Last year eight men paced the Tar Heels to third place.

If any boys in the season's early meets display particularly outstanding ability, Ranson will enter them in the Penn Relays in Philadelphia April 29 and 30. Carolina has entered very few in the meet in the past, but those that have performed have scored highly.

The conference meet here on May 13 and 14 will give the Tar Heels a chance to avenge last year's one and one-half point loss to Maryland in College Park.

RETURNING LETTERMEN are Bobby Barden, Bill Booth, Steve Marcinko, Larry Maslow, Don Mitchell, Roger Morris, Vince Murray, Glenn Nanney, Boyd Newnam, Roland Perdue, Charlie Scott, Bob Wilson, Don Wright, and Charlie Yarborough.

Several fine performers for last year's once-beaten frosh team are expected to aid this year's varsity squad considerably, including Jim Beatty, Claude Rhule, Richard Waters, and Ken Bryant.

The schedule (meet is at Chapel Hill unless otherwise indicated):

March 26—Florida Relays, Gainesville, Fla.

April 2—N. C. State; April 6—Princeton; April 16—Maryland at College Park; April 19—Wake Forest; April 23—South Carolina; April 29 and 30—Penn Relays, Philadelphia; April 30—Virginia at Charlottesville.

May 7—Duke, May 13 and 14—ACC meet.

Femme Cagers Lose To Duke Lassies

The UNC women's basketball club went down to defeat at the hands of a powerful Duke team, 62-34, in a game played here Tuesday.

The Carolina coeds led the Duke team in the first quarter of the game, but then the lassies from Durham caught fire, and were never headed from then on. Sara Cashwell, playing her best game of the year, was high scorer with 21 points, seven of them coming on free throws.

Pitching Big Question; Only One Hurler Back

Pitching is the big question mark on the North Carolina baseball squad as the Tar Heels continue daily workouts in preparation for their March 24 opener against Georgia Tech in Winter Park, Fla.

Only one letterman moundsman is back in the North Carolina fold and Coaches Bunn Hearn and Walter Rabb are searching high and low for throwing talent.

Righthander Tom Maultsby is the one returning vet and any help he gets will have to come from a crop of sophomores. Maultsby saw service in only five games last year and finished with a 2-2 mark.

Brightest spark beyond Maultsby is sophomore Jim Raugh. He had an outstanding season with the freshmen last year and was impressive for a semi-pro team in Nova Scotia during the summer. Rabb says the hard-throwing righthander may develop into the squad's number one hurler.

Also rated as possible starters at this point are sophs Arthur Stone, Don Hill and Morris Hall. Hall is the only lefty in the group. Billy Joe Johnson and Bob Johnson, non-letterman returnees from last season's club, are also putting in bids for starting assignments.

The only other spot giving Hearn and Rabb any serious trouble is second base where veteran Harry Lee Lloyd has pulled up with a serious injury to the cartilage in his right knee. He'll be out indefinitely and Tar Heel coaches are looking for a replacement for the season opener.

Sophomore Buddy Strausse of Charlotte, who had a good year with last season's frosh, and Campbell College transfer Tom Breake are the top candidates for the double play sack job, with Breake given the edge on his hitting. "But anything can happen at second base, just like on the pitching staff, before that first game," Rabb said.

At least two players are in serious consideration for each of the other starting positions.

Veteran Will Frye, soph Russell Perry and Tom Zachary are all in line for the first base assignment. Zachary subbed at the bag last year behind Frye, who is currently missing baseball drills due to spring football practice. Frye also saw some starting duty behind the plate.

At the other infield positions, Jack Woods and Albert Long are fighting for the job at shortstop and sophs Chuck Hartman and Iva Lee Hill the third base assignment. Woods subbed behind hard-hitting Fred Dale last season. Hill is just out of service where he was impressive with the Randolph Field team.

Lettermen Connie Gravitte, Bobby Paller, Malcolm Harding and Ken Keller and soph Dick Hudson are in the running for outfield berths, as is Long, who saw service there last year.

Deacs End Drills With Game Saturday

It's football time at Wake Forest and an array of former Deacon stars will take on the varsity in an exhibition game tomorrow afternoon in Groves Stadium.

The preview of the 1955 Wake Forest eleven will get under way at 2:30. The public is invited to attend. Admision will be $1.

Coach Tom Rogers has been readying his crew for the past three weeks in spring training drills and the Deacons will get a strong test against some of the biggest names ever to come from the Baptist Hollow gridiron.

John (Red) Cochran will serve as player-coach for the alumni team which will include some professional stars as Harry Dowda, Red O'Quinn, Jim Staton, Bob Gaona, Joe Koch, Bill George and Ed Kissell.

Mike Sandusky Heads Top Terp Mat Combination

Maryland's defending champs will be heavy favorites to cop their second Atlantic Coast Conference title here tomorrow and Saturday in the first loop wrestling tournament.

The Terps, unbeaten in the conference this year, were declared 1954 champions on the basis of their regular season record. No tournament was held because the conference had only recently been organized.

Maryland has a 5-0 record this year, compared to a 4-1 record for Virginia's Cavaliers, expected to furnish the heaviest opposition to the Terps. Virginia bowed to Maryland, 18-12, during the regular season but has improved considerably and has two men who haven't been beaten this year.

Mike Sandusky, unbeaten Maryland heavyweight, will be favored to take the title in that weight.

Other teams entered are North Carolina, North Carolina State, Wake Forest, Duke, South Carolina and Clemson.

SOCCER PRACTICE

Soccer practice will start Monday on the intramural field at 4 o'clock. All aspirants, with or without experience, are invited to report.

The activities for the first night, Monday, March 14, will include exchange dinners among the fraternities' pledge classes. On Tuesday night each class will be host to two faculty members at dinner. On both Monday and Tuesday nights coffee breaks will be held by the sororities for the fraternity pledges.

Stunt night will be held by the pledge classes on Wednesday night in Memorial Hall.

A clean up project will take up Friday afternoon for the fraternity pledges with a banquet winding up the week's events on Friday night in Lenoir Hall.

Trophies will be awarded for the Field Day activities and for the best pledge class. In order to have judging for the best pledge class, each pledge trainer will present a report of his classes to Ray Jefferies, assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs. The committee planning Greek Week will choose three judges who will read the pledge trainers' reports and will then judge the best pledge class on the basis of scholarship, participation in Greek Week and activities during the year.

Hazel's Wrath Discussed In Law Review

Research on court decisions concerning insurance policy "windstorm" clauses as connected with Hurricane Hazel is one of the leading articles in the North Carolina Law Review, February isue, which has been published.

John L. Rendleman, Salisbury, a law student here and author of the article, has examined the existence of many court decisions and interpretations on the meaning of "windstorm" clauses, and his article deals with the subject in detail. He points out that recovery of windstorm loss hinges on whether the wind is the "proximate cause" of the loss or whether the damage by wind alone can be ascertained.

The North Carolina Law Review is a publication of the UNC School of Law.

The quarterly issue also includes a survey of North Carolina Supreme Court decisions for the 1954 spring term and an article by Wallace C. Murchison, attorney at law of Wilmington, on the income taxation of partnerships and partnership income under the new Federal Revenue Code.

Kuralt Terms Legislature's Charges 'Patently Absurd;' DTH Not Red—Brumfield

Editor Charles Kuralt yesterday answered charges by student legislators that The Daily Tar Heel is a "second Daily Worker" and that he and Managing Editor Fred Powledge are "lazy."

Editor Kuralt said most of the charges are "patently asburd," and dismissed accusations of lacking quality and "pseudo-intellecutalism" as "out of the same warped mold."

Kuralt's statement follows:

Most of the charges made by the legislators are, of course, patently absurd. It is good to see Lewis Brumfield and Frank Warren recanting on the bulk of their charges, but the fact is, despite their backdown, that they said precisely what they were reported to have said—that The Daily Tar Heel is a "second Daily Worker" and that the editor and managing editor are "lazy." Mr. Warren says his views were not correctly expressed by our reporter. Our reporter's reporting was accurate in every detail.

The charges that "quality" is lacking on the newspaper and that we are guilty of "pseudo-intellecutalism" are out of the same warped mold.

None of the legislators who sounded off on this subject has the dimmest acquaintance with the workings of The Daily Tar Heel, nor have they made any attempt whatever to find out anything.

We intend to cooperate with the investigation; but we intend to preserve The Daily Tar Heel's integrity against the irresponsibility that these politicans have shown.

Brumfield & Warren Write 'Clarifications'

Lewis Brumfield and Frank Warren, two members of student Legislature, wrote letters to The Daily Tar Heel yesterday to clarify their positions on certain criticisms concerning the newspaper which they made in Thursday night's Legislature meeting.

Brumfield in his letter said that he did not consider The Daily Tar Heel a Communist front newspaper (In his statement Thursday night Brumfield referred to The Daily Tar Heel as a "second Daily Worker.")

"The remark that I made about The Daily Tar Heel and The Daily Worker was unfortunate and not meant to be taken seriously. The very absurdity of the statement should bear that out," said Brumfield in his letter.

"The fact that I disagree with some of your editorial policy is not important. The important thing to me is that some of the students are dissatisfied with the newspaper. If enough students are dissatisfied, I believe that we should try to do something about it," said Brumfield's letter.

Warren, who referred to Charles Kuralt, editor, and Fred Powledge, managing editor, as "lazy" and "not doing a good job" and said that there was "poor coverage" of student activities by the newspaper in the Legislature session,

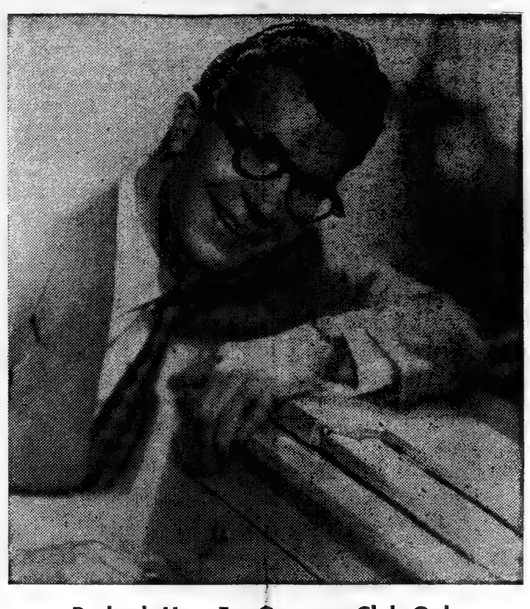
Radio Man Hits 'Smear' By Legislature

A Chapel Hill radio man told his audience yesterday he felt a student Legislature investigation of The Daily Tar Heel was the lawmakers' way of getting "their names on the front page."

He also said he was very unhappy to see smear tactics" used in the student Legislature.

The radio man was James Wright, and he was talking on his radio program, "Dig These," broadcast yesterday afternoon over WCHL, local station. Wright deviated from his regular record-and-comment program to discuss the proposed investigation with student Leslie Scott.

Wrigh is a former Daily Tar Heel staffer. He worked for the newspaper during 1953 and the spring of 1954, before he went into radio work.



'REACTIONARY ELEMENTS'

Wright assailed the "reactionary elements" in the student Legislature and what he termed the "gross generalizations" made by it.

Wright said he found "no excuse, no comparison" for Legislater Lewis Brumfield's labeling The Daily Tar Heel "the second Daily Worker." The label, said Wright, was a "very poor way" to "attack Kuralt's views."

"They just want their names on the front page," the radio man said.

Brubeck Here For Germans Club Only

Dave Brubeck, above, will give a concert Wednesday in Memorial Hall from 5 until 6 p.m. The concert will be for Germans Club members only, due to the fact that the club is a private organization and cannot sell tickets because of taxes, according to Jake Roundtree, president of the Club.

Legislators Chastised For Missing Meetings

By NEIL BASS

Although the legislators spent the larger part of their meeting Thursday night directing harsh words at The Daily Tar Heel, they themselves were given a severe tongue-lashing.

Their vocal paddling came at the hands of the chairman of the legislative Rules Committee, Bob Harrington. The offense, according to Harrngton, was a "deplorable" amount of absences.

The chairman warned the group that they had been neglecting their sworn duties by not coming to meetings. As he spoke, there were 29 out of 47 student representatives listening to his words.

Harrington told the body that he had been accepting "any old kind of excuse," but from now on, "only infirmary and required class excuses will be taken." One of the legislators, according to Harrington, had given as an excuse for missing a meeting that "he was eating his supper." The Rules Committee took this excuse without question, the chairman said.

In less dramatic matters of the night, Martin Jordan, speaker, gave a progresss report on bills that the group had already passed. Among these, a bill to revert profits from vending machines in dorms to dorm social funds was reported as "not being passed" until the N. C. General Assembly takes action on the proposed room and tuition hikes.

The measure calling for two "class-free Saturdays each semester was referred by the body to President Tom Creasy's appointed committee that has been working on the same idea.

The Orientation Committee appointees of President Tom Creasy were also approved by the group. The body consists of Jim Exum, Beverly Webb, Bob Young, Mebane Pritchett, Bob Harrington, Larry Ford, John Curtis, Gil Ragland, Bill Baum, Jane Cocke, Mary Dunn, Pat Mcbane, Denna Ashcraft and Sarah Jackson.

Investigation Tuesday

The committee which was appointed Thursday night by Legislator Martin Jordan to "investigate the quality and circulation problems of The Daily Tar Heel" will meet with Editor Charles Kuralt and Managing Editor Fred Powledge at 2:30 Monday afternoon in the Woodhouse Conference of Graham Memorial, according to Jack Hudson, chairman of the committee.

"Any student that wants to come is welcome to attend," said Hudson.

According to Hudson, the meeting will be a "roundtable discussion in a constructive fashion to determine, if possible, if there are any problems concerned with The Daily Tar Heel that can be

(See INVESTIGATION, page four.)

McElroy Hits DTH's Coverage

"The implicit policy of The Daily Tar Heel seems to be tha notices of the activities of . . . organizations aof Carolina students are not important enough to merit full and adequate coverage or to merit any coverage at all," said Legislator Harry McElroy in a letter to the newspaper yesterday concerning the criticism he made of The Daily Tar Heel in Thursday night's session of the student Legislature.

"But The Daily Tar Heel is financially supported by, and supposedly should serve, Carolina students," continued McElroy's letter. "It should therefore give full and adequate coverage to the activities of Carolina student organizations whenever these organizations request such coverage This coverage should be the primary consideration, not huge photographs on the front page (or any page), not Doris Fleeson, and not the Alsops, not dispatches of the Associated Press, which can be read in other newspapers."

According to McElroy, the Monogram Club, the University Party the Young Democrats Club and the Dialectic Senate are among the organizations of Carolina students that have asked to have notices or stories printed in The Daily Tar Heel and have had no satisfaction given to these requests. According to McElroy, the notices and stories of these organizations have been small, inadequate, obscruely-placed or have not appeard at all.

Student Party Expected To Nominate Either Muntzing Or Fowler For President

Reid, Bryan Possible Veep Candidates

By LOUIS KRAAR

When the Student Party meets this Monday night to nominate a student body president, it will nominate either Manning Muntzing or Don Fowler.

Neither Fowler nor Muntzing has officially announced his candidacy, but it is quite clear in SP circles that they are the two who will fight it out for the nomination.

The SP will also nominate a candidate for vice-president. David Reid and Norwood Bryan are both expected to try for the nomination. Reid said yesterday, when asked about the vice-presidential nomination, that he was going to try for it.

In an afternoon session of the Advisory Board, SP members decided to pick their presidential candidate first at the Monday night meeting. There was some question earlier in the week over which candidate—presidential or vice-presidential—would be picked first.

It is known that Muntzing will not accept the vice-presidential nomination if he loses the presidential bid. Thus, Muntzing supporters were particularly eager to have the presidential nominations first because should Muntzing win the nomination, his supporters would like to see Fowler in the second-spot post.

Fowler is a junior from Winston-Salem and is current student body treasurer.

Muntzing, a junior from Moorefield, West, Va., is currently Interdormitory Council president.

The Student Party is fairly evenly split between the two candidates for student body president. Muntzing supporters, earlier this week, raised unofficial objections that the Fowler backers "packed" the SP meeting. Under the SP's rules, anyone can become a member after attending two meetings and paying dues.

Party Chairman Don Geiger, when questioned about the charge that Fowler's supporters "packed" the meeting, said yesterday: "We always have a lot of new faces showing up around election time. Recently, we did have a lot of Chi Psis join. But, that same night, we also had an equal number of boys from Aycock Dorm to join." (Muntzing lives in Aycock Dorm.)

Neither side in this inter-party conflict had any comment yesterday. Jim Turner, SP big-wig, said that "one thing is sure. Whoever we nominate will win the presidency."

Stovall Will Deliver Lecture Monday Night

"Leaves of Grass: The Evolution of a Book" will be the topic of the spring Humanities Faculty Lecture to be delivered Monday by Dr. Floyd Stovall, professor of English here.

The lecture will be given in Carroll Hall Auditorium at 8 p.m.

The Humanities Faculty Lectures are presented three times a year by the undergraduate division of the Humanities as a means of presenting faculty members to the University and general public. Dr. William Wells of the English department was the fall lecturer.

As this year marks the centennial of the publication of the first edition of Leaves of Grass, many universities and organizations plan special observances in connection with this centennial. Dr. Stovall's lecture will give UNC one of the earliest of the series of commemorations of Whitman's book.

Dr. Stovall, a member of the UNC faculty since 1949, received his A.B., M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the Universty of Texas.

The University Library is now displaying an exhibit of works by and about Whitman, including various editions of Leaves of Grass Charles Feinburg, noted Whitman collector of Detroit, Mich., has presented a group of 14 rare editions and rare books about Whitman in honor of Dr. Stovall. Feinburg has also lent the Library photostats of Whitman manu scripts for its exhibition.

The Solitary Hunter, the lates critical biography of Whitman which was reviewed by Dr. Stovall in the Feb. 5, 1955 issue of The Saturday Review is also on exhibition, along with a copy of Dr. Stovall's review.

Dorm Improvements Committee Meet Held; Only 4 Show Up

The Dorm Improvement Committee met yesterday with three people, besides the chairman, attending.

Those who showed up were Manning Muntzing, president of the Interdormitory Council ; Bill Baum, representing Old East; J. Burce Morton, representing Grimes; Lewis Brumfield, representing Cobb, and Jack Hudson, chairman.

The discussion centered around the problem of social rooms. Nearly every dormitory mentioned in its report the need for improved social facilities.

Cobb is getting a large social room which will be open to all students from all dormitories, said Brumfield.

Bill Baum asked which was more important, better social roomsor relieving the situation of three in a room.

The need for study rooms was also brought out. Manning Muntzing said that all study room possibilities should be realized immediately. "Study rooms are a prime necessity," he said.

In talking about improvement Brumfield pointed out that it was embarrassing to ask for improvements when the members of the dorms persisted in tearing up doors, vending machines and windows.

The committee will meet again Thursday, at 2 p. m. All dorm presidents and all other interested persons should come, Chariman Hudson said.

Meet Set For Students Who Want To Join Y

All those interested in becoming active members of the YMCA are invited to attend a meeting for active members to be held Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the YMCA building; Ed Hennessee, membership chairman, said yesterday.

SAYS SHOW BOATER BEULAH ADAMS HUNTER:

Chapel Hill Excitement Overshadows Eating, Sleeping

ACTRESSES MARTHA FOUSE & BEULAH ADAMS HUNTER
. . . from two Show Boats: one was launched last night

By ED MYERS

"I've never had such a wonderful time. I'm so excited I can't eat or sleep." These are the words of Mrs. Beulah Adams Hunter, who was the Playmakers' guest for their premiere performance of Show Boat last night.

Mrs. Hunter, on whose life Edna Ferber based Show Boat, said that she did not have words to describe her visit to Chapel Hill. "The students, with their background, should really go places."

Mrs. Hunter related many incidents about her 26 years on the James Adams Floating Theater which could fill several novels of Show Boat character. Probably the most interesting was the one concerning the waterbarrel incident, which Miss Ferber adopted for her novel. It seems that Mrs. Hunter, then Miss Adams, would arrange to meet Mr. Hunter at the water barrel each evening; his cue being the slamming of her cabin door.

There were, however, many actors who got thirsty at that time of evening, consequently, Mr. Hunter made just as many trips to the barrel, and drank an equal number of dippers of water before his love finnaly would arrive. "He has loathed water ever since," said Mrs. Hunter.

"All the characters in Show Boat are true to life," she said. "Mr. Hunter acted out each one while he described them to Miss Ferber."

In order for Mrs. Hunter to attend last night's production it was necessary for her to find someone to run her grocery store in Saginaw, Mich. Who took the job? Why another old show boat actor, of course.

When asked how she felt about the actual location of Show Boat's being moved to Mississippi, she remarked, "I don't think Miss Ferber has ever visited Mississippi."

One scene in the show portrays the actors doing a play for the highly interested audience and a bearded man shoots the "villain." "I recall," reminisced Mrs. Hunter, "in one scene when I put a glass of—supposedly—poison up to my lips one enthusiastic lady jumped from her seat and yelled, 'don't you drink that, young lady!'."

Mrs. Hunter was taken to the Planetarium Thursday night and afterwards, while being photographed with some of the Playmakers, she exclaimed, "What a thrill it is to be on the stage again!".

Crowd Sees 'Show Boat' First Night

By TED ROSENTHAL

Before a crowded first-night house at Memorial Hall, "Showboat," the Jerome Kern-Oscar Hammerstein musical, was last night launched on its first college-theatre cruise.

While there were loose spars and areas of chipped paint visible aboard, (review will appear next week), the vehicle never floundered. With the higher spots balancing the dips, they leveled out at a degree of satisfying entertainment. If the production wasn't quite a booming triumph, it did make a victorious sound—a lot of sound—and the audience reaction seemed very favorable.

Martha Fouse, playing Magnolia Hawks, and Marty Boyle as Ellie, made the strongest impressions (as an immediate reaction), along with the consistently effective vocal support of the chorus.

Although it could have been slicker, it could have been sicker; —it was fun!

ACTOR JOHN SHEARIN

This Is A Watchbird Watching You!

The Daily Tar Heel has had a lot to say all year about the exceptional wisdom and responsibility of campus politicians and the student Legislature.

We have learned the hard way that this does not necessarily apply three weeks before the elections. It is a little saddening to find that the national mania for "investigating" anything you don't agree with has descended upon the campus.

The student Legislature's watchbirds have the power of life and death over The Daily Tar Heel, not altogether a healthy situation. It could lead to a controlled press, except for a line in the student Constitution:

"Neither the Publications Board nor the student Legislature shall exercise any control over the editor and chiefs of the various publications."

The Legislature can investigate 365 days a year, but they cannot — and this the SP fire-eaters of night before last forgot — they cannot control policy.

The indignation of Larry McElroy, Charles Hyatt, Frank Warren, Lewis Brumfield and Norwood Bryan, whatever they now insist their "motives" were, vented itself on the Legislature floor as embryonic thought control. They like any other students, are free to disagree with The Daily Tar Heel to any length in letters to the editor. They are emphatically not free to gag The Daily Tar Heel. For such laughable designations as "the second Daily Worker" they have been appropriately hooted down.

After the first gasp of disbelief, we're resigned to investigation; it has happened to better men and better newspapers than we are. Maybe — we hop you'll be pulling for us — we'll be able to snare some of the grave probers as they wander through the office, give them a typewriter and put them to work.

At the very least, the investigation may convince the investigators that the "lazy" Daily Tar Heel staff works late into the night after most of them are drinking beer in Spero's.

We have come upon a quotation from our pseudo-intellectual notebook that would seem to apply. Athenaus said it: "Only the good things are worthy of your investigation."

The adage gives us solace as we await the pseudo-wrath of the elected representatives of the people.

Gracious Living—XXIV

Tennis, anyone?

Not, apparently, on Carolina's clay courts. It has come to the attention of the Gracious Living in Chapel Hill Dept. that the only tennis courts open these balmy days are the abominable and always crowded asphalt surfaces. Somebody, clearly, needs to stop staring at a calendar and come out into the 75 degree sunshine — with a key — and fling open the gates to the catgut brigade.

Brumfield's Red —(At Least His Face Is Red)

Louis Kraar

IT WAS the day after the student Legislature voted to "investigate" the student newspaper, and all through the office not a typewriter was stirring.

Red - faced Lewis Brumfield ambled in and delivered a small homily to Daily Tar Heel staffers on "how you sometimes say things in public meetings that you don't really mean." Legislator Brumfield had called the paper a "second Daily Worker."

Yesterday Brumfield was explaining: "I didn't really mean it. You know how it is. Some times you say thing in the heat of debate. Hope you understand."

Later in the afternoon lanky Frank Warren, another legislator who had accused the editors of being "lazy," came into the office. "I take it back. I didn't really mean that you were lazy. Actually, I don't know whether you're lazy or not."

And so it went all afternoon. The investigators, apparently enjoyed their roles as legislative probers, came, babbled, and left. A few of them saw a sign on the Business Office of the paper.

"Warning. Big Brother Brumfield is Watching You," the sign read. And the staff laughed at a bunch of campus politicians who got carried away with themselves on a spring night at a meeting.

★

A BOY AND girl stretched out under a big tree on campus and sighed at squirrels and birds running and flying about them. South Building secretaries increased their coke runs from four to six times daily. And open windows in classrooms rippled papers on professors' desks.

Hogan's Lake parties, empty Saturday classes, full South Building steps—Carolina way of life in the spring has started. And it's great.

★

THE PROFESSOR wanted to know what the student thought of a poem he had just read.

"I like it. Think it's very good. Of course, I don't understand it. But I always know that if I can't understand it, it must be great," the student replied.

★

THE BOY was carrying on a civil war with himself over whether or not he should date a girl his roommate told him about. Finally, he called his roommate on the phone to try to get some information about the girl.

"Well, how does she look?" asked the would-be Romeo.

"She's got a grand personality," answered his friend.

"What's she like though?"

"She's a very nice girl."

"Could you describe her to me again?"

"Well, she's no queen. As a matter of fact, she's not even a countess. But she's really nice."

INCIDENTAL INTELLIGENCE: the Dorm Improvements Committee of the IDC heard complaints that Old East's phones (save one) are out of order, that Cobb Dorm's Tru-Ade machine is ripped apart, and that Grimes needs stoppers in its sinks.

OLD WEST, disturbed over fact that the University grounds people always carried away their bench in the winter, solved the problem by chaining the bench to a metal pipe and locking the chain.

Down From The Olympian Clouds

'It's Almost Election Time'

Editor:

The word "expert" was defined by a speaker I once heard this way: "X is an unknown quantity, and (s)pert is a drip under pressure."

Lewis (spert) Brumfield, who gained this title after exhibiting his prowess with a water pistol in the student Legislature meeting in Raleigh last fall, fires another watery shot with the ridiculous "the second Daily Worker." Don't take this charge seriously; "watery" steam evaporates, quickly.

Larry McElroy says, "Bring the Tar Heel down from the Olympian clouds of pseudo-intellectualism." Bring who down from "Olympian clouds?" (Milton couldn't have said it better.)

If I may paraphrase Norword Bryan's comment, I should like to offer it as a suggestion. "If the (wind) of the (legislators) were cut and people worked for the love of the (University)", there might be an improvement: also The Daily Tar Heel might have something to write about.

It is a known fact that any organization which finds so much wrong with what another organizations says is not doing is usually not doing anything itself.

I hope no one who reads the comments of these "experts" is fooled by them. It's almost spring, it's almost election time, it's "get my name in the paper" time for many who care little for the reputation of the school, and unfortunately have to be quoted if the paper is to be credited with proper coverage.

Before you boys start looking for motes, you'd better get that beam out of the way. It makes for easier and more intelligent looking.

Yours with the blessings of Neptune, who stays under water.

Guess What? Sue's Dating Ralph

Editor:

My message is directed to the Student Legislature which has voted to investigate The Daily Tar Heel.

So you want to run a newspaper? You had rather be over in South Building getting information from Mr. Armstrong; down in the Central Records Office; covering a basketball game; — all this you would prefer to seeing "Battle Cry"?

You might even have a big test coming up, but the politicians are having a pow-pow, and you have to be there to see what is in the air, so to speak.

Being connected with the DTH only indirectly, as I had to work as a reporter who did any odd job open for two weeks, I haven't been part of the staff.

But I know the work the whole staff puts into that publication everyday so we the students can know what is going on in Chapel Hill.

Mr. Norwood Bryan, you would prefer the staff work for the love of the paper? You don't even work for the money!

Thank you very much when you call the Daily Tar Heel "A professional piece of journalism", Mr. Lewis Brumfield. That was about the best compliment you could pay the students who want someday to be professional.

But I suppose you would prefer a column headed "Guess What" — Sue Jones isn't dating that blond from Davidson anymore. She's pinned to our own Ralph Smith. He's a Sigma Nothing, you know.

I think all of our legislators who wish for the DTH to advertise for help would find that the newspaper needs not to do that. With a campus as large as ours, and all the diversified activities, any capable and able person is welcome.

Ellen Winslow

It's 'Childish'

Editor:

As a transfer student, I have had an opportunity to see some other college newspapers and nowhere to my knowledge is there a college paper with so mature and readable an editorial page as yours.

I do not know any of the Legislature members who brought the ridiculous charges against the newspaper, but I can only conclude that they are playing politics.

I applaud The Daily Tar Heel for its news coverage, which seems to be adequate and impartial in every way. I do not like it any more than anyone else when the paper is full of advertisements, but that is the way you get your support; certainly nobody can intelligently complain about that.

I think I speak for the overwhelming majority of students when I say that the forthcoming "investigation" can be summed up in one work — "childish."

Integration Problem

Eye Of The Horse

Roger Will Coe

(The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things, minimizing others.—Hipporotis, circa 500 B. C.)

THE HORSE was looking rather more ludicrous than usual as he pranced, chittered, hummed and gummed snatches of everything and nothing near Memorial Hall.

"I'm nostalgic," The Horse sighed to my query. "Show Boat reminds me of my stage triumphs of yesterday."

Oh? The Horse was once with a circus, perhaps? Muscular ladies stood on his back?

"Is that really your idea of my appeal to the ladies, bless them!, in my younger days?" The Horse asked, genuinely hurt. "Is it?"

Well, I hadn't meant it that way. But —

"And muscular women, no less!" The Horse pursued his injury in true Irish fashion, determined to enjoy his miseries to the last dour dregs. "I, who made Bankhead, Helen Hayes, Mary Pickford, Greta Garbo, Beulah Adams Hunter, countless other stars of stage and screen, turn to look after me as I passed!"

"Have you never, perhaps, heard tell of a famed Pony Ballet" The Horse asked mildly, knocking me down and settling himself uncomfortably atop me. "Would you be surprised to know I led the most famous one of all famous Pony Ballets?"

I was hardly in a position to argue this. In fact, I was hardly in a position to breathe. The Horse was very heavy.

"On the contrary, I rarely played a heavy, as we of the stage term a villain," The Horse misunderstood me, as usual. "Why, generations of theater-goers went away happy because I provided horse-laughs! And my roles in Greek Tragedy have never been forgotten."

I thought Dr. Walter Allen, Jr., would like to forget about The Horse and Greek Drama!

"I played Pliohippus in Hippolytus," The Horse dreamed on, and still on me. "You didn't know?"

Horsie? Pliohippus was a one-toed horse ascribed to the North American Pliocene Age, having strongly hypsodont molar teeth. Ouch! Hey, now! Ouwww!

"You reminded me," The Horse explained, "that I have to put the bite on you for the price of ducats for Show Boat, which will be to-night and tomorrow."

"Beulah Adams Hunter, who gave Edna the idea for her book, Show Boat, to start with, comes all the way from Saginaw, Michigan, to see our dolls and guys do the opus — and you want to know is it worth it?" The Horse neighed shrilly. "Well, do we go, Roger?"

Oh, I was included in this?

"I wouldn't have you miss it for anything," The Horse said magnamimously. "Just hop on my back and off we go to Ledbetter-Pickard's on East Franklin; or to the Playmakers' Office, in Abernethy. And HURRY, because there aren't many seats left!"

Would The Horse kindly to get offa me so I could get onta him?

"Why, but of course," The Horse conceded. "I bought tickets several days ago; but golly, I gotta go each night, don't I? Let's see . . . once for Martha Fouse; once for Marty Boyle; once for Suzn Elliott; once for — "

It was playing only two more nights. Tonight and tomorrow. Lucky for my money, with a cast of 66, plus orchestra, wow! Well . . . I'll see youse at the shows!

Previewing Brubeck

Tom Spain

The coming of the Dave Brubeck Quartet is being anticipated in no small way by the many jazz enthusiasts, and fortunately, a preview has reached Chapel Hill a week early in the form of a new Brubeck album.

Though Brubeck is known to be a dyed-in-the-wool improvisor, the latest release was recorded oin Columbia Records' supersonic studio in New York, a practice which has been avoided rather carefully by the serious jazz-classicist. He has always maintained that his group performs as it should only before an audience, from which it is said that the inspiration is drawn.

The JAZZ GOES TO COLLEGE, and DAVE BRUBECK AT STORYVILLE albums were recorded live at concerts attended by Brubeck followers, and it does seem logical that a group so well received by its listeners will perform accordingly.

EIGHT OLD FAVORITES

But despite the fears of the four artists, the results of the studio recordings compare quite favorably with anything Brubeck has put on record, -live or canned. The Quartet here does eight numbers, some of them old favorites, others contemporary jazz regulars, and of course the popular Brubeck improvisations, which know no title until they are played back. The new album is entitled: BRUBECK TIME, and is on a twelve-inch Columbia LP.

Opening with a fantasy called, AUDREY, the four experimentors make an attempt at depicting Audrey Hepburn coming from a green wood. Be this as it may, AUDREY is a fine example of one of Brubeck's home-made ballads.

Soft and delicate with a mildy, plaintive air, the attempt at musical portraiture reveals the expressive appeal of Paul Desmond's alto saxaphone, and it gives Brubeck a chance to express his inventive talents. Also typical of the Brubeck style, there is ample integrative work between the leader and his alto men.

JEEPERS CREEPERS

Next they swing into JEEPERS CREEPERS, a regular in most any jazzman's book. Perhaps the most significant, if not the most pleasing characteristic of the Brubeck rendition, is the marked relationship between the melodic and rhythmic instruments. Drummer Joe Dodge and bass man Bob Bates here work with amazing unamimity with Brubeck and Desmond. The steady but easy beat is remindful of the groups' working of TAKE THE A TRAIN.

A long piano solo gives an almost classic touch to the Brubeck version of PENNIES FROM HEAVEN. The popular Brubeck-Desmond counter-point element in the final measures of the standard also adds an air of dignity which removes the tin-pan alley sound even though the rhythm swings.

It might be said that PENNIES FROM HEAVEN is seriously happy. The tune swings easily and lightly, yet the solos by Desmond and Brubeck, often in a minor, meditative fashion, are often serious, creating a pleasing contrast.

The quartet skips lightly through Kern's WHY DO I LOVE YOU, wasting little time and keeping pretty close to the straight melody of the ballad. Desmond takes most of the solos and seems to enjoy himself, romping through chorus after chorus, adding a foreign strain or two as he goes.

ADAMANT RETORT

According to the record jacket on which letters from Brubeck to George Avakian are printed, STOMPIN' FOR MIL is a slightly adamant retort to criticism offered by an onlooker who said without restraint, "You're no good." And so the group so stomps for Mil, and rather noticeably, Brubeck pounds the piano keys with added gusto.

Perhaps best of the swing tunes in the collection is Fats Waller's KEEPIN' OUT OF MISCHIEF NOW, in which Brubeck imitates the Waller piano style, as well as mixing it with his own. A combination of two such distinct styles proves interesting as well as enjoyable. KEEPIN' OUT OF MISCHIEF NOW is a genuinely happy tune, and brings memories of the smiling Fats himself.

In BROTHER, CAN YOU SPARE A DIME?, a lively blues number, Brubeck and Desmond excell in their ability to integrate two opposing melodic lines.

The new album, BRUBECK TIME, is worthy of the attention of not only jazz fans, but of all those who appreciate any kind of music. Unique, fresh, natural music is hard to come by these days, but fortunately, it can be found on record, — and in Memorial Hall this Wednesday.

The Quarterly Must Be 'Edifying & Interesting'

Bill Scarborough

Ed Yoder with whom I seem to be carying on an inadvertent and thoroughly amicable feud anent the shortcomings of the Carolina Quarterly, raises an interesting question, to wit: "when does a student critic reach the maturity, the grasp, the perch, from which he may largely condemn a publication edited by a contemporary and classmate?"

The answer is almost a truism. Any critic is qualified to condemn at the identical moment he is qualified to praise.

A LITTLE UNIVERSAL TRUTH

It has been the traditional role of the critic from the time of Aristotle to establish, define and apply standards; operating as he does from a necessarily rigid and static position, any person whose concern is the evaluation of literature must distinguish between good and bad; this is universally true for all critics, and Mr. Yoder is a critic by his own definition.

To be effective in his job, no critic can occupy the equivocating position of recognizing artistic failure and urging its tolerance to avoid intimidating the artist (or the editor). Such an attitude is the abdication of the dynamic and fundamenal purpose of critical examination; no artist will develop properly if he remains in ignorance of his mistakes, no faults will be rectified if they go unnoticed.

A man needs to be told where he fails as well as where he succeeds, condemned when he refuses to take cognizance of the truth.

KEY TO APATHY

Every young writer serves two important apprenticeships: one to a master of his chosen craft, after whom he may frequently model his own work until he has achieved his own expression; another to persons whose business it is to judge and analyze, admonish and encourage as it is warranted.

One of the keys to the apathy with which creative effort at Carolina is beset is the virtual absence of formal literary criticism. The function of a magazine such as the Quarterly is to provide sound pre-publication criticism for embryonic writers; the Quarterly fails significantly in that it does not. As I stated in my article last Wednesday, the work in the current Quarterly displays editorial neglect.

RIFE ANARCHY

An excellent illustration of the seeming anarchy rife on the Quarterly editorial board is the appearance of Poetry Editor William Rivera's letter in the DTH yesterday, disclaiming responsibility for having selected a flagrantly inferior poem for publication.

I wish to pose this question to Mr. Dunn: who, besides Mr. Rivera, had the right to include this poem? Why did he have the right? Mr. Rivera is vested with the authority of selecting the best work in his genre; the integrity of his position has been abrogated, and he has been laid open to serious charges of editorial ineptitude by the intervention of someone else.

I am not trying, as has been suggested, to destroy the Quarterly or to discourage young writers by imposing on them standards which they cannot meet; my standards for a campus publication are simple: It must prove interesting and edifying to the moderately sophisticated college audience which exists here at Carolina. The fact that the Quarterly's circulation is diminishing is evidence that it does not meet these standards.

Quarterback Sutton Continues To Improve At New Post

CUFF NOTES

By BERNIE WEISS

Carolina's basketball campaign, brought to an abrupt halt by the unpredictable Lowell "Lefty" Davis Thursday night in Raleigh's Reynolds Coliseum, was unsuccessful from the point of wins and losses.

The team wound up with a 10-11 record, but to hear the UNC coaches talk, you would think they are satisfied with the team's showing.

"The record should have been 8-13," says fresh mentor Buck Freeman. "I think we did very well," says varsity coach Frank McGuire.

As reasons for these statements, they of course gave the class of competition against which Carolina was faced. McGuire says the Big Four teams, as they were this past season, were just too much for the under-manned UNC five.

So the cry of "Wait 'til next year" is going around now. McGuire can hardly hardly wait. Sitting with ants in his pants in his office yesterday and reflecting over the past three and a half months, he said next season would be the first real one for Carolina. "When one of our big men isn't playing well temporarily, we can put him on the bench for a while. There will be many good players fighting for that starting position and the competition will be such as to make the starters strive harder to keep their places."

So basketball fades from the Carolina sports scene for a few weeks. Spring cage drills open March 22 for one month.

★ ★ ★

Pity Frank Goodwin, the reserve who sat on the bench for a large part of the season and finally got into a game early Thursday night against the Deacons.

Goodwin was in the game less than five minutes before he got into a scrap under the basket with Davis. Accidently he came up with an inch gash over his right eye when Davis' ring caught him. Goodwin was forced to leave the game, never got back in, and found that four stitches were necessary to close the wound.

This was the second eye injury of the season. Earlier, Bob Young rolled out of the sack in the wee hours of the morning and banged his forehead on a bar-bell carelessly left on the floor near his bed.

★ ★ ★

Three factors spelled defeat for Carolina in the tournament, which goes into its final round tonight.

1. Carolina was able to make only 18 free throws to Wake Forest's 31.

2. The Deacon Davis, who had shown practically nothing against UNC in two other games this season, came through with 32 points and generally played an excellent game in all categories. Davis hit on 13 of 22 field goal tries and six of nine free throws.

3. Carolina's Lennie Rosenbluth fouled out early, and when he left, the UNC scoring punch went with him. He scored 29 points before leaving the game.

For those who are wondering about 'Bluth's setting a new school scoring record—he didn't make it. The mark of George Glamack (1948) still stands at 578. Rosenbluth's 29 against Wake Forest gave him a season's total of 536.

Ed's Passing Shows Polish In Grid Drills

Ken Keller, McMullen, Williams First Backs

By JACK MURPHY

The tremendous improvement of Eddie Sutton at the yet unfamiliar quarterback post is the big news on the spring football front.

On the first scrimmage of this week, the converted halfback continually fumbled, stumbled, and generally jumbled up the plays until the backfield looked like a Sunday school playing drop the handkerchief.

Since then the Morehead Scholar has developed almost overnight into a much more polished ball handler and is rapidly ganing confidence. His passing has also improved to double his potential. Sutton's greatest forte' is his ability to carry the ball.

WITH SUTTON in the present first team backfield are: Ken Keller and Larry McMullen at the halfbacks and rising sophomore Howard Williams at fullback. The line has Will Frye and Buddy Payne at ends, Captain Roland Perdue and Jack Maultsby at tackles, John Jones and Bill Koman at guards, and George Stavnitski at center.

Backfield coach Steve Belichik has been drilling the backs in vicious tackling sessions all week, possibly foreseeing the need of a strong defensive secondary in the wake of such threats as Oklahoma, Notre Dame, and Maryland, to name only a few of the national powers on the '55 schedule.

THE STEADY improvement of Sutton has added new hope to the picture as the gridders end their second week of spring practice which has featured a great upheaval of spirit in the daily hour long scrimmages.

Freshmen Are Favored In Tank Tourney Today

By BOB COLBERT

The first annual Freshman Invitational Swimming Championships will be held in Bowman-Gray indoor pool at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The meet is to be an annual affair, inviting freshmen from all schools in the southeast to participate. Thus far, entries from State, Duke, Clemsog and UNC have been received.

The Tar Heel frosh are expected to dominate the meet. However, they will be given competition in the breaststroke from Dick Fadgin and in the sprints from Verhey of Duke.

Fadgin, N. C. State's sensational freshman, is the National AAU indoor and outdoor champion in the standard breaststroke. He has recently been selected to represent the U. S. in the forthcoming Pan-American Games to be held in Mexico later this month. He will swim in three events. According to UNC Coach Ralph Casey, "He is a cinch to set a new freshman intercollegiate record."

The Tar Heels will be featuring Bill Roth in the 50-yard freestyle. Roth has come within less than a second of bettering the University freshman record. Along with Roth will be Walt Rose. Rose set three new freshman records in the first meet of the season.

Keen Competition Is Expected As Soccer Drills Open Monday

By RAY LINKER

Keen competition for positions will be in evidence Monday afternoon when soccer coach Marvin Allen opens a three-week spring drill session on Fetzer Field.

There will be more competition for team berths than there has been in several years, since there ar many returnees from last fall's varstiy and freshman teams capable of nailing down starting jobs.

All but five of 20 lettermen will return from last season's varsity squad which finished second in the conference with a 3-2-1 record and ended the season with an overall record of 3-4-1.

Calvin Lane, who has lettered for the past two years, will captain the squad. Lane's action was cut short last season when he broke a leg in a match against Duke, but Allen said he is capable of playing any position and will use him wherever necessary. Last year Lane alternated between the goalie spot and a fullback post.

GROVER BROWN, a fullback, and Pete Cothran, who occupied a forward line slot last year, are two other stalwarts who will be back for more duty.

Allen will also be counting heavily on several boys who sparked the last edition of the freshman team, including fullback John Harris and halfbacks Bill Blair as well as forward linemen Charles Covil and John Foster.

A University of Pennsylvania transfer, Joel Spivak, will be in top contention for the goalie position. He was an outstanding frosh goalie for the northern school year before last, but had to sit out last season with the Tar Heels because of the one-year residence requirement.

THE SQUAD will go through drills from 4 to 6 o'clock in the afternoons, concentrating on the fundamental aspects of the game and learning to work better as a team. Allen said he might call them out again for a week near the end of the school year to polish up a bit.

The fall schedule has not been completed, but the season will open with a match on October 11 against N. C. State. Another meeting with State, two with Duke, and one each with Washington and Lee, Virginia, Maryland, and Roanoke will fill out the schedule.

N.C. State-Duke Meet Tonight In ACC Finals

RALEIGH, March 4. (AP)—Ronnie Mayer, a 6-4 junior forward, poured 34 points through the nets, six in the overtime period, to lead Duke to a 90-77 victory over Virginia tonight in the semi-finals of the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball tournament.

Duke thus qualified as ACC representative in the NCAA Eastern playoff against Villanova in New York next Tuesday. North Carolina State, which meets Duke tomorrow night for the conference title, is ineligible for NCAA play this season. State advanced by whipping Wake Forest 85-70 with a 25-point blast in the last 10½ minutes.

North Carolina State, serving a one-year suspension from NCAA competition for violating the rule against trying out athletes, has beaten Duke twice in regular season meetings, by five and six points. State will compete in the National AAU tournament at Denver late this month.

Virginia, playing its second successive overtime tournament game after a 13-14 season's record, gave the second-seeded Blue Devils of Duke a grim battle tonight. Duke had run up over 100 points in taking two from the Cavaliers earlier in the year.

It was a basket by Mayer 75 seconds before the end of regulation that enabled Duke to tie the score at 74-all.

A Virginia basket that might have completed the major upset was nullified when the Cavalier bench called timeout with a minute left. When play resumed Virginia waited until eight seconds were left for one winning shot, but the try by Buzz Wilkinson, who scored 32 points, was wild and brought on overtime.

Duke's big running team poured 16 points through in the five-minute overtime to win going away as Virginia's bid collapsed under the pressure.

State's Mattson, UNC's Drake Out For Records In ACC Meet

N. C. State's Bob Mattson and North Carolina's Phil Drake will be out to break existing records in their respective 200-yard breaststroke and 200-yard butterfly events here next weekend in the Atlantic Coast Conference Swimming Championships.

Competition in the three-day affair will get under way Thursday night with the 1500-meter race. Only individual champions will be determined. Team champions were decided by regular season dual-meet competition.

Both Mattson and Drake have had phenomenal success thus far in their respective events and observers are looking for both to crack world records here this weekend.

Mattson already holds the American record for the 200-yard breast-stroke with a 2:25.7 finish. The best the State swimmer has been able to do against conference competition is 2:29.8, but the mark stands as a conference record. He will be shooting for the national intercollegiate record of 2:26.9 held by Georgia's Hal Stolz in his action Friday night.

DRAKE IS hoping to break the national intercollegiate, American and world records in the 200 butterfly. John Davies of Michigan holds all three marks with a time of 2:12.9.

Chuck Hartman May Be Answer At Second Base

By MARSHALL WALDMAN

Baseball Coaches Walter Rabb and Bunn Hearn, who have been scurrying around for the last two weeks searching for a replacement for injured second sacker Harry Lloyd, may have come up with the man to fill the bill.

Chuck Hartman, an outstanding performer at third base for last year's freshman squad, worked out yesterday at the keystone sack. Hartman played second base while in high school so the post is not unfamiliar.

Hartman presents a tough target for a pitcher because of his small size. He collected a good many walks with the freshmen and Coach Rabb hopes that he can do the same for the varsity. He is a left handed batter, which gives him the advantage of that extra step when running down the first base line.

Chuck's speed and size could give Coach Rabb the leadoff man that he is looking for. Hartman's move to second increases the number of candidates to three. Buddy Strause, of Charlotte, and Bill Brake, a transfer student from Campbell Junior College, have been working at second since trafing began.

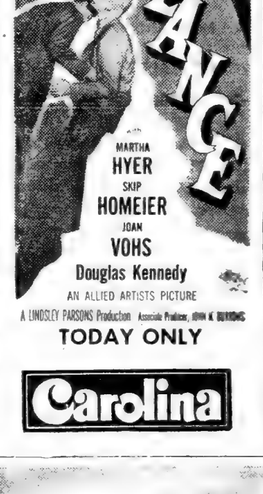
COACH RABB has just about resigned himself to the fact that Lloyd will not be available to open the season at second base. He will continue experimenting with Strause, Hartman and Brake and one of the three should get the nod on opening day.

Rabb said that he could not predict how the Tar Heels would fare this season. He did say, "The Tar Heels will have a good, aggressive ball club, but we'll have to wait and see what the other teams have before we'll know how we stand."

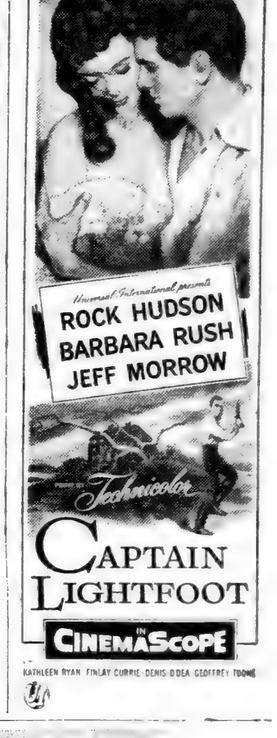
Robb sent each of his charges to the batting cage for some hitting practice yesterday. The field was still slow because of the recent rain, but today he hopes to get in a good long workout, which will start at 2 P.M. and wind up the third full week of practice.

Another sidelight of the championships will have North Carolina's 300-yard medley relay team shooting for its own national intercollegiate record of 3:45.9 set earlier this season against Michigan. Charlie Krepp, Drake and Dick Baker make up the relay team.

N. C. State and North Carolina, winner and runner-up respectively during the regular season, are expected to dominate the championships.



Finals In ACC Wrestling Meet



The first Atlantic Coast Conference wrestling tournament will move into its final round this afternoon at 3 o'clock in Woollen Gym.

The first four preliminary matches were held yesterday afternoon before a sparse gathering of 100 spectators, but the evening session saw a much larger crowd.

In the 130 and 147-lb. class events both Beryl Cohen (MD) and Lee Marston (VA) came through with easy victories as was expected. State's Don Tomlin, a top favorite in the 147-lb. class, scored the only fall of the afternoon by pinning King of Duke near the end of the second period. In a 157-class bout, Duke's Jerry Chadwick narrowly decisioned Dave Gladfelter (MD) 6-5 in a very close match.

Mason-Dixon Jubilee To Highlight Weekend

By SUSAN ANDES

Sleepy this morning? No doubt with the weekend parties having started as early as Thursday that there are many droopy eyed but happy, people dragging out to classes today.

The Theta Chis for one are having "big doings" going on. Last night they had an open house for guests attending the Mason Dixon Jubilee-composed of Theta Chi chapters from North Carolina and Virginia. Tonight President Clint Andrews and the rest of the brothers will go over to Durham for the formal dinner and dance at the Union Ballroom at Duke.

The TEPs had a stag beer party Thursday night and Phi Gam pledges also gave a party Thursday for new Chi O initiates.

While we're on the subject of sororities, recognition has been given to the following girls from their respective Greek letter groups. Chi O best-all-round pledge award went to Alice Bost of Hickory. Eddie Rogers has typified what all Pi Phi's strive to have—that is all As—so she was the recipient of a scholarship ring.

Sallie Cowles of Statesville was elected best Pi Phi pledge and thus honored at a recent initiation banquet held at the Ranch House.

Jane Cocke was voted best Tri Delta pledge; while Cary Caperton received the scholarship cup. The KDs have been in the process of observing white rose week and will culminate their activities tomorrow with the formal initiation ceremonies. Mrs. Louise Burns and Mrs. Kay Kyser entertained the new initiates this week with a desert party. The ADPis had an alumnae patroness tea early this week.

Phi Delts are in the midst of a partying weekend. Last night their pledges and dates, as well as the entire chapter had dinner at the house before moving on to the Schoolhouse for a more informal party.

At tonight's formal dance at the Chapel Hill Country Club the following peldge class officers and their dates will lead the figure processional: John Lewallen, Coral Gables, Fla., president, with Marshall Soyars, Chattanooga, Tenn. Gordon Darnell, Murphy, vice president with Robin Goode, Martinsville, Va. Bob Allison, Sylva, treasurer, with Nancy Franklin, Chattanooga, Tenn. Mark Cherry, Mt. Olive, secretary, with Kay Mitchell also of Mt. Olive. George Holt, Miami, Fla. social chairman; with Eve Hargrave, Lexington.

Others participating in the figure will be Pieter Hogaboon, Alexandria, Va.; P. W. West, Sanford; Bill Zickraf, Franklin; Galen Hobbs, Chapel Hill; Wendy Eaves, Washington, D. C.; Larry McMullen, Lumberton; John Medlen, Benson, and Baxter Culler, Martinsville, Va.

Seven North Carolina chapters of SPEs and one chapter from South Carolina are convening this weekend in the Chapel Hill area. Tonight the local chapters will be hosts at a dance at the State Union Building in Raleigh.

Sigma Nus said they were doing "nothing publishable" this weekend; and when the Dekes were called to find out their weekend activities the reply received from one of their members was "we don't do very much."

News for the pinning section include: Gerald Hudson, Sigma Chi from Spartanburg, S. C. to Elsa Pearlitz from Dallas, Texas. Lynn Mann, Pi Kap from Lillington to Pat Woodworth, a Meredith student.

The Lambda Chis inform us that several of their brothers have gone skiing in Vermont this weekend. Also from their house on Pickard Lane comes word that Bob Bell of Virginia Beach, Va. has married Sue Ringer, KD from West Hartford, Conn.

Election of officers has taken place in several of the houses this week with the following boys holding leadership positions. For the DUs, David Andrews, North Augusta, S. C., president; Gus Grant, Bethesda, Md., vice president; Bob Hice, Charlotte, secretary; and Jimmy Armstrong, High Point, treasurer.

Beta officers are Mike Boyette, Cincinnati, president; Charlie Froelich, High Point, vice president; Dick Noll, Boston, Mass., secretary; and Paul Monroe, Fayetteville, treasurer.

Sunday the events will come to a close with a "Bon Voyage" brunch on the house patio.

IT WAS THE SAME IN 1696

In 1696 one Robert Russell wrote a "Little Book for Children, describing who they are that are good children; and also who they are that are wicked children." We won't bother you with a description of the good child (we are both embarassed and bored by it), but here is Mr. Russell's description of the day of the bad child:

"Then John goes with a story to his Mother that Mary hit him in the face. Then Mary and Betty go with a story to their Mother that the Boys do nothing but tear them about, and will not let them alone. Then Tom goes with a story to his Mother, saying Mother, William flung me aground and hurt my arm. Then William goeth with a story to his Mother, saying, Mother, Tom hit me with his Batt. Then Tom crys out, But you lye; I did not touch you, you flung me aground first. But you lye: And you lye: And you lye: And you lye. And then their Mother is fain to come out with a good Cudgel, and set them all agreed. Then another time their Mother calls Will, to do something for her that she wanted to be done, and he not making haste to come to her, she then calls Tom, John or Richard, but they all give her the slip and run away to play ....."—Pleasures of Publishing wrote his letter to The Daily Tar Heel because "I would like to explain my position." According to Warren, his "views were not expressed correctly by your reporter."

"I figured that you were lazy because you weren't doing your job," said Warren's letter. "I may be wrong. I don't know whether you are lazy or not, so I will publicly retract that statement and say in its place that it is possible that your are lazy."

Warren in his letter said, "There has been a great deal of talk about The Daily Tar Heel's not covering all the campus news. In the case of the Phi Assembly this is true (Warren is speaker of the Phi). Every piece of news, except one that we have had in The Daily Tar Heel since I have been in a position to know about it, has been carried up to your offices and handed to you with the plea that you print it. On several occasions even these have been badly disarranged. Other organizations have had the same trouble, or so they say. Therefore, I say that you are not doing a good job. In the first place when news occurs on the campus, The Daily Tar Heel should go out and get it.

"If you don't have staff to do it, you should get staff, and if you don't get staff you are not doing a good job. You have at your fingertips the best possible means of getting a staff that anyone could possibly have—The daily Tar Heel—and if you can't get a large enough staff to cover all the news with that, then I just don't know what to think."

COLUMNIST KRAAR AND WRITER YODER
. . . will run jointly for Daily Tar Heel editorship

Two Of Paper's Staff To Seek Endorsement From Both UP & SP

Louis Kraar and Ed Yoder, Associate Editors of The Daily Tar Heel, will run for co-editorship of the newspaper in the March 29 elections.

The candidates said they would seek a double endorsement from both campus political parties.

"We can promise the campus this: a good newspaper, with wider and more extensive coverage; an interesting, stimulating editorial page, seeking to give fair treatment to all, searching out the issues which confront the students on this campus and attempting to comment meaningfully on them," said Yoder and Kraar in a joint statement yesterday.

Yoder, an English major from Mebane, jointed the editorial s[illegible] of The Daily Tar Heel as a freshman. For the past two years he has been associate editor, a columnist, book critic and editorial writer. He is a member of Phi Eta Sigma and Pi Delta Phi.

Kraar, from Charlotte, has served on The Daily Tar Heel since his freshman year as reporter, columnist, managing editor and associate editor. He represented the newspaper and UNC at the National Student Association Congress in Iowa last summer. Kraar has worked two summers on the Atlanta Constitution and served last summer on The News of Orange County and Alamance News. Last spring he won the Press Club award for the best column. Kraar a history major, is currently working on The Chapel Hill Weekly, and writing his Daily Tar Heel column, "On the Carolina Front."

In their statement yesterday the two candidates said, "While the news pages and letters-to-the editor column are designed to reflect student opinion, we do not believe that the editorial columns should necessarily mirror the prevailing opinions on campus. Constant agreement is dull. We will attempt to put out a newspaper which will stimulate opinion, challenge unjust prejudices and make students realize why they think as they do.

"We intend to revitalize the paper's staff by adding more members to it" said the candidates. "In this way we hope to give wider coverage and at the same time increase participation in the educational activity of putting out The Daily Tar Heel.

"As associate editors on the present staff, we feel that together we can give the campus the quality paper it deserves. This year's paper, under the editorship of Charles Kuralt, has made great strides. We affirm the broad points of editorial policy followed by this year's Daily Tar Heel. We hope to continue the progress made so far—and at a faster rate," said Kraar and Yoder.

"If The Daily Tar Heel is to continue growing, to keep its place as an important organ for the stimulation of student opinion, it must remain free from all outside control. It must remain unattached to campus political parties or any other group seeking o control the editorial policy of he paper.

"We pledge ourselves to keep The Daily Tar Heel free, alive, interesting, a paper of and for all he students," concluded the candidates.

Organist's Concert Is Tonight

Arthur Howes, American organist, will be heard tonight at 8 o'clock in Hill Hall in a program sponsored jointly by the music department and Graham Memorial.

His concert is the third in the music department's Tuesday Evening Series of the Spring semester.

Howes, who first appeared in concert at the age of 14, playing he great organ in the Wanamaker Store in Philadelphia, has pursued several fields of musci. After concertizing widely as an organist, he became interested in choral music, especially that of the medieval liturgy.

In another phase of his musicianship, he interested himself in the Sacred Cantatas of Bach. He has conducted performances of more than 30 of them in Philadelphia, Washington, Houston and Boston.

He founded the Bach Choir of Houston and has been conductor of the Cecilia Society and the Saint Cevilia Schola Cantorum in Boston. Recently he has become the conductor of a chamber orchestra. He is also director of the Organ Institute at Andover, Mass.

Student Party Names Manning Muntzing Candidate For President Of Student Body

McCurry's Likely To Be UP Choice

By LOUIS KRAAR

When the University Party meets tonight to pick a presidential candidate it is almost sure to nominate Ed McCurry.

It appeared yesterday that no UP presidential candidate would oppose the present attorney-general who has long been talked of as a presidential hopeful.

Jack Stevens, former UP chairman, is expected to get the nod for vice-president. However, Bev Webb and Bill Sanders have also been mentioned in political circles as possible nominees.

McCurry when called on the phone yesterday, said he had "no comment" regarding his candidacy. Asked if he'd accept the nomination if asked, McCurry said, 'Yes, I guess so."

A junior from Shelby, McCurry has served in all three branches of student government. Currently, he is serving as attorney-general to President Tom Creasy. He has served two terms in the student Legislature, and as a freshman he served on the Men's Council.

McCurry is a member of the Order of the Grail, served as Greek Week chairman last year, is head of the Dance Committee Court and vice-president of the Interfraternity Council.

Most observers declared Stevens as the most likely running mate for McCurry. Stevens is from Asheville.

Medical Art On Exhibit In Health Library

A collection of medical art by Rembrandt, Daumier, Hogarth, Toulouse-Lautrec and other masters is on exhibition in the Division of Health Affairs Library through March 11, it was announced here by Dr. W. R. Berryhill, dean of the School of Medicine, and Miss Myrl Ebert, health division librarian.

Entitled "Ars Medica," or the "Healing Arts," the collection is composed of 85 famous and rare pieces of graphic art depicting the practice of medicine over the centuries.

Owned by the Philadelphia Museum of Art, the exhibition is being presented by Smith, Kline and French Laboratories, under whose grant the collection was assembled.

"The scope of the show extends from medical illustrations designed for teaching purposes—such as those of Vesalius, Wechtlin and others—to portrayals and critiques of medical procedures of the past," Miss Ebert said "and is the first collection of its kind."

The exhibit can be seen in the Library of the Clinic Building of the N. C. Memorial Hospital on Sunday from 2 until 5 p.m., and from 8:30 a.m. to 11 p.m. Monday

Whitman's Book Shows Whitman, Says Stovall

"Leaves of Grass" is unlike other books in that it expresses completely the qualities of a single great personality—its author, Wah Whitman, Dr. Floyd Stovall, professor of English here, asserted in his humanities lecture last night.

Dr. Stovall, an authorty on Whitman, chose for his topic "Leaves of Grass: The Evolution of a Book," which is particularly timely, since this year marks the centennial of the publication of the first edition of Leaves of Grass. Dr. Stovall's lecture is one of the first of a series of commenmoration to Whitman's book to be held on the UNC campus. Other observations are planned throughout the country.

Touching on Whitman's early life, Dr. Stovall described him as "an ordinary boy with little known about him which gave promise of the poet." After writing numerous conventional verses in his youth, he began in 1884 to experiment with a free verse form which he later developed in Leaves of Grass, he explained.

"Many of Whitman's most characteristic ideas are to be found in this early verse—the concept of life as the union of matter and spirit, the universiality of mind, the acceptance of evil as well as good, the immeasurable power of love, the emphasis upon natural religion and the frank treatment of sex in literature . . . all of these any many other important ideas are to be found in his notebooks," Dr. Stovall said.

"For Whitman, Asia was the symbol of spirit, of infinity and the birthplace of religion, whereas Europe was the symbol of matter, of the finite, and the birthplace of science. America, he believed, would show the world the true relation of matter and spirit, finite and infinite, science and religion," he said.

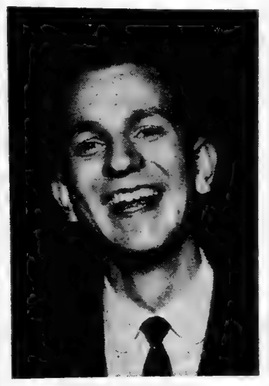
IDC Chief Picked Over Don Fowler

By NEIL BASS

The Student Party in a lengthy session last night named Manning Muntzing as its nominee for student body president. The balloting between Muntzing and Don Fowler, present treasurer of the student body, ended up with a 49-43 count.

The meeting was slated to cover nominations for two offices in the sophomore class and several other posts, but time ran out after prolonged discussions on the presidential contestants. The SPs did find time, however, to select Roland Perdue as their banner carrier in the Carolina Athletic Association presidential contest.

The candidate naming got off to a fast start at 8:15 when Lewis Brumfield assumed the rostrum to place Fowler's name in the running. Brumfield, president of Cobb Dormitory, called Fowler's qualifications as "admirable and respected." He also pointed out that his candidate had "served long and conscientiously in the Legislature."



Next Sam Wells went to the front of the room and put Muntzing's name into the contest. Wells enumerated the Interdormitory Council president's good points by saying that he was "capable" and "the only man that the students will elect."

Party Chairman Don Geiger then invited the two candidates to speak their piece. It was Muntzing who presented his goals and platform to the party first. He promised that his campaign would be "clean" and his administration for the advancement of the "entire student body."

After a stream of orators flooded the rostrum for about two and a half hours, question was called and the tense moment was at hand.

A secret ballot necessitated each voter to bring their ballot to the counters one at a time. The crowd, about 100, huddled around the counters and added out loud as the names were read and tabulated. The final 10 ballots turned the tide, at 10:40 p.m., by a narrow margin to Muntzing.

The winning candidate vowed that the SP "will win because I know we will all work together."

Crazy Weekend: Pink Horse, Fake Meteor

Well, the pink horse now has the measles. "Some hoodlum painted great big red spots on the horse" according to its owner, Miss Scarlett Scott.

Miss Scott, owner of a doll shop, got the wooden merry-go-round horse to advertise her business. She has just moved to Chapel Hill from Richmond, Va., where she had her shop in the old section of the city.

"It broke my heart to see my horse desecrated," said Miss Scott yesterday. She went away Saturday and said that when she returned she was perfectly astonished to see that such a thing could happen in Chapel Hill.

Plans for repainting the pink horse are underway.

Besides a spotted pink horse, a fake meteor added to weekend excitement.

About 11 p.m. last Saturday, flames were seen in the vicinity of the flagpole in the center of the campus. People were running around yelling, "A meteorite just landed!" according to an observer. Flames like gasoline fire were leaping high into the sky.

Yesterday there was a crowd continually milling around the scene. But it didn't fool too many people—the sides of the hole are slick as if dug by a shovel and the sod which was dug up can be seen nearby.

Miss Connor Gets Office

Miss Ruth M. Connor has assumed the position of Personnel Advisor to Women at the University of North Carolina, Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael announced yesterday.

Miss Connor fills a vacancy left by Miss Irma Eichorn, who is now completing her doctor's degree at the University of Michigan.

As Personnel Advisor in the Dean of Women's Office Miss Connor will work with the Women's Residence Council, the graduate counselors and the Woman's Handbook Committee. She will undertake the interviewing and counseling program among women students.

Miss Connor is a resident of Middle Village, New York. She received the A.B. degree from Hunter College, the M.S. degree from the Pennsylvania State University, and the Ph.D. degree in Sociology from the University of North Carolina.

Forms For Draft Test Must Be In Tonight

Application must be made on or before midnight tonight to take he Selective Service College Qualification Test to be given April 21.

The test will be given here by the Univrsity Testing Service, said Colonel F. Carlyle Shepard, UNC veteran's adviser. Applications ar secured from a local Selective Service board. After applying, the student will receive a card through mail telling place, date and hour of the test.

Any person registered in college is eligible to take the test upon application if he has never had it before. The Selective Service System College Qualification Test can not be taken more than once.

A test score standing of 70 for undergraduates is necessary for deferment of the individual by his draft board. For graduate students a score of 80 is necessary.

"Practically no students are inducted during the regular school year, but are postponed until the end of the school year," Colonel Shepard said. "No student who meets academic requirements for deferment has ever been called," he added, "and no freshman is ever called."

The Selective Service System System College Qualification Test lasts for about three and one half hours, and is of the general information, objective type, according to Colonel Shepard.

DEAN NORVAL LUXON TELLS INVESTIGATORS:

Students Lucky With DTH

By EBBA FREUND

"You don't realize how fortunate you are with this paper," said Dean Norvel N. Luxon of the School of Journalism in speaking about The Daily Tar Heel at yesterday's investigative meeting.

"Neill and (Editor Charles) Kuralt are two of the best student editors I have seen in my 34 years of experience. Of course, the news coverage could be improved, but this is a problem even the New York Times faces," he continued.

Thursday night's legislature meeting resulted in the appointment of a committee to investigate the "quality and circulation problems of The Daily Tar Heel." At the meeting charges were brought that the newspaper was not serving the students and that something should be done about it. The particular problems referred to at that meeting were the quality of the news coverage and the circulation.

The main points covered at the Committee meeting yesterday were accuracy of news coverage, circulation problems and adequacy of news coverage. The committee will hold open meetings today and Wednesday from 2 to 4 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounge to hear complaints and suggestions about The Daily Tar Heel. On Friday the committee will meet to consider all problems raised at these open meetings.

Charles Hyatt brought up the point of circulation. Pulling a stack of newspapers from under the desk, he asked, "Is The Daily Tar Heel being read or are there too many papers printed?"

Kuralt answered that the policy is and always has been, one paper for every student. "This year the newspaper has had fewer circulation problems than ever before," he added.

Bob Elder then asked what system The Daily Tar Heel used to cover news on campus, and if this system was adequate. Kuralt replied "the newspaper tried to print as much news as limitations of staff and space allow."

Elder then asked about a column for announcement of club meetings, departmental functions and guest speakers. Kuralt said the What Goes on Here column tries to do that. But, he continued, this is the first column which is cut at the printing shop whenever there is too much news. He went on to say that The Daily Tar Heel almost started a column of this sort, but the small size type was not available.

Jack Hutson then asked why there was so much space devoted to large pictures such as the one of Gene Autry, run last week. Kuralt explained that there were some slow news days and pictures like the one of Autry were used as fillers.

Representing The Daily Tar Heel were Editor Charles Kuralt, Managing Editor Fred Powledge and Associate Editor Ed Yoder.

Chapel Hill's 'Meteor' & Hole & Scorched Earth

Rock above, found in a scorched hole just east of the University's flagpole, was thought by some investigators to be object from outer space. One student, standing in front of Memorial Hall, saw a flash of fire and came upon the rock. But further investigation showed a neat pile of dirt—obviously from the hole—nearby. Boys will be boys. The Star-Spangled Curtain

You can't buy The New York Times in Moscow. You can't subscribe to American newspapers or magazines in the Soviet Union, and you can't purchase them on newsstands. The Iron Curtain keeps Western periodicals of all types out of the hands of Russian citizens.

Well, here's some news for you. You can't subscribe to Pravda in the United States, either. Almost all printed matter from Russia —even scholarly publications—is now being help up by the Post Office Department as "political propaganda."

This erection of barriers by our government in a new area of the marketplace of ideas come as rather startling truth. Attention was called to it yesterday by Dr. Louis Hacker of Columbia University.

As Dr. Hacker put it:

> This administrative action should be a matter of concern to Americans, since it is apparent that we in America shall know very little of what is taking place in the Soviet Union and other Iron Curtain countries unless we have full access to the publications originating in these lands.

This is another in our government's lengthening string of little moral compromises that unheralded; are weaving themselves into a curtain around our own shores.

You can't blast Soviet denial of visas to American students; the United States has refused to allow Russian students to repay the visit American students made last year to Russia.

And you can't talk too blandly about Russian restrictions on free circulation of Western newspapers: they're no tighter than our own restrictions on Russian publications.

A Jeffersonian maxim needs application: "Reason and free inquiry are the only effectual agents against terror. Who is to dogmatize opinions for our citizens? If an idea be false in its facts disprove them; if false in its reasoning refute it. But, for God's sake, let us freely hear both sides."

A Young Man's Fancy Turns To Meteors

Spring, which is supposed to arrive at 4:36 a.m. March 21, cannot be reckoned on the Vernal Equinox in Chapel Hill.

Spring is already here. It came to town while you weren't looking over the weekend, and we do not make this measurement by flowering quince and cherry and japonica alone.

For last weekend, a Miss Scarlett Scott of North Franklin Street got a statuesque pink horse outside her home re-painted red; and on the south campus, smack in front of South Building, a huge "meteor" landed with a blinding flash and rooted itself into the ground.

These are surer harbingers of the season than daffodils in full bloom. Regrettable as the painting of Miss Scott's pink horse may be, it is a sign: Spring has come to the campus. The first panty raid is no more than a fortnight away.

10,000 Formosans Could Be Right

We are sure it is all right with Chiang Kai-Shek for American public opinion to continue confusing our obligation to the Formosan people with our "obligation" to him.

But a fundamental distinction needs to be made—and is made in a stimulating article in the latest Reporter. If the people of Formosa were allowed to submit their destiny to a UN supervised plebiscite, it seems doubtful on the basis of history that they would ratify the nationalists' control.

That is not to say that the Communists from the mainland would be voted in, either. It is to say, however; that the Formosans, as The Reporter phrases it, "are no more Chinese than the Mexicans are Spanish."

The Formosans fought off the Nationalist invaders in 1947, and in the same year Nationalist machine-gunners under the command of Chiang massacred 10,000 Formosans.

That it seems to us, should be added, at least in parenthesis, to any discussion of our moral obligation to Chiang Kai-Shek and his "Formosan government."

Monday Notes Taken In A Hot Meeting

——— Louis Kraar

MONDAY NIGHT notes on the Student Party's presidential nominations:

It's 7:15, and the meeting is going to start in 15 minutes. Don Fowler and Manning Muntzing are going to fight it out in all three Roland Parker lounges for student body presidential nominee.

David Reid, who wanted to run for vice-president, says he can't run for the post because the Student Council says he doesn't have the average. Bob Young will run if Fowler gets the presidency, he says. Then the meeting starts.

DON GEIGER, chairman of the party, stands before the packed meeting just like he did last year when he was running for President. Only then he was the only candidate.

Manning Muntzing, wearing flannels and looking confident, enters and says to me that he talked to SP mogul Joel Fleishman, but still Muntzing says he doesn't know where Fleishman stands.

I move about the room, which gets hotter by the minute and an informant says that Fleishman, who reputedly controls many votes in the party, sent for Muntzing earlier in the day.

It's 7:58, and David Reid gives the report on the student Legislature. Everybody's shuffling. Noise, and no one listening.

"NOMINATIONS ARE now open for president of the student body," Geiger says. And then the noise stops.

Lewis Brumfield ambles up to the front of the room and drawls out a ten-minute nomination talk for Don Fowler.

After informing the body that Fowler is "well-known, well-liked, and well-respected," Brumfield sits down.

SAM WELLS gets up and talks for Muntzing, who—according to Wells—is "the best possible nominee . . . the only man the students will elect."

Muntzing gets up, pauses long time, and talks about the need for a "new spirit in our policies." He promises "to do all in my power to see that student government doesn't take its freedoms for granted."

Larry McElroy talks about Fowler, Charlie Hyatt talks about Fowler being "a North Carolina boy," and the girl next to me scribbles on my pad, "Gross provincialism."

At 8:55 they bring in a public address system and open the doors to let some of the air out.

BILL BAUM gets up and talks for Fowler. "He's damn good," says someone near me. Then it's 9:05, and the Muntzing folks are smiling.

Gordon Forester gets up and says that "we've seen student government rot and decay under three presidents who were not qualified to be President . . . because they didn't have the interests of the student body at heart."

David Reid talks about how the University Party is "shaking in its boots" about the possibilty of Don Fowler running. And Fowler and Muntzing seem to be shaking in their boots about the possibility that they might not get it.

THEY TALK AND talk. It's hot as hell. We drink cokes.

It's 10:25 and they're voting finally. Coeds are tense over closing hours.

The votes are cast, one by one. Fleishman gets up and leads a song to relieve the tension.

"Manning Muntzing," someone shouts. Pat McBane grabs a boy near her and hugs him. All scream and yell and sing.

Manning, looking better and smiling, comes in. They all pump his hand. "I haven't anything else to say," he says. And this seems okay.

Six votes made the difference, and someone near me mutters something about Fleishman controlling five or six votes.

Two Mountain Poets

Ed Yoder

At a table in Danziger's, near the wall from which Tom Wolfe's eyes still look down on the Chapel Hill scene, a mountain poet sat down the other afternoon to explain his affection for the man he called "the ghostly haunter of himself."

The poet out of the mountains (Skyland, N. C., nine miles south of Wolfe's own Asheville) was Ernest Schoeler, a short, German-born man with a twinkle in his eye. He has written the poem, "To Tom," printed below. And now the Thomas Wolfe Memorial Association has accepted Mr. Schoeler's tribute to hang under the portrait of Wolfe at Asheville.

Mr. Schoeler, who talks with equal ease about the Argonauts and the Labyrinth at Minos, about philosophy and people, left his home in Germany to go to sea when he was 12 years old. A trail of what he describes as "rough-necking it" led him through intervals as sailor, policeman, lumberjack, and railroad builder.

He has sailed the Atlantic, laid rails, and cut trees in the Sierras of California. Then, several years ago, he came to Western North Carolina—to Tom Wolfe country—and to the curiosity about life that has become the source of his poetry.

"I'd like to see the color of man's eyes who'd tell me he understands Tom Wolfe's work entirely" he said; "I don't think there's an intellect alive who can tell me everything about his work!"

Wolfe fascinates Mr. Schoeler because he was "the eternal question mark." The only thing worthwhile, the poet says, is the quest—"the search man follows . . . an unending treadway, moving up and sliding back again." He thinks Wolfe possessed that acute awareness of the search for the ultimate. Man, philosophized Mr. Schoeler, as he leaned forward intensely, is like the unfortunate King Sisyphus, eternally doomed to roll a gigantic stone up a hill in Hades, only to have it grow heavier and heavier and finally roll back down.

All of this fermented in Mr. Schoeler's mind until his poem, "To Tom," leapt spontaneously from his brow, requiring almost no word changes.

But where did a poet whose native tongue was German get his command of English? While Mr. Schoeler was lumberjacking in California, an English professor from the state university at Berkeley asked him the same question. The answer is simple: Mr. Schoeler thanks an odd combination of reading and what he calls "good luck" for his powers of diction. He has not studied English formally, says he wouldn't know a participle "if I met one walking on the street;" but he depends on a sensitive ear, where an alarm rings instantly when he hears or reads faulty English.

The gift of the ear for English might have been instantaneous to judge by a story Mr. Schoeler tells: "I had a dream once," he said, " and the figures in the dream started speaking English to me. So I spoke English right back!"

Now, Mr. Schoeler, who tried to take notes on Wolfe's novels and "found myself copying the whole blooming book," seeks a wider audience for his lays and some apt criticism.

When I left him sitting in Danziger's, he planned to motor to Raleigh for an audience with Richard Walser, State English professor and crack Wolfe scholar—and, the writer hopes, just the critic Mr. Schoeler is seeking.

TO TOM

You were the ghostly haunter of yourself, forever haunted
By the lost, the part remembered, part forgotten memory
That if but found and all remembered or but all forgotten
Would then have eased your tortured soul and made you free.
But you became the curious stranger in life's noisy inn,
And sailed the dark, forbidden sea that until then had never seen a sail.
The argonauts of yore, the ancient, the titanic heroes were your kin.
In this, your epic search for golden fleece and holy grail
You've lit the torch, you proved that darkness must and can be overcome.
So now your work, your search will never cease
For all will carry on that really understand, know this, Oh Tom,
And rest you now, for once, in peace.

Those Olympian Clouds

On the front page of this morning's Daily Tar Heel there is the story of the session of the student Legislature which decided to investigate The Daily Tar Heel. The campus newspaper was referred to in the meting as the "Second 'Daily Worker'" and it was suggested that it be brought down "from the Olympian clouds of pseudo-intellectualism."

In the criticism of the Daily Tar Heel the question has often been raised as to whether the paper expresses the opinion of the majority of the students on campus. Maybe it does and maybe it does not. Personally, I think the ideal for any campus newspaper is to rise higher than the typical student and thereby stimulate him to a type of serious thinking to which he has hitherto been unaccustomed. Even if the student does not agree with the editor's views, he will have been benefited if the expression of those views has led him to a more critical examination of his own position.

In my opinion, The Daily Tar Heel has made an admirable effort in working toward this goal. From Rolfe Neill's crusade last year against big time football to Charles Kuralt's plea this year for a Christian and democratic attitude toward the race problem, the Tar Heel's editors and other writers have demonstrated an ability to think maturely that the Universiy should be proud of.

The University of North Carolina will see a sad day when its newspaper ceases to be the free organ of expression of its editors and fears to express certain views because of the opposition that they arouse in certain quarters.

To Legislator McElroy with his claims about pseudo-intellectualism in the clouds, I would say, "Why don't we as students try to get up there ourselves?"

Spillane Reads Easier

Editor:

I have taken 40 courses at this University and 29 of these have been with departments outside of the School of Business. Of the 11 business courses I have taken, nine were required. Thus, I would have been allowed to take 77½% of my total courses outside of the business school. Approximately 47½% of my courses dealt with liberal arts. From the above figures, I fail to discern overspecialization of business majors.

I enjoyed my courses in history, English, and the like. But I enjoy business courses even more. Frankly, I am more interested in a balance sheet of a corporation than the bed sheets of Henry VIII.

Chaucer intrigued me but Spillane is easier reading and besides, he spells his words correctly.

Bill Shakespeare wrote a nice story about a couple of 14-year olds who expounded their undying love. But the undying love died before the youngsters became old enough to make the love story really interesting.

I really enjoyed all of these courses but I'll be damned if I am going to major in the area. Other people are better equipped to take advantage of such courses.

To give you an example of my knowledge of philosophy, I shall now quote the autobiography of Socrates. "Socrates was born in Athens. Socrates went around spreading advice. Socrates was poisoned."

Correspondent Wanted

I have long desired to correspond with an American student, and so have approached you in my quest. No doubt my method of approach is somewhat irregular, but I considered a direct appeal to a student body would facilitate my search, and at the same time afford those students an opportunity, who, like myself are desirous of forming a Penfriendship.

I have set out below my particular interests which I trust, some students may find mutual. I am an Arts student, 22 years of age, male, and extremely interested in modern languages, science, education, photography, music, and sport, especially tennis. Thanking you in anticipation.

Vote On Segregation?

Editor:

Re: Mr. Grimes' letter and the replies to it which The Daily Tar Heel has printed; much has been said about the "opinion of the majority of the student body" concerning segregation. How can anyone know what the majority believes?

If you really want to obtain some concrete facts, may I suggest you use some of your "pseudo-Yankee" influence and have the following question (or one of like meaning) appear on the ballots in the forthcoming elections:

"Would you be in favor of Negroes mingling with you in matters other than strictly business, e.g. your educational, social or religious functions?" (A question of this nature would be better than one such as "Is segregation wrong?" to which 99 percent would probably vote yes.)

A question of this type, besides giving a basis for argument to one side or the other, might just cause somebody besides freshmen and politicians to turn out and vote.

Moonlight On The Levee: Showboat Was A Success

Ted Rosenthal

There are three plays most often mentioned as contenders for the mythical title of "Best American Musical-Comedy," Oklahoma, Gershwin's Porgy and Bess — which current fashion terms a "folk opera," and Showboat.

All have plots that are native to this country, springing out of her soil lush and urgent as young cornstalks reaching for the Kansas sky. Their music is also of the land—off the plains, rivers, hills—and of the people. The sounds of Americans working and feeling, wishing and sometimes crying, written down and molded into a new idiom.

OL' MAN RIVER

In Showboat is contained more than one of the most commercially successful scores ever written, and more than the show-within-a-show motif flows through the script. There is the unifying lyric force of the Mississippi—Mark Twain's river—a spirit which has long animated the American mind. And it is said that Jerome Kern was fascinated by the River, when he composed the music.

So as the Playmakers' production appeared on the boards of Memorial Hall, more was involved than the performance alone; it was a nostalgic page of our national creative heritage, revived for the first time by a college drama group.

A MOVING MOSAIC

To present Showboat requires the binding together of many and different pieces —spoken parts, sung parts, dances, orchestra—into a moving mosaic. To approach the maximum within the play, there must be a wide range of very specialized talent.

It is no insult to the Playmakers, or director Kai Jurgensen, to say that the performance lacked a certain polish—call it tightness, nor that the desired mixture of voice and acting ability fell a little short in some roles.

For example, the orchestral elements, conducted by Wilton Mason, were good; but in some numbers, most noticeably David Small's rendition of "Old Man River," the accompaniment seemed too inflexible, so that it became a question of the singer's fighting not only the acoustics of the building, but his own musical support. In the same selection, the orchestra muffled the voice, during the difficult low-register passages.

Martha Fouse, starring as Magnolia, gave a fine performance both vocally and dramatically, and Marte Boyle was a vivacious joy as the comedienne Ellie. The choral work of the men's and women's groups also was particularly effective.

DREAM-REAL PATTERN

Yet it is impossible, without carping, to draw a line between the good and the very good of the performance, for in spite of its rougher places it was sound throughout. John Shearin played Gaylord Ravenal; Suzanne Elliot, Julie; Sydney Z. Litwack, Captain Andy; Patricia Seitz, Queenie; Charles Jeffers, Frank; David Small, Joe; James Hager, Steve; and Lillian Prince, Mrs. Captain Andy.

SHOWBOAT'S 'MAGNILIA'
Martha Fouse gave a 'fine performance'.

Supervising the technical aspects, which were all well-handled, were Irene Smart for costumes, James Riley for settings, Harry Coble for choreography, and Harvey Whetstone for lighting.

And also present, invisible but in mind, was the sweat of the dockhands, the waters lapping up against the levees, and the moonlight spilling on the moving soul of the river—the Mississippi or any river.

For whatever the specific names chosen to describe its lines and gestures, Showboat is a glimpse of the dream-real pattern of the nation, a song pouring from the throat of living American art.

CUFF NOTES

By BERNIE WEISS

North Carolina State's domination of Atlantic Coast basketball, which was supposed to come to an end this past season, continues.

No matter what you might say about the Wolfpack, or how badly you slam the club, the coach, the Coliseum or the fans, you must admit that the school turns out championship teams. State has come up with either a Southern Conference or an ACC championship for six of the past seven years.

The 'Pack proved its calibre this year, winning 12 and losing two conference games, and winning three consecutive games in the tournament, last weekend to emerge with the crown once more.

There just isn't any team to compete with State in the ACC. Duke comes close, but the Blue Devils make mistakes. State doesn't make mistakes. Carolina, Wake Forest, and Maryland can stand up with State for a while, but neither of these three fine teams has the bench strength which State possesses.

No team in the conference plays the inter-conference and independent team competition that team to gain national recognition and national ranking with regularity.

No team plays as well under pressure as State does, and no team plays with regularity in front of the crowd State does, either. A partisan gang of 12,000 or so fanatics can make or break a good club in a tight game. However, in reference to crowds, it won't be long before State's domination of the money situation in the conference will be coming to an end. Soon State will be playing in Maryland's new basketball palace at College Park or Charlotte's 11,000-capacity field house.

Of course, State will probably continue to be host to the Dixie Classic each December, but Terrapin officials are already bidding for the 1957 ACC tournament.

It's my bet that Charlotte will get the tourney, possibly next season, because of its neutral and centrally-located site. There's no problem of revenue in either place because of their size, only slightly smaller than Raleigh's Coliseum.

And this brings to bear upon the basketball situation at Carolina. To keep harping on this subject is monotonous, but a remedy must be found. The Tar Heels, building for conference championships, will be accustomed to playing in front of their 5,000 home fans. When they play away in front of 12000 rabid, leather-lunged goofs, as they must now do in Raleigh, who knows?

Frank McGuire expects to schedule 12 home games next season, one with each conference foe, Alabama, L. S. U. and three other teams he's trying to get here. How he expects to get top teams to come to Chapel Hill without a big, fat green guarantee goes unanswered.

UNC must find some method of building a field house for basketball. Dixie is going crazy over the sport and fans are going to want to some where to see the top teams play just as they now flock to Raleigh to see La Salle and Villanova and George Washington, etc. The University bursar is going to want the money, too, to pay these teams.

The suggestion of a few weeks back (moving the court to fit length-wise in the gym, with seats the length of the main floor on both sides and behind the basket) is the immediate solution. A few years from now, with the resulting increased income from this new set-up, Carolina might get wise and build something like Maryland has just done.

Then this school will jump onto the nation's sports pages, not relying upon its football team of a few years back.

Hugh Cowan Wins Crown In Mat Meet

Maryland And Virginia Dominate ACC Tourney

By AL KORSCHUN

Carolina's Hugh Cowan gave a sparse gathering of partisan wrestling fans plenty to cheer for as he upset Duke's Roth in a 137 lb. finals thriller and in doing so became the University's first ACC wrestling champion Saturday afternoon in Woollen Gymnasium.

Maryland and Virginia dominated the tournament, as was expected, by winning five of the eight individual championships. Maryland took first in the 137, 147 and heavyweight classes, and Virginia copped championships in the 123 and 167 lb. class events. It was an "Old Liner" day all around as the Terps' Danny Little (147) won the tournament's Most Outstandng Wrestler award, and the Maryland team won the conference title on the basis of its regular season record of five victories and no defeats against ACC competition.

The host Tar Heels, who posted a poor 1-9 won and lost record for the regular season, mildly surprised everyone by winning one championship, being runnerup to two other titles, and by scoring one third and three fourth places. Both Gregory cousins, Arthur and Miles, competing in their final matches at UNC, wrestled two of the closest and hardest fought matches of the tournament at the 157 and 177 lb. classes, respectively, before losing one point decisions in the finals.

The "Cinderella Boy" of the tournament was Wake Forest's Stanley who was runnerup in the 167 lb. class. Stanley, who has only had one year of varsity wrestling experience, upset Maryland's Al Hair in the semifinals, and gave topseeded "Butch" Schwab of Virginia a very tough fight before being pinned in the third period of their finals match.

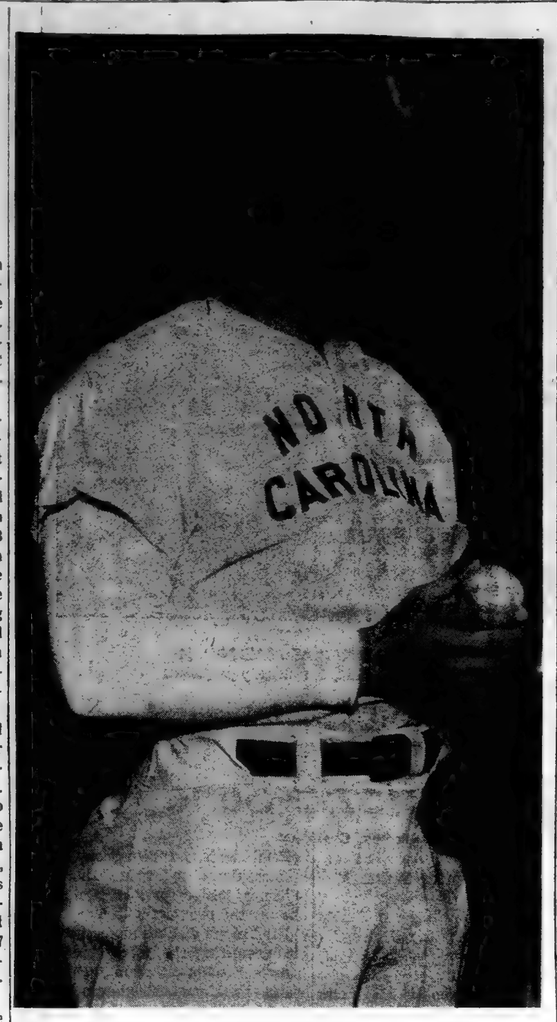
COMPETITION in the 147 lb. class was by far the keenest as decisions in each of the bouts were only by a point or two. Little of Maryland, the tournament's best wrestler, very markedly proved his ability by beating both Don Tomlin of State and Virginia's Lee Marston, each of whom captained his respective team during the past season and had outstanding records.

The championship heavyweight match, one of the predicted tournament highlights, materialized when Mike Sandusky (Md.) and Henry Jordan (Va.) battled to a 5-5 draw and the victory was awarded to Sandusky on a referee's decision.

The Conference wrestling champions:

123 lb.—Colin Steele (Va.)
130 lb.—Hugh Cowan (UNC)
137 lb.—Roony Carroll (Md.)
147 lb.—Danny Little (Md.)
157 lb.—Jerry Chadwick (D.)
167 lb.—Butch Schwab (Va.)
177 lb.—Al Henry (NCS)
Heavyweight — Mike Sandusky (Md.)

FroshSwimmers Outstanding In Tank Tourney



The Carolina freshmen swam to eight out of ten first places to dominate the First Annual Freshman Invitational Swimming Championships held here last Saturday.

Although no team scores were kept, the Tar Heels dominated the meet. The only two events that the Tar Heels didn't win were taken by N. C. States' sensational freshman, Dick Fadgen. Fadgen set a new Intercollegiate Freshman and American record in the 200-yard orthodox breaststroke with a time of 2:22.4. Fadgen is representing the United States in the Pan-American games to be held in Mexico later this month. He also nosed out Tar Heel Bill Zickgraff in the 150-yard individual medley.

Carolina's firsts were taken by Jake Smith in the 220-freestyle, Bill Roth in the 50, Ned Meekins in the low broad diving, Walt Rose in the 100-freestyle, Parker Ward in the 200-backstroke and Zickgraff in the 440-freestyle. The winning medley relay team was composed of Ward, Bob Lynch and Rose, while the freestyle relay team was Roth, Rose, Smith and Kelly Maness.

This meet ended the regular season for the frosh, however, some of the swimmers will compete in the AAU meet to be held next month.

Blue Devils Open Bid For NCAA Title Tonight

NEW YORK, March 7 (AP)—Terrific Tom Gola and Hot Rod Hundley, two of the season's most colorful basketball players, will face each other for the first time tomorrow night when LaSalle opens the defense of its national collegiate basketball championship against West Virginia.

This game tops a first round tripleheader in Madison Square Garden which also brings together Williams, the New England champion, and Canisius, and Duke, Atlantic Coast Conference runnerup and Villanova.

The three winners will advance to the NCAA regional tournament at Philadelphia next Friday and Saturday. The fourth team there will be the still-to-be-decded champion of the Ivy League.

The clash between LaSalle's Gola and West Virginia's Hundley brings together two of the season's most prolific scorers and most publicized players.

Gola, playing his fourth and final season for the LaSalle Explorers, is the kind of player coaches dream about. Hundley sometimes gives them nightmares.

IN ADDITION to scoring more than 2,000 points in four years, 635 this season, Gola is a superb defensive player, a great rebounder and a fine playmaker. One of the few compliants about him is that he doesn't shoot often enough. He was chosen most valuable player in last year's NCAA tournament, scoring 114 points as LaSalle whipped Fordham, North Carolina State, Navy; Penn State and Bradley to win the championship.

Sophomore Hundley, who is liable to shoot with his back to the goal, chin himself on the basket or try to hook shot on a free throw, was serious enough to score 610 points in his first varsity season with West Virginia. In leading the Mountaineers to victory in the Southern Conference tournament last week, he racked up 84 points missing Dick Groat's tournament record by one.

Williams, a newcomer to postseason basketball, has a good record and good height to send against Canisius, led by Johnny McCarthy, who was voted the most valuable player to appear in Buffalo Municipal auditorium this season.

DUKE, WHICH got the NCAA nomination because the Atlantic Coast Conference Champions, North Carolina State, is ineligible, has a veteran team paced by Ronnie Mayer, who has averaged 22 points this season. The Blue Devils have hit more than 100 points in five of their 27 games. Villanova's record this season has been spotty, but the Wildcats beat North Carolina State twice.

GymnastsBegin Final Training For Tournament

The UNC gymnasts are in their final wek of training for the forthcoming Southern Intercollegiate Gymnastics Tournament to be held at Georgia Tech March 12.

According to Coach Bill Meade, two teams will dominate the tournament, Carolina and Florida State, with Florida State having a slight edge. One or two Olympic gymnasts will be on the Florida team and in addition they have the trampolin event sewed up, as it is not used by UNC in its normal schedule of events.

Last year UNC gave Florida State some keen competition for first place honors and this year, with an improved team, it should be an even closer affair possibly being decided by the last event, the all-around.

The Carolina gymnasts have showed steady improvement during the season, winning their last four meets with little difficulty. They will enter the tournament with a 5-2 record.

ACC Tank Championships Open Here Thursday Eve

By BOB COLBERT

The ACC swimming championships will get under way at Bowman Gray indoor pool at 8:15 Thursday night with the swimming of the 1500 meter freestyle. The meet will continue through Saturday night.

The 1500 is expected to be one of the closer events of the meet. It will put N. C. State's Fred Ruppenthal against Tar Heel Phil Drake.

Friday morning the preliminaries of the Low Board Diving will be held. At 3:00 that afternoon trials for the 50 free, 200 back, and 220 free will be run off. Friday night at 8:30 will see the finals in these events, along with the 400 freestyle relay finals.

Saturday morning will find the high board diving preliminaries being run off, while the afternoon will feature trials in the 100 back, 200 butterfly, 100 free, 440 free and 150 individual medley. The finals for these events will be run off at 8:30 Saturday night.

THE BEST RACES according to UNC coach Ralph Casey will be the 1500 and the 150 individual medley. The individual medley will be swum by Charlie Krepp of Carolina and N. C. State's Bob Mattson and present ACC record-holder Dave McIntyre. All three of these swimmers have held the record during the past season.

Two other events which will bear watching are the 200 yard orthodox and butterfly. In the orhodox State's Bob Mattson will be trying to better the collegiate mark of 2:26.9 se tby Hal Stolz of Georgia. Mattson's teammate, Dick Fadgen, set a new American record for this event last Saturday, going the distance in 2.22.4.

In the butterfly, Drake will be trying to set new American, intercollegiate and world records. The record is presently 2:12.9 and Coach Casey says that he has the ability to do better.

All 12 ACC records are held by either N. C. State or Tar Heel swimmers. No team scores will be kept of the meet since the champion was decided on the basis of dual meet records. N. C. State was first while the Tar Heels were runners-up.

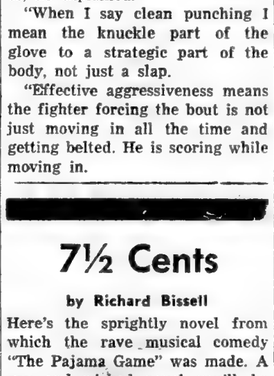
Fans Should Referee A Fight, Says Arbiter

NEW YORK, March 7. (AP)—Boxing Referee Mark Conn, who has worked 1,000 fights from Greenpoint to Calcutta, including four world championships, thinks it would be a good thing if every television arm-chair expert could be the third man in the ring for one night . . . to learn how much he doesn't see from his living room on fight night.

"When you're in the ring you really see everything. You see what no one else sees," Conn said. "I think every fight fan ought to get in there one night. Boy, there is nothing like. Respect for referees would improve immediately.

Conn, who holds two degrees in physical education from City College of New York, makes a plea for understanding of the referee's job and his judgment by putting down four basic rules for scoring fights. He adds pitfalls the viewer should beware of.



"The four basics for judging a fight are: 1. Clean, effective punching; 2. Effective aggressiveness; 3. Defense; 4. Ring generalship. The New York State Athletic Commission, Mark's boss on fight nights, established these rules, he explained.

"When I say clean punching I mean the knuckle part of the glove to a strategic part of the body, not just a slap.

"Effective aggressiveness means the fighter forcing the bout is not just moving in all the time and getting belted. He is scoring while moving in.

McCurry UP Presidential Nominee

Yoder, Kraar Get UP Endorsement

ED McCURRY
. . . UP nomination

By NEIL BASS

The University Party in five minutes ushered Ed McCurry in as its nominee for student body president last night by acclamation.

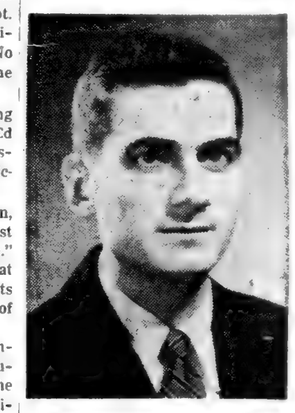
"Well, this is it," said Rollie Tillman at 8:56. He then placed McCurry's name in the boiling presidential candidacy pot. Tillman enumerated his candidate's qualifications by saying "No one else can fit the need" that the executive task imposes

At 9:01 Rueben Leonard, acting chairman of the party, said "Ed McCurry is nominated." No dissent voice was raised against McCurry.

In accenting the nomination, McCurry said, "This is the greatest honor and privilege of my life." He proposed a campaign that would not be based on his efforts alone, "but the determination of the entire party."

At 9:03 Jim Martin was nominated for treasurer of the student body. Two minutes later he was also installed as the UP candidate by acclamation.

Other selections of the night were again by unanimous consent. Jerry Martin, Hugh Uptown and Tom Davis were chosen to run for seats in dormitory men's district III; Lloyd Lohr and Pete Slager in dormitory men's IV, and Ned Meekins in dorm men's I .



Leonard announced the selection of Jim Exum as campaign coordinator in earlier action of the session. A campaign committee was also named.

In a legislative report given by Jack Stevens, floor leader, he brought out the fact that the UP was behind the Student Party in number of bills passed. Stevens explained this by saying that "While the SP has passed 26 bills to our eight, most of the stuff that they have passed has been like junk mail."

He went on to say that the "SP measures sounded good but were impossible to carry through."

McCurry, in accepting the unopposed victory, said, "I pledge myself to a positive, clean, vigorous campaign.

"I promise to the student body an active, representative and efficient administration if elected."

PETER KALOGRIDIS
. . . first Fulbright winner

Kalogridis Winner Of Fulbright

A UNC Law School senior is the first winner of a prized Fulbright Scholarship to be notified here this year.

Dr. Sturgis E. Leavitt, Kenan Professor of Spanish and chairman of the local Fulbright Committee, announced yesterday that Peter George Kalogridis, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Kalogridis of Winter Haven, Fla., who will graduate in June with a J.D. degree, has won a scholarship. Kalogridis will use his scholarship at the University of London at King's College. He has applied for study in English common law, legal theory and napoleonic code.

Kalogridis has been advised to go directly to London, England, in September where he will undergo a short program of orientation prior to beginning his year of study.

The Florida student has distinguished himself both here and at Davidson College, from which he graduated in 1952 with a B.S. in English constitutional history.

While at Carolina he has been a Morehead Scholar, has twice served as vice-president of his class and as a member of the Law School Legislature, and is presently editor-in-chief of the North Carolina Law Review, a quarterly publication of the School of Law.

At Davidson he was initiated into Phi Beta Kappa, Beta Theta Pi social fraternity and Omicron Delta Kappa, honorary leadership fraternity.

He is also listed in Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities.

Mundy Tries For Endorsement: Fails

By ED MYERS

The University Party last night endorsed Louis Kraar and Ed Yoder for co-editors of the Daily Tar Heel by a margin of 28 to 17.

Dave Munday was the sole opposition to Kraar and Yoder for the UP nomination.

Mundy said he was "alienated to the thoughts of running until this incorporation struck a discordent note within me."

Mundy said that he would not go on "wild crusades" as he said The Daily Tar Heel has done in the past.

"I shall leave out editorials which accomplish nothing but simply serve to stir up ill-feeling," he said.

Stanley Shaw, who nominated Mundy, said in speaking of the present editorials, "Most of the views are opposite to the rest of the state and are not the views of UNC."

Ed Yoder was the first of the UP-sponsored co-editors nominees to speak. "The first requirement of a newspaper should be covering interests which touch as many segments of the student body as possible. We also promise you more student writing; this is not to say, however, that the editorial page should be devoted entirely to student writing, but some national columns would be eliminated, with the wishes of the students."

Kraar promised "there will be a close liaison between the editorial and news staffs." He also disclosed that he and Yoder planned to visit 500 students to find out what they want and listen to their suggestions.

Ministers Against ABC Here

"We believe that this proposal is detrimental to the larger interests of our community," said a statement adopted last week by the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Ministers' Association concerning the possible opening of ABC stores in town.

The statement said the group which is interested in the opening of ABC stores here "reaches the conclusion that we open the way for ABC stores on the basis of its concern for one community problem (more revenue for the schools) rather than on basis of a consideration of the total community situation. We are concerned also about the problem of insufficient funds for our schools, but we do not think that this is the best answer," said the Ministers' statement.

In considering the opening of ABC stores in a University community such as Chapel Hill, the statement said, "Drinking is a problem in student life, just as it is with other groups. It might be argued as to whether or not the presence of ABC stores would aggravate the problem; however, both logic and experience seem to suggest that 'easy availability' brings an increase in the sales of a product."

The ministers' statement said, "We are . . . considering a particular community problem and the moral issue concerned in it."
